Drinking Age Up

Photograph by Kevin Coughlin

The passage of The Safe Roads Act, effective October 1, 1983, will affect most freshmen at UNC-W for the 1983-84 school year. This act repeals the present laws on drunk driving in North Carolina and replaces them with the single offense of "driving while impaired--D.W.I."

More importantly, it raises the age to buy or possess beer and unfortified wine to 19. After Oct. 1, any freshman who is 18 will no longer be permitted to consume alcohol.

Before the passage of The Safe Roads Act, students of legal age were permitted to drink on campus in the residence hall rooms and at special functions where alcohol was allowed by permit.

The forty day overlap from August 22 to October 1 when legal age will be 18 presents a special problem to Dean of Students Gary Juhan. "What we have done in the past is to teach people to drink responsibly," he explained.

"We looked at all different kinds of options of what we could do. One was not to have alcohol anywhere on campus at all. Another was to continue our present policy and just raise the drinking age to 19. Another was to allow alcohol only at designated functions or in the Union. And then there was a combination of any of these." Dean Juhan finally decided on the following policy

Alcohol will be permitted in the residence hall rooms, but students must be of legal age. "This is really crucial," commented Dean Juhan, "because from Aug. 22 to Oct. 1 the legal age will be 18. At the stroke of midnight, you lose that privilege."

UNCW Joins Peace March

Dan Headrick

Journalism Contributor

Shortly after midnight Friday, August 26 around 170 people, including nearly 20 UNCW students and faculty, departed in chartered buses from Wilmington City Hall to the 1983 Twentieth Anniversary of the Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. March on Washington.

The four buses from Wilmington joined the tide of cars and buses from all over the U.S. that converged on the nation's capital August 27 as nearly 250,000 people inundated D.C.

Saturday's marchers rekindled the spirit of the 1963 civil rights demonstration by voicing the issues of the 1980's.

Calling for jobs, peace and freedom, speakers warned against the nation's crumbling infrastructure and public education, demanding a halt to the administration's militaristic foreign policy, and revitalized the 1963 cry for equal justice and social freedom for the nation's expanding minorities.

The personal convictions that drew hundreds of thousands to demonstrate for civil rights in 1963 had coalesced in twenty years creating a mosaic of various grassroots political associations.

Labor unions and organized unemployed workers, the Gray Panthers and anti-nuclear groups, minority groups of an international scope and handicapped rallied beneath a blazing sun in front of the Washington Monument on the mall and marched through D.C. to the Lincoln Memorial in a unified "coalition of conscience" demanding changes in the U.S. government policies.

The 1983 March on Washington, though drawing about the same numbers as the 1963 march, represented an expanded body of political and social movements on an international scale.

The bus loads also are indicative of local grassroots organizations present in Wilmington and on the UNCW campus.

The Wilmington group responsible for organizing local participation and the trip to Washington was headed by UNCW assistant professor of health, Aisha Rush-Gilliam, president of the Wilmington chapter of the New Coalition of Conscience.

Student organizations at UNCW were instrumental in organizing for last weekend's March.

Helms Discusses Drugs

"If people aren't concerned about it (drug smuggling), then take drugs off the books, so I don't have to die for it."

This eye-opening statement was made by a New Hanover County deputy sheriff appearing as a witness at a hearing of the Subcommittee on Western Hemisphere Affairs, chaired by Senator Jesse Helms (R-N.C.). Helms brought the subcommittee to Wilmington to discuss "Drug Interdiction in the Western Hemisphere: Local Impact of the Border Interdiction Effort." The hearing was held in the University Union August 22.

Helms decreed the effect the drug smuggling trade has on people, especially the young. "I've known it was terrible all along," he said, "but the enormity of the situation has astonished me. Maybe it (drug smuggling) should be a capital crime," he added.

Helms' subcommittee has also held hearings on this subject in Elizabeth City, N.C. and Miami, Fla. According to Helms, the increase in the amount of drugs--marijuana,

Seeking Peace And Stillness From Within

So here we go again! Another performance of our juggling act of university activities and responsibilities has begun. Only one week into the semester and we are already behind! Course requirements, social life, family ties, old friends and new roommates—all vie for time and energy (bet my list of things to do is longer than yours!). There is just a lot going on, a lot to do. We are so busy.

Business has become a way of life for many of us, even a status symbol. Sometimes we only feel worthwhile if we are continually active and preoccupied. We convince ourselves there are so many necessary and urgent things to be done.

After one task is completed, there are others always waiting in the wings, needing our immediate attention. So to slow down, to rest, to turn inward to our center often seems out of the question, a lack of commitment, a sign of weakness.

Welch Receives Award

Dr. Betty Jo Welch is the recipient of UNCW's Teaching Excellence Award for 1983. A professor of speech communications in the Creative Arts Department, Dr. Welch is the first woman to receive this honor.

"I was speechless when I heard that I had won the award," said Dr. Welch. Awarded to the faculty member who has made the most outstanding contribution to UNCW, the Teaching Excellence distinction includes not only classroom performance, but also exemplary behavior.

Dr. Welch came to UNCW in 1970, when her husband Allan was transferred to Wilmington by DuPont. Prior to becoming UNCW's first fulltime speech communications instructor, Dr. Welch had taught ballet in Nashville, Tennessee, for eight years and had earned a PhD from Vanderbilt University.

"As an undergraduate at Middle Tennessee State University, I faced many of the same situations that students face today," says Dr. Welch. "I learned many valuable things. I learned never to cut classes. A student who cuts classes ends up burning the midnight oil and usually has to borrow notes to catch up. Unfortunately, borrowed notes may not be accurate."

Learning to cope with peer pressure can also become a problem if a student does not know how to deal with it, says Dr. Welch. "Students should respond to pressure from their peers by first understanding what that pressure is and by thinking for themselves. This is the advice I have given my three children."

A Speech Communications degree from UNCW is an excellent credential for any student wanting to go on to graduate school, Dr. Welch feels. And "the whole field of communications is exploding with new opportunities in telecommunications, public relations, radio and television," she says.

One of Dr. Welch's proudest achievements was chairing the committee which designed the UNCW Speech Communications degree in 1979. "I have actually taught about seventy-five percent of the speech courses currently listed in the school catalog," she laughs.

"My first speech communications students were just as bright as my students today," says Dr. Welch.

"However, the student today has more options. And unfortunately, the number of superior students entering the teaching profession has declined drastically in the past few years." In 1981, when Dr. Welch addressed 600 student council leaders, she asked how many were planning to become teachers when they graduated from college. "Only five raised their hands," Dr. Welch says regretfully.

Dr. Welch served as Chairman of the UNCW Faculty two years in a row, in 1973-74 and 1974-75. She chairs the board of directors of the Wilmington Civic Ballet and holds memberships in eleven professional societies. Besides these professional activities, she is closely involved with her two daughters, Lisa and Laura, who are students at Vanderbilt Law School and at UNC-Chapel Hill. Her son Neil is in the fifth grade in Wilmington.

Quite the contrary; the increase of stress related physical and emotional illness gives evidence to my belief that there is an element of violence inherent in our business. The words of Charles de Foucauld gathered under the title "The Violence of Activism and Overwork" speak well to this conviction. "The rush and pressure of work can do us violence. Those carried away by too many conflicting concerns can succumb to violence. Those who surrender to too many demands can succumb to violence. Those who help everyone and everything without taking sometime for solitude can succumb to violence. The frenzy of the activist neutralizes our work at times because it destroys our inner capacity for peace. The frenzy of the activist can destroy the fruitfulness of work as it kills the root of inner wisdom which makes work fruitful."

Others do not know how to go about it. I can only witness that freedom from the frenzy of activism lies in a very special kind of stillness available to us all. It is a stillness worth searching for, worth learning about. It is found in our deepest SELF the Stillpoint that I find there, at the center of my turning world, is named God. However you name it I have found no better way to overcome the violence inherent in our business.

The title of this column is "Stillpoint." I believe that we want the most out of our life here at the university or anywhere, we will do well for ourselves to seek the stillpoint that lies at the center of our very being. We would do less violence to ourselves if we would learn to still our minds and bodies and spirits and seek that vantage point deep within us, we might be better able to make decisions about all those things and activities that claim our time and energy. The task of learning to be more centered, to be able to discover our own stillpoint is not an easy one. Many fear self-awareness and self-discovery.

You have an "inner capacity for peace". Before the semester gets out of control, before this day gets out of control, I hope you will seek the peace and stillness within.

The Seahawk is the student newspaper of The University of North Carolina at Wilmington, and is published every week. Editorial opinions reflect the views of the Editorial Board and are written by the Editor unless otherwise signed. Editorials do not necessarily reflect the views of individual staff members or of the University and its officials.

Seahawk Recruits Staff

Anyone interested in writing and creative design is invited to join The Seahawk staff. Meet and talk to celebrities like Mel Blanc, Charlie Daniels, Bob Hope, Mike Cross, and many more by working with The Seahawk.

Enthusiastic and energetic people are required to fill the many staff positions opening in the fall on the university newspaper. In addition to general jobs involving writing and production there are several editorial positions available.

Writers are needed to gather campus news. The sources for news, features and sports are inexhaustible. Sources include academic departments, administrative divisions, faculty, staff, and students and over sixty clubs and organizations.

The news, features and sports editors are responsible for assigning stories and layout their sections. Good writing skills are necessary for these areas. Each editor is also responsible for his or her own writing staff.

The advertising manager sells and designs the majority of the ads in the newspaper. Some ads are sent to the paper camera ready. Each advertiser signs a contract, designs his or her ad and it is the responsibility of the ad manager to complete the ad and place it on the appropriate page. Transportation is essential for contacting advertisers.

Experience working on a newspaper is not required. At the beginning of the fall semester several workshops will be conducted to give everyone interested a chance to learn more about the paper.

If you would like to work on The Seahawk, as a photographer, then please contact the head photographer, Marvin Coughlin at 791-6474 or at The Seahawk office.

For further information, please contact the editor, LaVera Parker Jeffreys, or the managing editor, Bill Estep, at 791-4330, extension 2229. You may drop by The Seahawk office in the Student Union, room 205E to discuss positions on the staff.

Above: Rev. Jesse Jackson stopped at UNCW's Trask Coliseum in May urging those in attendance to register to vote and "use the power of the ballot." The event, complete with temporary voter registration tables, failed to draw the 6,000 to 8,000 people expected by Wilmington police. The crowd was estimated at about 1,500.

Below: Prior to Jackson's address Nathan Ross Freeman put on a one-man show called 'Rage.' The dramatization was intended to express a young black man's anger toward society and show the rationale behind his revolutionary spirit. Freeman wore a self-destructive 'bomb' around his waist to add to the effect.

Left and Below: The student union courtyard was a stage this summer for The Porch, a play by former UNCW English instructor Anne Russell. Dr. Russell is now teaching for Duke University. The play revolves around a family's problems revealed as they talk on their porch one warm summer evening. The characters are drawn from people Dr. Russell knew as she was growing up in Wilmington. Starring in the play are J.J. Davis, Pat Benson, Ed Danilowicz (left), Les Patternotte and June Monroy (below). The Porch was directed by Marjorie Megivern.

They Had A Dream

Like the 1963 March, thousands gathered to celebrate, salute, step forward and look backward. Heat greeted the participants of the 1983 March on Washington as they trickled and eventually poured into the Washington D.C. streets starting early Saturday morning. They came from far and wide to express their views, ideals and demands. It was a hazy day intermixed with "thank you's" and "excuse me's". Everyone felt the anticipation and excitement of such a gathering.

Yet this crowd differs from 1963. This crowd feels less urgent and more peaceful. The concerns are there, however the pressures are not. The issues seem not to be as crucial as in 1963. Still the people come.

Standing in front of the Lincoln Memorial, one steps in awe of what is happening. Within minutes, the reflecting pool area is infiltrated with bodies, posters, banners, causes, chants. The hum of the civil rights anthem, "We Shall Overcome" echoes in the background as Capitolist America vamps us in the guise of vendors shouting, "Posters, T-Shirts, Buttons," and dollar signs flash in their eyes and explode from their pockets; still in the background one hears, "we shall overcome." The irony hits you like a brick and you immediately wonder and doubt all sincerity.

Thousands of factions are represented: Equal Rights, Nuclear Freeze, Civil Rights, Middle of the road leftists, conservatives, churches, Labor, U.S. out of El Salvador, Migrant workers, Gay Rights, Social Security; not everybody supports these factions.

Jesse Jackson arrives, the crowd roars. Inspired, moved, confused, tense, the crowd applauds, yet without wholeheartedness. Not everyone supports every issue.

Reagan is crucified today. Voting is the key answer, he must not win in 1984...we must be sure. Benjamin Hooks tells us Reagan must go.

Leaving, weary and warm you worry. Worried because the divisions are so deep and so wide. Worried because those who want equal rights don't necessarily want Civil Rights or those that want Nuclear Freeze care little about Gay Rights. Worried because the White House shows no sympathy for any of these groups and cares little that thousands turned out to defend their beliefs...worried because the dream has been ignored by the holders of power and by the holders of the dream.

Leslie Hossfeld, a senior majoring in history, who founded the UNCW Student Women's Organization, worked in conjunction with the New Coalition of Conscience to organize local and student support.

UNCW's Black Student Union president, Ricky Houston, who attended Saturday's March along with Clayton Lanier, vice-president of the student NAACP at UNCW, viewed the 1983 March on Washington as an educational trip and related the march to the needs of UNCW students.

"After 1963 people saw that it really makes a difference, it really works," said Houston.

Both Houston and Lanier discussed issues at UNCW their organizations plan to address. Each felt that students interested in seeing change could best realize them through participation with the more than sixty organizations on campus.

Says Houston, "If we seriously want it changed...we can get what we want."

Dear Chancellor Wagoner:

The North Carolina Dairy Industry experiences a tremendous financial burden each year resulting from the theft and misappropriation of milk cases. The cost to the North Carolina Dairy Industry and ultimately to you and the general public has been estimated to be in excess of one million dollars per year. Most students probably do not realize that these cases are private property and that their unauthorized use is a violation of North Carolina law. To help us with this problem and to prevent further unauthorized use of milk cases, we would deeply appreciate it if you could do the following:

1. Please furnish the North Carolina Dairy Products Association, P.O. Box 10506, Raleigh, NC 27605, 919/833-2850, with the name of a person from your institution with whom the Association can work to recover missing cases and prevent future misappropriation.

2. Notify students via bulletin boards and campus publications, etc., that milk cases are private property and should not be used for any purpose other than milk distribution.

Your cooperation in helping us to solve this problem will be deeply appreciated.

Sincerely,

The present alcohol permit policy will be continued. The only places where alcoholic functions will be permitted are in the University Union and designated areas of the residence halls.

Dean Juhan also stressed, "At any function where alcohol is involved, ID's will be checked." He also warned, "We will be enforcing the regulation particularly within our residence halls by campus police and also by the residence hall staff. abets another to attempt to purchase or purchases an alcoholic beverage.

An underage person attempts to purchase, purchases, or possesses alcoholic beverages by using or attempting to use a fraudulent driver's license or other ID, or by lending his driver's license or any other ID for that purpose.

Also negligent sell of beer, wine, or liquor to an underage person may subject the seller to civil liability if the minor then consumes the beverage and as a result of consuming that beverage has an accident while impaired. A seller may hold a person's ID for a reasonable amount of time to check its validity if the seller tells the person why it is being held. "We want the students to drink responsibly if they decide to drink," Dean Juhan stated, "and we also want students to realize the liability questions."

The Student Handbook is a resource for further questions about the alcohol policy. "It's going to be interesting to see how it goes," Dean Juhan chuckled.

Another aspect of The Safe Roads Act dealing with the purchase of alcohol states that "If a provisional licensee (16 or 17) is convicted of DWI, or refuses to submit to chemical analysis, or is caught driving with any amount of alcohol or drugs (excluding prescriptions taken in a lawful amount), his license will be revoked until he is 18, or for 45 days, whichever is longer."

Soccer Opens Against Virginia

UNCW opens its 1983 soccer season Thursday (Sept. 1) in Charlottesville, Va., against the highly regarded Virginia Cavaliers.

Kickoff time for this first-ever meeting between the two schools is 7:30 p.m. on the Scott Stadium artificial turf.

"We're looking forward to the challenge of playing a team like Virginia," UNCW coach Calvin Lane says. "This is one of the earliest opening dates that we have ever had, and we do have a number of young players who will see action."

Lane enters his 13th season at UNCW with eight starters returning from the 1982 team that posted an 8-6-2 mark—the ninth straight winning record for the Seahawks.

Midfielder Mike Lawrence (Rockville, MD) and sweeper Greg Marinich (Colombia, MD), two hard-working seniors, lead the returnees, along with last year's freshman standout, midfielder Marcus Martin (Raleigh, NC). Martin led the '82 club in scoring with only six goals, so generating more offense is a priority for this year's team.

"One of our objectives is to be more offensive-minded," Lane notes, "but the caliber of the teams that we played last year and are playing this season do not give up many cheap goals. Virginia, for example, allowed only 12 goals in 20 games last season.

"I think we can be a good soccer team with a potent attack. Some of our new players should give us a lift in that area."

The top newcomer is freshman midfielder Matt Smith, of Columbia, MD, a high school All-American from Oakland Mills High School. Another promising prospect is Pat Brown, of Raleigh, who led Sanderson High School to the North Carolina state championship a year ago.

Virginia, which was ranked as high as third in the nation last year, has 10 of 11 starters back from its 16-2-2 squad. The Cavs tied national runner-up Duke University, while losing only to Clemson and George Mason in the NCAA playoffs.

"Virginia obviously has a talented, experienced team," Lane says, "and playing on an artificial surface concerns me, too. But we hope to work out there before the game and plan representing ourselves very well."

UNCW opens its home schedule here on September 9-10 in the fourth annual Port City Classic. The Seahawks will meet Baptist in the opening round, with Campbell and UNC-Charlotte also taking part.

Rugby Team Plays International Match

International rugby comes to UNCW at 5 p.m. Sunday, September 4 when the Cape Fear Rugby Club hosts the University of Bristol, England. Bristol is one of the top college rugby schools, having won the British championships on five occasions. Local club officials hope the display of first class rugby will entice some campus recruits.

"UNCW students have always comprised a fair part of our membership," says Cape Fear coach Ron Rockett, who is a former captain of North Carolina's all-star team. "Eventually, we'd like to reach the point where the school actually has its own team." Currently, Cape Fear plays most ACC schools. Carolina is one of the club's home matches October 30th.

Rugby is the ancestor of American football and Rockett compares the game to a cross between football and soccer. "A rugby ball is shaped like a fat football, he says, and the object is the same; carry the ball across the other team's goal line. Rugby differs from football in that forward passes and blocking are illegal (which removes 90% of the contact found in our American game) and the ball may be kicked at any time.

A rugby match lasts 80 minutes; two 40 minute halves with a five minute intermission. Substitutions are allowed only for injuries, so it is a pretty demanding game. "The fitness requirements are far greater than traditional American sports," Rockett says.

Four UNCW students should see action against Bristol. Eduardo Alcala and Scott Walton will be fighting in the trenches with the forwards while Dave Hodge and Mark Dreyfors will be in the back line. Alcala, a native Argentine, is the most experienced of the four, having played since he was 12 in both his native country and Zimbabwe. Eduardo was chosen to the Easter U.S. under 23 squad last Spring.

Hodge, Dreyfors and Qalton all started playing last year. Dreyfors and Walton played for North Carolina but Rockett feels Hodge will be a representative level soon. "He was a high school All-American swimmer, broke three hours in his first marathon effort last Spring and has won a couple of triathlons. All three of these boys had never seen a rugby ball a year ago and they are rapidly developing into excellent players. We just hope a dozen or so like them will want to join us after the Bristol match."

A 1983 UNCW graduate, Mike Dufresne, was a trialist for the U.S. eagles in 1981, the first player from North Carolina to be so honored. The Eagles toured Australia this past summer, winning four of seven matches.

Wachovia Comes To Union

A campus Wachovia Teller II automated teller machine has been installed on the main floor of the University Student Center. The machine began operating August 19.

With Teller II, Wachovia customers can withdraw up to $200 a day, make deposits and credit payments, transfer money and get account information 24 hours a day, seven days a week.

"Wachovia put Teller II on the UNC-W campus to allow students and faculty greater ease and convenience and access to their accounts," said William H. Joyner Jr., Wachovia's office executive in Wilmington. "Teller II is perfect for the types of transactions students perform most often."

Olson Signs Contracts

Stephanie Loftus
News Editor

Dr. Gary A. Olson, Director of the Center for Writing, signed contracts with Random House for major, upper-level textbooks at an informal meeting on May 3rd at the Fish Market.

The National English Editor of Random House, Mr. Steven Pensinger, presented the contracts The Process of Business Writing, dealing with business communication, and The Process of Technical Writing, covering the area of technical communications. Random House signed the texts only after intense bidding between Random House and two other major publishers, Bobbs Merrill and Prentice Hall.

Both books, aimed at junior and senior colleges and universities, are radical departures from all others in their fields. "These books will bring new research from psychology and communications up to date in business and technology," explained Olson.

Expecting each book to sell over 60,000 copies per year, Random House officials have set the price for each book between $25 and $30.

Dr. Olson will co-author the texts with Dr. James DeGeorge and Dr. Richard Ray.

Orchestra Tunes Up

The UNCW Community Orchestra today announced the program for its thirteenth season, which will feature five concerts with the first to be held Oct. 11, 1983, concluding April 17, 1984. All concerts will be held in Kenan Auditorium on the campus of The University of North Carolina at Wilmington.

The Orchestra also announced the initiation of its membership drive to be conducted Aug. 15-26. Tickets for all five of the concerts are available for $16 for adults, $8 for students except UNCW students who may attend free of charge. Individual concerts are $4 for adults and $2 for students.

Tickets are on sale between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m. at the University Union Information Center at UNCW, phone 791-4330 ext 2846 or 2841, and between 8:30 a.m. and 5 p.m. at the Arts Council Box Office at the corner of Second and Orange Streets, phone 763-ARTS.

Dr. Joe Hickman, assistant professor of music at UNCW, is conductor and musical director of the orchestra.

Brauer Tours Australia

Dr. Ralph Brauer, director of the Institute for Marine Biomedical Research at UNCW, through invitation, is currently touring Australia presenting three papers.

His first presentation, entitled "Hydrostatic Pressure Effects, Sensory Perception of Temperature/Pressure Relationships, and Deep Diving by Aquatic Organisms" was before the 29th Congress of the International Union of Physiological Scientists on August 21 at Port Stevens.

On August 25, Brauer began presented a paper, "Comparative Physiology of Hydrostatic Pressure on Central Nervous System" in Sydney.

Brisbane, Australia will be Brauer's final Australian stop where he will present "Thermodynamics of Temperature/Pressure Interaction in Relation to Temperature/Pressure Preference Behavior" between September 4-10.

Before returning to Wilmington on September 20, Dr. Brauer will tour the Marine Science Technology Centers at Tokyo and Yokosuka fulfilling his invitation as a visiting scientist.

Record Review

"Winding paths thru tables and glass"...our friend Neil Young has had his share of ups and downs "rolling to the bottom. His most successful records express the most intimate, darkest secrets about himself, always with some great guitar work. Since the tremendous commercial and artistic triumphs of the Rust LP's, Neil's recorded output has run away from the personal and his past consistent brilliance.

The Trans Album, perhaps the most unusual of this epileptic schizophrenic's career, was interesting because Neil actually disguised his cracked voice behind a vocodor and layered his music with synthesizers; the commercial mode of the day. The result was distant but surprisingly with repeated listenings this album was fun too.

On Everybody's Rockin' Neil Young continues to explore his unique vision of what's happening today by jumping into the rockabilly sound. Everybody's Rockin' features a paired down fifties rockabilly rhythm better suited for an old sawdust barn than a slickly waxed dance floor the Stray Cats might play on. The songs are too simple with a nod to early R&B.

'Bright Lights Big City' fits better into the new musical approach of thumping piano mainly because because...well, er...it was written back then for one.

'Cry, Cry, Cry' is the best song of the album because it finally gives us some guitar. Neil still shows flashes of his quirky sense of humor when he sounds like he's lampooning his own backdrop with a Boo Hoo Hoo refrain. The old classic 'Mystery Train' and Everybody's Rockin' close the LP on a strong note with some great understated vocals behind a rollicking backbeat.

Many of you folks would consider this album a tired joke that somehow got away from a gimp-legged dinosaur. Unfortunately, I think most of highlights could have been locked into an 8-minute medley. Neil! Get back to your soul, bring on Crazy Horse and don't forget the guitar. Two and a half stars.

Wachovia Donates $100,000 To Business

Stephanie Loftus
News Editor

On September 2, Dr. William H. Wagoner, chancellor of The University of North Carolina at Wilmington, announced a gift of $100,000 from Wachovia Bank and Trust Company to the Cameron School of Business Administration at UNCW.

Wachovia Senior Vice President William H. Joyner, Jr. presented the gift which brings the total amount committed in endowments to $800,000.

Two years ago the School of Business began an endowment fund-raising drive to eventually raise $3 million. In January, the Cameron family donated a half-million dollars. Since then, UNCW has received $100,000 each from United Carolina Bank, North Carolina National Bank, and now, Wachovia Bank and Trust Co. "We're trying to get a million dollars before the end of the year, and once we get past that, try to get the three million," stated Dr. Norman R. Kaylor, dean of the business school. "We've done better, I think, than what really expected to do, but we still have a long way to go."

"We're really pleased about Wachovia because all three of these banks that have done this have offices in Wilmington and are very active and help us in a lot of ways. We place some of our graduates in those offices," commented Dean Kaylor.

The Wachovia Fund for Excellence will most likely be used to recruit outstanding new faculty in specialties not currently offered at UNCW and for faculty research.

The Cameron School of Business Administration accounts for approximately 40 percent of the graduate enrollment at UNCW, and has 30 faculty members.

UNCW On The Air?

Jay Barnes
Journalism Contributor

The effort to develop a radio station on the UNCW campus refuses to roll over and die. In fact, there have been considerable signs of life during the summer interlude.

During the early part of August, Dr. George Bair, Special Assistant to the Chancellor for Special Projects, called a meeting to brainstorm a course of action to develop what he termed "a media center" to be located in the predesignated spaces of the University Union. Bill Young, a media specialist from UNC-Chapel Hill, attended the meeting and offered his assistance to the project.

Others who attended the meeting included: Walt DeVries, a local media consultant; Scott Bluebond, an instructor in the Communications Division of the Creative Arts Department; and Jay Barnes, student representative for radio development since Ray Yates' graduation over the summer.

At the meeting, Dr. Bair expressed the administration's strong desire to put this project on high priority. It was decided that an FM frequency should be found that would not conflict with WECT-TV's signal or Friends of Public Radio's signal. A possibility of moving the radio station's frequency into the commercial FM band was suggested. This matter will be looked into.

Bill Young said that a full time electrical engineer would most certainly be needed as soon as possible to set up equipment in the studios. Young said that an engineer should be hired for installation and then should remain on in a full time capacity to maintain the operation. This is being looked into.

A possibility of operating a carrier current station as an alternative to broadcast was found to be unfeasible because of costs. A carrier current station would have only been able to be received by buildings on campus and would have eliminated seventy-five percent of the students as listeners.

At the close of the meeting, Dr. Bair pledged to look into financing equipment and an engineer's position. Barnes said he would call a meeting in September to activate a radio organization of interested students.

The legislature's withholding of expansion funds may soon make this student's uncrowded study a luxury of the past.

Operating Budget Increased

Alan Moore
Contributing Editor

Beginning this fiscal year, 83-84, UNCW will see an increased operating Budget with a total of $19.2 million.

Designed to act as an "income" for the campus, the Operating Budget goes to the support of the general campus operation. According to Dr. Jairy Hunter, Vice-Chancellor for Business Affairs, says the budget is allocated "to really run the University—basically."

Of the $19.2 million, $15.8 is received through state-allocated funding while the balance of $3.5 million is taken from actual tuition and academic fees.

Students need not expect to actually "see" this sum of money put to use. This budget allocates approximately 70% toward academic functions such as teacher salaries, library resources, and supplies, while the remaining 30% is used for general support of the University including salaries for senior-Administration Officers such as the Chancellor, student services including Dean salaries, registrars, etc. and the Physical Plant to keep the grounds in shape.

Dr. Hunter is pleased with the new budget. "Through-

Letters

To the Editor

Apathy is a major problem with the students of UNCW. Students don't realize how much effect they have in our campus system. Students need to become aware of their influence in the power-making decisions of UNCW. The majority of students are totally unaware of the capabilities their Student Government Association possess; the sad fact is that few even realize its existence.

I'm sure you are wondering what the connection is between apathy and awareness through SGA. It's simple; approximately 3/4 of the apathy displayed by students originates because of lack of comprehension of what's happening around them. SGA provides the connection between students and the campus by providing this information.

Disinterested students find it easier to sit back and complain about the faults of campus instead of doing something about them. A good example for this is the common complaint of needing more parking places. Everyone seems to find the time to complain, but no one stops long enough to hear the reasons why actions can or can't be taken.

Students who have taken the time to listen to all the options SGA has for up-dating our system, are interested and want to make their views known. There are senators representing each of our classes every Thursday night at 6:00 and supposedly expressing our points of view. Do you even know who is representing you and what decisions they have made "in your best interest"?

Our campus will only give as much as each of us put into it. SGA is beginning a new term with its newly elected officers. This is the time to clean out the cobwebs and begin anew. This is the point where each of us must make a decision to either: get involved and take an active interest in our campus activities, or accept UNCW as it is with no regrets.

On Saturday, August 27, a quarter of a million people gathered on the mall in Washington D. C. in front of the Lincoln Memorial to commemorate Martin Luther King's famous "I have a dream..." speech. Late in the afternoon, I, watching on T.V., saw Coretta Scott King and her family standing silently behind the podium at the Lincoln Memorial while the last part of that speech was played over loud speakers. It really took me back to the sixties and my memories of hope. It was a time when we all had hope that things could be different, that change was possible. We had leaders then, people who had dreams and dared to speak about them and work for them. They were our heroes, Heroes of Hope.

Our heroes are gone-dead. It seems that dreamers, that Heroes of Hope are dangerous. Our heroes in the sixties, John and Bobby Kennedy and Martin Luther King were killed. Heroes of Hope before them were also killed—Jesus and Gandhi. Likewise, other heroes since then have died such as, Archbishop Oscar Romero of El Salvador. As I said, dreamers appear to be dangerous.

But dreamers are important, even critical to us. We all need heroes. We all need someone at the head of whatever parade we choose to follow. They give us hope and inspire creativity, two elements critical to any possibility of personal or social development. And our social landscape has seemed strangely devoid of heroes since the sixties. One commentator, in looking over the American social scene, has found a new hero. It is the millionaire. He decries and "idolatry of enrichissez-vous, which celebrates millionaires as its cultural heroes and talks with some despair of an economy which is conducted on the basis of private greed.

Think about it. Who are your heroes fight now? Do you have any? As I've said, we all need heroes, people who represent dreams and convictions that we want to strive for. Whether sports heroes, political heroes, religious heroes or whatever, each of us want ideals to strive for. Or to turn the issue around, if we can identify those who we admire or emulate, we can learn something significant about our values and our own dreams. So, who are your heroes? who do you admire, who would you like to be like?

It might be worthy to note that even though our dreamers have been killed, they can still have incredible power in our lives for dreams do not necessarily die even if dreamers do. Jesus and Gandhi and Romero and Martin Luther King still infuse my own dreams and give me hope.

But who are your Heroes?

The Center For Writing

The Writing Center recorded its most successful Spring semester to date last Spring.

According to Olson we tutored the highest number of students ever in a Spring semester (380); conducted the highest number of student contact hours (481.5); and tutored the highest number of students with multiple visits (234). Also, the Writing Center tutored students from 17 different academic departments.

Our hours are: Monday through Friday from 9:00 to 12:00 and 1:00 to 3:00, as well as Tuesday and Thursday nights from 5:30 to 9:00. Students can make an appointment by dropping by the Center (Morton 203) or calling Ext. 2349.

Scholarships Offered

Software Scholarship Offered By ICP

A scholarship for up to $5,000 for students enrolled in a computer science or computer technology program in a four-year college or university is being offered by International Computer Programs, Inc. of Indianapolis, Indiana.

To qualify for the 1984-85 scholarship, a full-time student must be a sophomore or junior who is maintaining a "B" average and is in need of financial assistance.

"The ICP Scholarship Program represents for us a truly meaningful contribution to the future of the software industry," said Larry Welke, President of ICP. Selection of the scholarship finalists will be based on the student's grades in his or her field of study as well as in electives, financial need, participation in data processing related activities, school activities and leadership roles.

The finalists will then be asked to write a software-related essay which will be judged by a committee of data processing professionals. ICP will announce the winner in early April of 1984.

"I believe that a strong future begins today in the schools and we created this scholarship to further this belief," said Welke.

The scholarship will be applied to tuition costs and educational expenses at the U.S. college or university of the winner's choice.

Last year, Jane Schroeder of Illinois State University in Normal, Illinois won the award.

For more information, contact your financial aid or computer science department.

Governor's Letter Expresses Concern

from the office of James B. Hunt, Jr., Governor

An Open Letter to College and University Students:

On October 1, 1983, North Carolina will have a new set of laws dealing with those who operate a vehicle while impaired by alcoholic beverages or any other impairing substance. The Safe Roads Act of 1983 does much more than raise the drinking age for beer and unfortified wine to 19. We would like for the students attending our colleges and universities to be aware of the new law.

Perhaps the best way to explain some of the comprehensive provisions of the new law is to state a hypothetical case involving a student—we will call him Joe—stopped by a State Highway Patrolman for driving under the influence of an impairing substance.

Joe may have been stopped at one of the roadblocks law enforcement agencies can now establish under the Safe Roads Act to check for drunk drivers. He may have been stopped because the trooper saw him drinking a beer while driving. Under the Safe Roads Act, it is unlawful for the driver of a vehicle to consume any alcoholic beverage while driving.

Under the new law, Joe can be arrested and charged under the single offense of impaired driving. There are no lesser included offenses, such as careless and reckless driving after drinking, in the new law; thus, there will be no more plea bargaining. There is only one charge, and it can be proved in one of two ways:

(1) By showing the driver's physical or mental faculties are appreciably impaired by an impairing substance or;

(2) By showing the driver's alcohol concentration (AC) is 0.10 or more.

If Joe refuses to submit to a chemical test, his license will be revoked for one year. He can apply for limited driving privileges only after surrendering his license for six months of the revocation.

If Joe registers 0.10 AC or more on a chemical test, or refuses the test, he will be taken before a magistrate and his license will be suspended immediately for 10 days. This is mandatory. No one gets off. Out-of-state students will have their privilege to drive in North Carolina suspended for 10 days, just the same as students licensed in North Carolina.

If the magistrate determines Joe is too impaired to be released, the magistrate is empowered under the act to hold Joe for up to 24 hours or until a responsible, sober adult will take responsibility for him. In no event may Joe be held for more than 24 hours.

Next, Joe will have a trial on the charge. If Joe is convicted of driving while impaired, the law requires the judge to hold a sentencing hearing where Grossly Aggravating Drunk Driving (GADD) factors, aggravating factors and mitigating factors are presented by the prosecutor and defense attorneys. The judge must weight these factors in imposing sentence.

If two GADD factors (a prior impaired driving offense in the past seven years, driving with revoked license for an impaired offense, causing an accident resulting in serious injury to another) are present, there is a mandatory minimum jail term of 14 days and Joe can be fined up to $2,000. If one GADD factor is present, Joe faces a mandatory minimum seven days in jail and a fine up to $1,000. If Joe has two or more prior convictions for driving impaired within seven years, punishment is the same as if he had two GADD factors.

If no GADD factors are present, the judge weighs the aggravating and mitigating factors. If aggravating factors outweigh mitigating factors, Joe can be sentenced to a minimum of 72 hours in jail, or 72 hours of community service or 90 days without driving or a combination of all. He also faces a fine of up to $500. If aggravating and mitigating factors balance out, Joe faces a sentence of 48 hours in jail, 48 hours community service or 60 days without driving or a combination of all. Additionally, Joe can be fined up to $250. If the mitigating factors outweigh the aggravating factors, Joe faces a jail term of 24 hours, or 24 hours community service or 30 days without driving or a combination of all. Joe can be fined up to $100.

Some aggravating factors are: gross impairment or an AC of 0.20 or more; especially reckless driving; an accident causing over $500 damage or personal injury; driving while license revoked; two or more 3-point motor vehicle offenses within 5 years, or one or more prior convictions of DWI more than 7 years old; speeding to elude arrest; speeding more than 30 miles per hour above the posted limit; and passing a stopped school bus.

Some mitigating factors are: slight impairment solely from alcohol, AC of 0.11 or less; slight impairment solely from alcohol and no chemical test available; generally safe driving at time of offense; no serious traffic offenses within past 5 years; impairment caused by lawfully prescribed drug; and voluntary submission to treatment before trial.

If this is Joe's first impaired driving offense, he will lose his driving privileges for one year. He is eligible for a severely curtailed limited driving privilege only after he has served a court-ordered period of vehicle non-operation. If it is Joe's second offense, he loses his license for four years and can get no limited privilege. Revocation is permanent for the third offense.

In matters of license revocation for out-of-state students, North Carolina has reciprocity with most states for impaired driving crimes. The North Carolina Division of Motor Vehicles would send the report of your conviction to your home state and that state could apply the sanction. In any event, North Carolina will revoke your privilege to operate a motor vehicle in this state.

If Joe holds a North Carolina provisional license (issued to 16- and 17-year olds) and is convicted of DWI or refuses to take a chemical test, or is caught driving with any amount of alcohol or any impairing substance in his system (excluding prescriptions taken in a lawful amount), his license will be revoked until he is 18, or for 45 days, whichever is longer.

The law also provides a one-year license revocation if:

An underage person attempts to purchase or purchases an alcoholic beverage;

An underage person aids or abets another to attempt to purchase or purchase an alcoholic beverage;

An underage person attempts to purchase, purchases or possesses alcoholic beverages by using or attempting to use a fraudulent driver's license or any other I.D., or by lending his driver's license or any other I.D. for that purpose.

If Joe registers 0.20 or more on a chemical test, he will be referred to an appropriate public or private facility for treatment and counseling. AC levels in those ranges are indicative of problem drinkers. Problem drinkers cause the majority of accidents involving impaired drivers.

Another important aspect of the Safe Roads Act which may affect students is the "Dram-shop" provision. Under this provision, negligent sale of beer, wine or liquor to an underage person may subject the seller to civil liability if the underage person then consumes the beverage and as a result of consuming the beverage has an accident while driving impaired. This provision led operators of establishments which sell alcoholic beverages to ask for the power to hold a person's I.D. for a reasonable time to check the I.D.'s validity. The seller must then tell the person why he is holding the I.D.

In addition to the criminal and administrative sanctions mentioned above, Joe faces a host of other problems arising from a conviction for DWI. If he is a first offender, he will be required to pay for and attend classes at one of the state's Alcohol Drug Education Traffic Schools. His car insurance will climb precipitously. Whatever it cost before conviction, it will now cost him 395 percent more—395 percent more for three years!

It is not worth it to drink and drive. Your personal costs are too high. The costs to society are too high. If you drink, don't drive. If you drive, don't drink.

Sincerely,

Herman R. Clark

out the University Administration staff, we've had more campus input. This has led to the best budget ever."

And with this budget, there are two major projects in process. The first is a computer system for the campus including both hard and software with the capability of faculty and student use reducing dependence on the new-used TUCC system. The other project is a campus-wide telephone system. This would give separate numbers to each extension minimizing the use of a central switchboard. This telephone system will have data and voice capabilities to go along with the computer system. Both projects are to begin seeking bids within the next 6 months with installation hopeful in the next year.

Dr. Hunter expects positive growth from the campus with the help of the new budget saying, "Overall the campus is growing, it is the prettiest in the system, and we should be very thankful for the good things happening to us."

RADIO ORGANIZING MEETING ANNOUNCED

Jay Barnes, student representative for radio development, has called for a meeting of all interested students to form a campus radio organization. The meeting will take place in the Video Studio in the University Union, room 212, on Tuesday night, September 13, 1983 at 8:00 p.m. All aspects of the station will be discussed. If any student has an interest in radio at UNCW, he or she is urged to attend.

ABOUT WELLNESS

WHAT IS WELLNESS? It's more than just not being sick...it's a positive state of health.

WELLNESS means taking responsibility for your own health by:

LEARNING how to stay healthy.

PRACTICING good health habits.

RESPONDING to your body's warning signs before something serious happens.

WELLNESS involves the health of the whole person. The body must be kept strong, fit and well nourished so it's able to resist disease and overcome injury. The mind and spirit are important, too. A positive attitude helps a person combat stress and tension.

WHY SHOULD I LEARN ABOUT WELLNESS? So You Can Enjoy Life to the FULLEST!

When you're WELL you--
FEEL GOOD. You have more energy and endurance, spend less time feeling tired or ill. You sleep better and feel calmer and more confident.

LOOK GOOD. Your health shows in improved muscle tone, proper weight, clear eyes, healthy skin and hair. People notice your increased vigor and enthusiasm.

You can get more enjoyment out of all aspects of your life...home, family, work, and SCHOOL!

Your health depends on many factors, some of which you can't completely control and health factors YOU CAN CONTROL such as:

and amount of exercise promotes healthy heart, lungs, and muscles; helps control weight and relieve stress.

REST--many physicians recommend 7-8 hours of sleep each night for good health.

STRESS--can cause physical and emotional problems, but it can be managed and its effects controlled.

BAD HABITS--avoiding both smoking and drug and alcohol abuse can help prevent serious illness.

Some Guides for WELLNESS. Your life style is the key to WELLNESS. Today, most Americans die from heart disease, cancer, stroke, and accidents. Many deaths and accidents can be prevented by changes in life style and health habits. ASK YOURSELF...Do I use TABACCO or abuse ALCOHOL? Do I EAT RIGHT and maintain my proper WEIGHT? Do I get enough EXERCISE? Am I under too much STRESS?

YOUR HEALTH DEPENDS A LOT ON YOU! DON'T SMOKE--smoking causes most cases of lung cancer. It is also a leading cause of heart disease, emphysema, chronic bronchitis, stroke, ect. Tips To Help You Quit..

Get rid of reminders; ashtrays and matches.

Change smoking routines (no cigarettes with coffee or after meals).

Come to the Student Health Service for help.

Avoid places where you usually smoke.

Associate Dean Recognizes Student Needs

Donna Holden
Features Editor

Although Residence Life is her first love, Pat Leonard is excited about each aspect of her new job. Working as both Associate Dean of Students and as the International Student Advisor, she works with a variety of students. The Alcohol Task Awareness Force, Rape Prevention and Awareness, and Non-Traditional Students are also specific areas she deals with.

Although Leonard would like to work more closely with Residence Life Staff training and supervision, she would like to see more programming on women's issues in campus. Leonard would like to expand on the Rape Awareness and Prevention program. She feels "the needs of the student population need to be assessed in order to address issues concerned with students."

When the legal drinking age changes to 19 next month, Leonard is prepared for a variety of responses. "Students are going to be angry and frustrated—that's only natural...We want the students to understand we're not advocating Prohibition, we want students to learn to drink responsibly."

One avenue the administration is using to encourage responsible drinking is to revise the alcohol permit issued to campus clubs and organizations. Persons must now include an alternate beverage as well as foods at each function serving alcohol. Leonard said, "We'd be naive to believe there will be no problems, but we hope students will be cooperative."

Leonard likes Wilmington, and folks in Wilmington seem to like her. Originally from Long Island, she missed the beach when she was at Oxford University in Miami, Ohio. Linda Huntley, her secretary said, "She's a fantastic person. Students so far have been by and made good comments. She's always willing to take time out to help with a problem."

School Kids Record Review

Stevie Ray Vaughan first started turning heads as the David Bowie guitarist on Let's Dance. A relative unknown until then, Stevie and his band Double Trouble has actually been paying their dues in Texas honky-tonks for 12 years. Thanks to the efforts of Bowie, the Rolling Stones, and John Hammond, Texas Flood has become this band's 1st release. Looking like a Mexican gaucho from the plains, a first look at the cover art is more reminiscent of a Clint Eastwood spaghetti western than a hot shot blues guitarist. In fact I know he'd melt in 5 minutes if he wore that getup into Mad Monk one night. Regardless, Texas Flood is the most commercially acceptable blues album, to come out in years. Though acknowledging the past, Stevie Ray Vaughan sidesteps the usual pitfalls of most blues LPs; whereby the same old classics are done at the same agonizingly slow pace and gives us a much more aggressive attack that never dies.

'Love Struck Baby' kicks it off with as much finger-popping as any smashing rockabilly track. Though 'Pride and Joy' and 'Texas Flood' pay homage to the slow blues technique, enough hot licks and flash are fused within each to raise more than a few eyelids. 'Texas Flood' is particularly close to the Hendrix tune 'Red House' if you were wondering where this man's heart lies. 'Testify' is a scorching rave-up which sounds like Hendrix meets Johnny Winter. 'Rude Mood' is another instrumental designed for Stevie Ray to stretch out his flying fingers on a rockabilly blues piece. 'Mary Had A Little Lamb' pays homage to Mr. Unpredictable Hissell, Buddy Guy! 'Dirty Pool' is a roughed-up blues which puts one deep into the well of mixed-up love and revenge. The album closer, 'Lenny' measures this guitarist's true worth. A tender instrumental floating atop a Hendrix bridge, this beautifully arranged song soars as Stevie lets his guitar wail and moan.

If 'legendary' means talent too long neglected this man has come of age.

Off-campus Students Well Informed

Woodrow Willis
Journalism Contributor

Being well informed is essential to the college experience. In the past, off-campus students have always found it difficult to keep informed of campus policies and activities.

This is the first academic year that the new Student Union will be in operation. It is hoped that the Union will help solve the information problem for off-campus students. The Union provides a mutual meeting ground for resident students and off-campus students beyond the classroom.

In the Union, there are post office boxes for every student registered at UNCW. This will aid in the distribution of fliers and other information concerning campus activities.

The Union also provides an Information Center for the students. It is kept up-to-date on all student and campus activities and is an invaluable source of information to both the on and off-campus students.

There are two offices in the Union where students may go with additional questions they may have. They are the Programs Office (formally the Student Activities Office), headed by Ellen Servetnick, the Programs Director, and the University Union Office, headed by Stephen Gnad, the Operations Director for the University Union.

Off-campus students should remember that it is their responsibility to be well informed. They should check the bulletin boards and their post office boxes. They should also stop by the Information Center with any questions that they may have. And, most importantly, ask questions of their fellow students. Being well informed of campus activities can help make the college experience much more enjoyable.

Return of the Jedi

As you begin to fall back into the routine of school, a trip into a science fiction world would certainly be welcome. George Lucas offers such an escape in the third installment of his Star Wars story line.

Return of the Jedi begins on Luke Skywalker's home planet, Tatooine, where Hans Solo is being held captive by Jabba the Hut. The story then follows Luke as he rescues Han, Leia, and his robot companions, R2D2 and C3PO. Then he returns to Yoda, his Jedi master, to fulfill his train-

Off-campus Moves May Be Expensive

Peter Mullins
Journalism Contributor

Considering a move off-campus? Beware your bank account may not survive. The cost of living off-campus, although seemingly comparable to that of on-campus living, requires expenses that one does not come across while living on-campus.

The off-campus student must deal with the added expense of a utilities deposit, phone deposit, and for some, the expense of furniture.

The first major expense is electricity. Carolina Power and Light requires a deposit of approximately $110.00 to turn the power on. For most off-campus students, another expense is furniture. Either one can buy new furniture here in Wilmington or bring furniture from home. Whichever is chosen, a large check will have

ing. As the story continues, Luke and the Rebel Alliance face another Death Star challenge and Luke must once again confront Darth Vader for the final conflict.

The story is serious, yet sprinkled with humorous effects, the most prevalent being the Teddy bear-like Ewoks.

to be written to either U-Haul or a furniture store. Phone installation is a third expense. Southern Bell requires a $75.00 deposit to insure payment of future bills, while also charging $59.00 for installation. For Wrightsville Beach dwellers, there is the added expense of water and sewage charges.

The above expenses do not include those that are common between the off-campus student and the on-campus student, such as rent and food. Again the off-campus student pays considerably more. With rent ranging from $250.00 for a one-bedroom apartment to $500.00 for a house at Wrightsville Beach. The difference can be considerable.

The cost of food off-campus can not be compared with the subsidized cost of the cafeteria meal ticket the on-campus student obtains.

Transfer Students Feel UNCW Has Something To Offer

Mary Jefferies
Journalism Contributor

Enrollment at UNCW is increasing every year, not only with more new freshmen coming in at the beginning of the semester, but also with students transferring from other universities and small colleges. Approximately 425 students are transfers to UNCW this semester.

What are some of the reasons students are transferring here from the larger universities and smaller private colleges? For some, it is an attempt to receive more individual attention.

Angie Tillman, a transfer from UNC-Chapel Hill, said, "I like a smaller school because in some of my classes there were 400 students, I was just a number. At UNCW I get more individual attention."

"I am happier and more comfortable on a smaller campus, and I think this will have a better influence on my grades," agrees Vicki Schlegel, a transfer from UNC-Greensboro.

It is easy to see why a student would transfer from a large university smaller to one to receive more individualized instruction, but why would a student want to transfer from a small college to a university?

"UNCW more that I need to prepare for my major," says Martha Jane Parker, a transfer from Peace College. "I also enjoy coming back to my hometown so I can work and go to school."

UNCW is able to offer more instruction and experience with its many programs because most classes are taught by professors instead of graduate students, a practice common to large universities. An extensive library and modern laboratory facilities offer an advantage over smaller private colleges.

UNCW has something to offer to everyone whether they are looking for the advantages of a small college or the benefits of a university.

Movie Reviews

WarGames was one movie that kept audiences in suspense across the nation.

David Lichtman, the teenage hero portrayed by Matthew Broderick, accidentally breaks into the United State Top Secret War Computer while searching for video games to play on his home computer. When a computer with a game list queries, "Shall we play a game?" David enthusiastically types in "Global Thermonuclear War", not realizing that he is hooked into the U.S. Defense System.

After being traced and arrested by the F.B.I. for espionage, David escapes to find the programmer of the U.S. Computer, Joshua.

This film raises disturbing questions like, "Can a war really be started this way?" and "Maybe we shouldn't be so dependent on computers?", but all in all, it shows how careful we need to be in the future. LPJ *****

LIMIT ALCOHOL USE--overuse can result in serious health problems, such as some kinds of cancer, heart problems, liver and brain damage, ulcers, and family, school and job troubles. Drinking is also a major factor in deaths from car accidents. Tips To Avoid Abuse...

Avoid social situations that encourage excessive drinking. Never drive after drinking.

Be alert for early signs of alcohol dependence; drinking alone, drinking to escape.

Get help for drinking problems (Campus Task Force on Alcohol Abuse).

GET ENOUGH EXERCISE--most physicians recommend at least 30 minutes of cardiovascular exercise 3-4 times a week. Benefits of Regular Exercise...

WALKING--2-5 miles per day is safest and most effective.

SWIMMING--swim for at least 20-30 minutes.

BICYCLING.

EXERCISE SAFELY--wait for 2 hours after eating before you exercise. Warm up for about 5 minutes before you exercise, stretch fully, start slowly. Cool down the same way...Don't Overdo It!

MILK GROUP--milk, cheese, yogurt, skim milk, cottage cheese. (2 servings daily).

VEGETABLE/FRUIT--citrus fruits, fleshy fruits (apples, pears), green, yellow, and root vegetables. (4 servings daily).

MEAT GROUP--eggs, fish, meat. Try other proteins like peanut butter, dried beans, lentils, tofu (soft curd from soy beans). (2 servings daily).

BREAD/CEREAL--breads, cereals, rice, oats, corn meal, pasta. Choose whole grain breads, brown rice, whole wheat or spinach pastas. (3-4 servings daily).

Follow These Tips

For Healthy Eating:

CUT DOWN ON...sugar, fatty foods, salt.

MANAGE STRESS--Pressures, demands, and worries that make you feel tense are facts of life. The key is to keep them within manageable limits. Steps You Can Take To Protect Yourself Against Stress:

Fitness, muscle tone and endurance improve...digestion and sleep improve, too.

Weight and cholesterol level decreases (with proper diet).

Emotional health improves...you feel better about yourself, happier.

Cross Country Covers Territory

George Walker
Staff Writer

As Pete Townsend said, "I can see for miles and miles and miles" ... After three sweat-drenched weeks of training, the inexperienced but exuberant cross-country teams look forward to a tough Division 1 schedule which culminates at the Southern Independent Championships in Atlanta.

Coach Bill Atwill returns for his fifth season as the Seahawk's top runner for the third straight season, with T. Lankford expected to challenge for this spot after recovering from an early season knee injury. "George Walker should have his best season ever. He is clearly the fastest UNCW has ever had. How the team will do collectively depends on how fast Lankford recovers and if we can get continued improvement from inexperienced newcomers," says Atwill. Bob Nelson, Bill Walters and John Leahy are off to a swift start and should be pushed by Chuck Luey, Rick Olsen, Breck Wiggins and Dale Lee. Triathlete Dave Hodge and graduate Robbie Burke offer competition in workouts.

The Lady Seahawks follow much the same pattern. "Caroline Brady should challenge the school records set by Dawn Goley," says Atwill. Brenda Walker and Nancy Knapp should fill the next two spots. Kim Blount and Sharon Royal are showing consistent improvement and will keep the Seahawks competitive. Fifth year student Stacey Almond offers much needed practice competition Atwill stresses that runners of all abilities are welcome and are invited to train with the team between 3-5 at Hanover Hall.

Lady Seahawks Try To Maintain Winning Record

The UNCW women's volleyball team is practicing hard, sometimes twice a day, to prepare for the 1983 season.

The Lady Seahawks are coming off of a 21-9 record, the most successful season UNCW has ever had.

Coach Jackie Bartlett, now entering her fourth year, is looking forward to this year.

"We have four starters returning and that gives us more experience this year. But we could be hurt early by injuries." Senior returnee and co-captain, Kim Arthur, has been sidelined with a back injury. Sophomore Kay Baker suffered a foot injury and freshman Martha Byrd dislocated her knee.

Junior co-captain Sara Womble said the injuries were "a little discouraging but we have more experience this year. We are going to start strong and keep the team together."

"This team has the potential to go places," agrees Kim Arthur, senior co-captain. "We have good freshmen and more experience than we've ever had. It would be nice for all the seniors if we could go out with a better record than last year."

The team consists of four seniors, one junior, four sophomores, and three freshmen. The lady hawks missed qualifying for the state tournament last year by one game. "This year they are taking six teams instead of four so we have a better chance," says Coach Bartlett. "We aren't as tall this year, but we may be a little quicker." The lady hawks will play Thursday before opening on their home floor when they will take on Francis Marion College and Guilford College, September ninth at 6:30 in Hanover Hall.

UNCW HOSTS

PORT CITY CLASSIC

The UNCW soccer team hopes to continue a successful tradition this weekend as it hosts the fourth Port City Classic on Friday and Saturday (Sept. 9 and 10).

The Seahawks, who have won all three previous Classics, face Baptist (of Charleston, SC) at 4 p.m. Friday after Campbell and UNC Charlotte meet in the 2 p.m. opener.

On Saturday, Campbell will take on Baptist at noon, with UNCW and UNCC squaring off at 2 p.m.

UNCW is seeking its first 1983 win after dropping a 4-0 contest to nationally ranked Virginia on September 1. The 'Hawks played fairly well until the Cavaliers broke open a tight struggle with three goals in the closing 10 minutes of play.

"We did some good things for an opening game, but we're still disappointed with the final score," coach Calvin Lane says. "Virginia is a talented team and I think that once they scored their second goal, we had a big let-down."

WOMEN GOLFERS BEGIN YEAR

IN LONGWOOD TOURNEY

A young UNCW women's golf team takes part in the first of five tournaments on its 1983 fall schedule this weekend as it travels to Longwood, VA, for the Longwood Invitational.

Coach Lea Larson enters her fifth year at UNCW without Darci Wilson, the Lady Seahawks' top performer the past four seasons, but the 'Hawk coach feels her squad should still be a very competitive one.

"We're not there yet, but we're getting there," Larson says. "This is a very hard-working group of young players, and they have the ability to win on this level. Our returning players will be counted on for leadership, but I think that the newcomers should blend in well."

Club Leaders Discuss Procedures

The Safe Roads Act was passed this summer and will take effect October first. The act raises the drinking age from 18 to 19 years of age. Also, under this new policy, anyone caught driving with a 0.10 percentage level of alcohol in the bloodstream or anyone who refuses to take the breathalyzer test will risk immediate suspension of all driving privileges.

At the September 29 meeting of the campus clubs and organizations, Dean of Students, Gary Juhan, and Chief of Campus Police, Joe Johnson, discussed how the new policy will be dealt with on campus. "If you are of legal age, you can drink on campus in the residence hall rooms or the University Union at a sponsored University-related function," Johnson said. "If you plan to have a function involving alcoholic beverages, you must file an alcoholic beverage permit form one week in advance." He explained that the form has several specifications, such as offering alternative beverages and food for the non-drinkers. Chief Johnson added that it is the responsibility of the club or organization to check identification at the function and assure that those who are underage do not drink alcoholic beverages.

"We are trying to communicate that you don't have to drink alcohol to have a good time, but if you choose to have alcohol, you need to do so under the provisions of the law," Johnson said. He went on to explain that according to the new policy, selling or giving alcohol to an underage person can result in temporary or permanent suspension of driving privileges for both parties. Johnson commented, "It will be interesting to see what happens with this change."

Both Juhan and Johnson extended invitations to come by their offices if questions should arise. "We have ordered 6000 brochures explaining the law, but have not yet determined how they will be distributed, but it is a pretty good bet that they will go into the mailboxes," said Johnson.

Also at the meeting was Pat Leonard, Associate Dean of Students. Leonard spoke about the upcoming Leadership Program. "The theme of this year's program is to build upon the community atmosphere," she said. "We want to acquaint the administration with the students." There will be a three dollar registration fee for the seminar which is scheduled for September 24. Leonard recommended the program "for any student leader," and said that it will cover "requirements and procedures leaders need to follow."

Ellen Servetnick, Program Director, spoke on the Club Fair that is currently being organized. Servetnick said that all clubs which wish to participate may set up tables in the Student Union on the specified date and pass out information regarding their club. Also planned is a Calendar of Events to be posted in the Union. Notification of activities or events may be submitted to Servetnick.

Mike Godfrey, Student Government Treasurer, then took the floor and passed out the new procedure manuals to the club presidents, explaining that the process for purchasing would be more formal this year, as would other aspects of club functions.

Food Service Program Changes Hands

The food service program of UNCW is under new management. ARA Dining Services, the world's largest food service, has replaced Professional Food Management (PFM).

Paul Thomas, the Director of the Dining Service, is optimistic about the development of the ARA dining program here. According to Thomas, the program is service oriented and geared towards pleasing the students of the University system. The management team of ARA has an "open door" policy in which they invite their "customers" to offer suggestions for improvement of the dining program. Thomas said the philosophy of the team is "to do the best job possible."

According to Thomas, new ideas for more enjoyable dining are being utilized. The ground level of the University cafeteria offers a deli consisting of sandwiches, soup, salad bar, and ice cream for lunch.

Dinner will include a menu taken from weekly themes. Thomas hopes to plan menus around approximately ten themes per semester. These include nautical, ethnic and holiday themes. The upstairs cafeteria level consists of the usual two service lines. However, one line contains fast food, such as hot dogs and hamburgers, and the regular planned meal.

The dining area of the new student union operates on a scramble system. Students do not have to wait in line to get the items they want. They are able to move around freely from one area to another of their choice. Director Thomas anticipates an expanded menu at the union in the future.

If you are like many UNCW students who want to live on campus but do not relish the idea of living in a dorm, then an on-campus apartment may be the answer for you. Despite the cost, which is a little more than the cost of a dorm room, many students feel that the benefits of an on-campus apartment are well worth the expense. Living in an apartment on campus has many advantages, such as more privacy, fewer parking problems, and the convenience of being within walking distance of classes.

Unlike a dorm, the campus apartments come equipped with kitchen, private baths, and separate bedrooms, all of which can make for more comfortable living.

Some of the campus activities that apartment dwellers can become involved in this fall are Homecoming, resident intramurals, and the "Fall Feud."

According to sophomore Ashley Agapion, "I have more privacy than a dorm and I have the opportunity to be involved in campus life." Even freshmen choose to live in the apartments. Mitzi Winstead, a UNCW freshman, said, "When you are away from home for the first time, you need a warm atmosphere unlike a dorm, and the apartments have that. Plus you are living on campus so you do not miss out on meeting new people."

of rising book costs.

Fall Semester Brings Tuition

Hike

The 1983 fall semester brought another increase in tuition for UNCW students. Even at the higher rate, the cost of a college education is still a bargain.

The average full-time, in-state student only pays about 15 percent of his own tuition. The taxpayers in the state bear the rest of the burden.

Of course, other costs such as additional class fees, books, parking, and room and board raise the price considerably.

According to Bob Walton, Director of Financial Services, the state allocates $4050 for each full-time student, and the student is responsible for the difference in actual cost.

That cost, as determined by the North Carolina Board of Governors, was raised this year to $338.50 for in-state students. An increase of $18.

For out-of-state students, the non-resident tuition jumped $200 to $1355.50.

According to Walton, UNCW has no role in the increase or the amount, which was deemed necessary by the N.C. State Legislature. The university did, however, request and receive permission to implement the $17.50 computer access fee which has been added to some classes.

There are no plans for further increase next semester, Walton said, but did add that future budget plans are undecided.

Computer Fees

This semester students were shocked to find that a computer fee had been added to selected classes. Oddly enough, classes that do not use the computer, such as aerobic dance and PE 101, were also charged this fee. The fee varies but for both of these classes it was $17.50.

When asked, many members of the teaching staff said that they were unaware of the newly imposed fee until a recent staff meeting. Several professors oppose the fee, but asked not to be identified.

When questioned about the computer fee, Dr. Cahill, vice-chancellor of academic affairs, said the fee is necessary in order to obtain a new computer system. He went on to say that the cost for accessing TUCC, the mainframe in Durham, was rapidly increasing. By having a mainframe on the UNCW campus, students will be able to access either TUCC or the system located on this campus.

Dr. Cahill said that in the selection process for the distribution of fees, "any course that has a computer component will have the fee." Cahill added that although some adjustments need to be made to correct errors, this is a "fair distribution of fees." In the not too distant future every student entering UNCW will be required to pay the computer fee.

Dr. Cahill feels that the administration needs to be sensitive to what they can do to provide the best educational opportunities for students and that expanding computer capabilities is one way to accomplish that.

When students were asked what they thought of the computer fee, some were not aware that it existed.

However, other students seemed upset that they were paying the fee and not using the computer. UNCW student, Patrick Myer said "I feel it is an infringement of the student's rights to place a computer fee on various courses where for many of the courses computers are not even used, at any level."

MACS To Start

Stephanie Loftus
News Editor

With the aim of placing computer majors in their chosen field, the Math and Computer Science Club (MACS) is starting an employment assistance service. The chairman of the service, Bruce Hilton, was prompted by a disappointment at Career Day last year.

"Since computer science is such a 'marketable field,' one would have thought that there would have been more companies who would come down here to address the idea of computer science as a major field and the impression that I got was that most of the people that were here were just here to look at everybody and see what was here," he commented. Also prompted by the "desire to have the school establish a name for itself inside this field of computer science so companies and firms not directly in the Wilmington area could use us as a source," he proposed the service at a MACS meeting.

Unanimously elected chairman since he was familiar with employment assistance, Hilton designed a resume package for computer majors. The program is designed to contact major companies and sell the seniors and graduates. Hilton hopes that "if they like the people they get, they'll come back for more." Since UNCW is off the beaten path for major computer science recruiters, this program may attract more recruiters to this area.

The UNCW MACS Employment Assistance Service packets are available in the Math Department Secretary's office in Morton Hall. The cost for this service is $5.00

Computer Arrives On Campus

Business Class To Benefit

With the price of everything going up, especially in the computer market, UNCW was fortunate enough to get a computer system donated to it. The Digital Equipment Corporation donated the PDP11 system will be used mostly in the Business 303 class and in the Computer Science 105.

The PDP11 system has some key advantages over the Hewlett Packard 2000 which it replaced. The main advantage that the PDP11 has is that it is free to use. The Hewlett Packard 2000 costs $1.50 per connect hour. Storage cost is $.20 per track/month. The PDP11 system has a much more powerful Basic than the Hewlett Packard did. The

Research Triangle Awards Grant To UNCW

Lorna Gold
News Editor

The North Carolina-Research Triangle Foundation recently awarded UNCW a grant of $2500 to fund its Visiting Industrial Scientists/Engineers in Bio-Technology program.

The program, scheduled for later this year, is designed to "increase the quantity and quality of interaction between North Carolina universities and industry." Various industrial corporations, including Dow Chemicals and the Weyerhaeuser Company.

UNCW was one of six colleges in the state to receive the grant, and was selected on the basis of faculty expertise in the area of bio-technology and the submission of a list of potential visiting scientists. The visiting scientists will be the primary feature of a week-long series of meetings, seminars, lectures, and demonstrations open to students, faculty, and the general public.

As a result, the university will host at least two officials from According to Dr. Ronald K.

Sizemore, the coordinator of the program, "the visits should expose the industrial segment to UNCW's progress in bio-technology as well as educate us to what is happening today in the field."

Sizemore cites as examples, recent advances in the development of techniques which enhance food production, as well as the development of new vaccines and cancer detection drugs.

The university was notified June 9 that the program proposal and list of potential visiting scientists had been accepted by the Foundation. Sizemore received the $2500 grant, intended to pay travel expenses and an honorarium for the speakers, on August 16.

Educator Becomes Police Chief

Joe Johnson Jr., of Burlington, NC, has been named the new Director of Police Services at UNCW. Formerly a criminal justice instructor at the Technical College of Alamance, Johnson has also served as a criminal justice training coordinator at the North Carolina Justice Academy at Salemburg. At UNC-Charlotte Johnson was department training officer and spent four years as a university police supervisor.

According to Dr. Jairy Hunter, Vice Chancellor for Business Affairs and Development, Johnson was selected because of his broad background in law enforcement and his police supervisory experience at UNCC.

Johnson, who has a bachelor of science degree in criminal justice from UNCC with an emphasis in planning and administration in law enforcement agencies, brings to UNCW extensive training as well as professional certifications in advanced law enforcement and general criminal justice instruction. Glad to be back into a university community, Johnson is looking forward to using his work as an instructor, advisor and counselor to build relationships with the students. He feels that a positive relationship, accepting both positive and adversary comments will be helpful in working on an individual basis with students.

Johnson would also like to emphasize awareness of crime and its prevention. He "intends to continue existing programs, but would like to see a campus version of community watch be programmed. The apartments and residence halls could recognize outsiders that don't belong on campus.

Stillpoint

by Bob Haywood

How big is your world? I'm not talking about mileage around the equator; I'm talking about your emotional life space, the size of your personal world.

Many of us live in a very small world. Home and school mark the perimeters of our life space. We are concerned about, worry about, find our happiness in, define ourselves by, set our goals in terms of these two polarities--hometown and schooltown. We live as if making it in this small world is all that counts. We only consider national problems and the international scene in reference to their impact on our small world and turn it off when it gets overpowering. Besides, living in our world certainly keeps us all busy enough. Who needs more? Right?

Wrong. One of the realities that seems to dawn on us ever so slowly is that we live in a Global Village. Our futures are inextricably bound up with the future of Russia, of the oceans, of the ionosphere, of South Africa and on and on. We often live as if the events that take place anywhere outside of our small personal world are "their problems". Even our attempts at sending aid and showing concern with food for the hungry or money for the poor carries an attitude of "good us" helping "poor them" that demonstrates a separateness lacking any real sense of the interconnectedness of our fate.

And interconnected we are. Planet Earth is more like a living body than we realize and the sooner we realize the interconnectedness of all of life, the better our chances for survival become. Loving our neighbor is not piety but survival ethics. As Matthew Fox notes, "Now that the world is a global village we need compassion more than ever--not for altruism's sake, nor for philosophy's sake or theology's sake, but for sur-

To act, to even think that our small world is all there is and that self-satisfaction is a valid goal without reference to our web of larger connections is, in many ways, to become like a cancer cell, feeding on all living cells around it to satisfy our appetites and ultimately killing ourselves as the earth body on which we feed dies.

A place to begin is with the choice to expand your world, to think more inclusively than my school or my town or, even, my country. From space all the artificial divisions created by small-minded humans disappear and it is clear that we live on a hardy, yet, fragile biosphere characterized more by interconnectedness than separation. Our survival depends on our moving beyond "we" and "them" beyond "mine" and "theirs" to a sense of "ours" that will hopefully generate less competition and more compassion. More on this next week.

Port City Classic Proves Frustrating

Stephanie Loftus
News Editor

The Port City Classic, held September 10 and 11 at UNCW, proved frustrating as the Seahawks first defeated Liberty Baptist and then lost to UNC-Charlotte.

Friday was the Seahawks's best day as they captured the first win of the season over Liberty Baptist. The Hawks' Greg Marinich, with an assist by Steve Allnutt, Pat Brown, and Marcus Martin, assisted by Matt Smith, scored in the final 19 minutes of the game to bring the final score to 3-0.

Sunday was disappointing as the Seahawks were defeated by UNC-Charlotte in 100° temperatures. "The Seahawks played well and controlled the game during the afternoon, but just couldn't connect with the goal," commented John Justice, Sports Information Director.

Campbell College was declared the tournament champions as they defeated both UNCC and Liberty Baptist.

With a 1-2 record this season, the Hawks went up against UNC-Chapel Hill on Wednesday, September 14 at home.

Cross Country Sets Pace

George Walker
Staff Writer

Running under a scorching sun, the Seahawk Cross-Country team competed in the Campbell Invitational Saturday. The results were bittersweet, as individual awards were earned but team performances were hindered by inexperience.

The Lady Seahawks fared the better of the two teams. Stacey Almond (12:48) and Caroline Brady (12:53) won awards for top ten finishes over the two-mile course. Approximately 30 runners from four schools competed. Brenda Walker (no time), Nancy Knapp (13:37), Kim Blount (15:03), and Sharon Royal (16:45) all improved on earlier times.

A unique format was used for the men's competition. In traditional cross-country, all runners face each other simultaneously. At this meet, each team seeds its top six runners. The number six runner from each team races only the number six seeds from the other teams. This makes for close, exciting races.

George Walker won an award for a third place finish in the number one heat, setting a school record (20:51) over the ever-turning four mile course. Freshmen John Leahy (23:04) and Bob Nelson (23:19) ran well. Bill Walters (24:28), Chuck Luey (25:19), Rick Olsen (24:09), and Breck Wiggins (26:33) improved considerably. St. Augustine and Liberty Baptist took team honors, pushing UNCW to seventh place.

Being Accepted

Who's Who Among Students in American Colleges and Universities recognizes those students whose academic standing, participation in extracurricular activities and community service are decidedly above average. A student may be nominated once as a junior, once as a senior, and once as a graduate student. Nominations may be submitted by faculty, staff, and/or students between Monday, September 12, 1983 and Thursday, October 6, 1983. To be nominated, a UNCW student must have a 2.5 cumulative grade point average and earned a minimum of 59 semester hours prior to the beginning of fall semester.

Students will be evaluated on scholarship, participation and leadership in academic and extracurricular activities, citizenship and service to UNCW and the community, and on their potential for future achievement.

APPLICATIONS FOR NOMINEES TO WHO'S WHO AMONG STUDENTS IN AMERICAN UNIVERSITIES AND COLLEGES ARE NOW AVAILABLE IN THE DEAN OF STUDENTS OFFICE, ALDERMAN 110. NOMINATIONS WILL BE ACCEPTED THROUGH 5 p.m., THURSDAY, OCTOBER 6, 1983.

Club Fair '83

Students, are you tired of not having anything to do with your time? Are your weekends boring? Would you like to know how to get involved with people who share the same interests as you?

And clubs, are you tired of having only four members who attend meetings? Is recruiting membership becoming a pain?

Well, now is your chance! The students along with the clubs and organizations are getting together at one time to scratch each others backs!

On September 21, from noon to six in the University Union snack bar the first UNCW CLUB FAIR will be held. The University clubs and organizations will be setting up booths at 11:30 to give out information about themselves and will tear down from 6-6:30.

Not only will students be able to learn about what is happening on campus, but they can get involved and find out what the clubs and organizations can offer them. So students, even if you don't find the club for you, you can still come out and win some free ice cream from the University Union ice cream shop. Remember, September 21 in the University snack bar between 12 and 6. If you would like more information contact Ellen Servetnick or the Student Government Office in the University Union. Let's get together; let's get involved!

UNCW Means Business

Sigma Alpha Beta is the professional fraternity of the Cameron School of Business. Its principal aim is to provide its members and the Business School with both social and academic events. These events include lectures, seminars, workshops, parties and faculty/fraternity sports. SAB also works with the Office of Career Planning and Placement in the annual Career Day.

Our goal is to provide the opportunity to enhance the interests career awareness, and relationships among the students in the Business School. We have the expertise, but PEOPLE will make it happen. To join SAB, you must be regularly enrolled in the UNCW Business School, with 24 university credit hours, and a GPA of at least 2.5 overall.

Would You Believe?

To the Editor:

This past Saturday, while our esteemed President, Eric W. Squires, was playing host to the University System-Presidents at the fall UNCASG meeting, some unknown vandals breeched the Union Security System and struck without mercy. The only apparent victim was noted as Daisy. Daisy as you may question is his quaint little yellow AMC Gremlin. The defenseless car was innocently sitting in the parking lot when she was struck relentlessly by rolls upon rolls of toilet paper. This violent act of injustice occurred just before the President was to lead the other presidents over to the Kenan House for an afternoon reception with the Chancellor. When asked for a comment he could only respond by saying, "I guess the paperwork just comes with the job."

Cindy Holt

Shakespeare's Othello

Kenan Auditorium was filled Monday night as a crowd gathered to watch the fine performance of Othello, one of Shakespeare's most moving tragedies.

Milledge Mosley appeared in the title role and gave a believable portrayal of Othello. Mosley played in the Broadway production of Equus and has to his credit other performances at LaMama and Lincoln Center in New York.

Mosley's speech as Othello was deliberate and powerful and thus held the audience captive.

Desdemona was played by Mary Hopeman and indeed portrayed the somewhat fragile, loving wife of Othello. Eric Zwemer played Iago and gave a splendid approach to a conniving, jealous man.

Emotions are evident as the audience is exposed to the power of love and hate, justice and injustice.

Tragedy is apparent as the hatred Iago feels is revealed by his actions and words. This character is believable; a better portrayal could not be had.

Othello plays into the hands of hatred and jealousy and only at the end of the play is the

Dr. William H. Wagoner, chancellor of The University of North Carolina at Wilmington, recently accepted a check for $1000.00 from Wilber W. Kirk, director of the LaQue Center for Corrosion Technology Inc. at Wrightsville Beach. The LaQue Center gift to UNCW places a scholarship in the chemistry department, providing a stipend to a student as well as an amount to be applied to the department of the recipient's major area of study.

In making the presentation, Kirk pointed out that this was the fifteenth year that the LaQue Center has made a scholarship award to UNCW.

The LaQue research center was recently realigned to operate as a separate company within the Inco family of companies. The center, which has facilities at Wrightsville Beach and Kure Beach, is recognized worldwide for marine corrosion research and testing and for its record of resolving research and engineering problems related to saltwater corrosion.

Sullivan Receives Advance From Random House

Donna Holden
Features Editor

Dr. Sally Sullivan, professor in the English department, has received an advance for two books she has written. Hopefully these books will be published for the fall of 1984.

The first, a workbook entitled Helpbook For Student Writers, deals with common usage problems and shows students how to correct and analyze them.

The second book, a text entitled Writing For Life, is written with Sullivan's feeling that "writing is a way of coming alive; a way of living."

Both books, written for basic writing students, contain work from Sullivan's students in previous classes. Sullivan feels there is a need for both types of books. She wants to help students learn standard English usage, and since there are no other books like these on the market, Sullivan wants to help eliminate students' writing problems. Methods she has used in the past composition classes have been incorporated into these books.

These texts will be used in her composition classes here at UNCW upon publication.

ABC Correspondent Gregory To Speak

Karen Waddell

Staff Writer

The UNCW Communications Club is now in full swing and is making big plans for the fall semester. The Communications Club is a club for all students majoring in or considering majoring in communications. The club is sponsored by Dr. Betty Jo Welch and this year's officers are Suzy Cooley, president, Jill Kremer, vice-president, Virginia Loughlin, treasurer, and Kim Vaja, public relations chairman.

On September 27, UNCW will host a Communications

Day. The Communications Club, in conjunction with WWAY TV, channel 3, will bring ABC news correspondent Bettina Gregory to UNCW. Gregory who covers the Washington beat, will be speaking at a luncheon in the University Union which is open to all students. Also at the luncheon will be speakers from the various media in the Wilmington area and UNCW alumni members who majored in communications.

At 8 p.m. Bettina Gregory will be in Morton Hall auditorium to speak on the news media and there are tentative plans for a reception to follow. Gregory's speech should be enlightening not only for communications majors but for students of all disciplines as well. "Communications Day will be a fun-filled day for all majors and non-majors," says Cooley. "All participation will be greatly appreciated."

The group Spandau Ballet is at the vanguard of a musical movement in England referred to as "the new Romantics." Their new LP True is a pivotal example of the strengths and weaknesses of bands like Modern English, Naked Eyes, and the perennial romantics themselves, Roxy Music, to name a few. Dance music has always been a great dividing line for those of us into guitar dominated rock and heavy metal. The "New Romantics" have become a bridge to many because oft times the singing, arranging, and songwriting skills are so apparent we give in...to romance. Spandau Ballet is such a band. Recently, True was the number 1 song and album in England.

What happened to the angry, young mood in Britain? It does seem funny that a song with a snappy rhythm and tight arrangement like "Gold" (their current single at the top of the charts in England) with words like "always believe in your soul/ you got the power to know/ you're indestructible/ always believe in, because/ you are Gold..." can capture and mesmerize a generation usually of gloomy disposition in a land of scarce opportunity. Perhaps this vibrant optimism is a healthy reaction to the bleak, bitter tirades of so many of the punk-new wave bands. "You never really know just what you're giving til you're living in the Lifeline, so live and let live in love..." goes the repeat in the song "Lifeline," the LP's first single.

Songs of hope, faith, and love can be shared and are indeed by everyone! This is the real reason for the success of Spandau Ballet. It sure is fun and often noble to be an angry reactionary who believes wholeheartedly in changing the world...but gives us a break too in this hot summer. Spandau Ballet combines the lush yet simple lyricism of motown and disco with seamless arrangements that highlight a soaring lead vocalist not to mention a soulful backup ingredient. The results are much more rewarding than the slow bottom beat of most disco. I think of the philosophy of David Bowie when he touches off his latest LP with "Let's Dance."

Granted, many won't get off to the bright, lightness of Spandau Ballet. The guitar is sparse and funky acting as counterpoint rather than a lead instrument. The tempo of many of the songs are too consistent and programmed for dance. The big danger with bands like this is that summer hangover-syrup. It can get so sweet; it's corny. "Foundation" is corny. However, I don't think anyone can truly be against romance. Some wine and candlelight with a song like "True" and a member of the opposite sex will make for an unforgettable night of classic proportions.

Next week--Elvis Costello.

NURSING CHAMPS

All Students Pass State Exam

by Debbie Connly
Journalism Contributor

For the third successive year, every UNCW nursing student who took the Licensing Exam for Registered Nurses has passed.

Dr. Marlene Rosenkotter, Chairman of the Nursing Department, attributes the 100 percent passing rate to the combined efforts of both the students and faculty.

Of the 16 schools in the UNC system, only UNCW and Winston Salem State had perfect passing rates. UNCW passed 29 out of 29, and Winston Salem State 8 out of 8.

UNCW is the only two-year Associate Degree program in Nancy Haddock, Director of the Associate Degree program, said that two years ago, only two other schools had a 100 percent passing rate on the Nursing Boards. Both of them were two-year institutions. Last year, nine other schools had perfect passing rates. The results from other schools this year have not been completed.

In addition to the real team effort put forth by both faculty and students, Mrs Haddock also attributed "good clinical experience at New Hanover Hospital" as contributing to UNCW's perfect success rate of the last three years.

Expert To Address Coastal Problems

Courtesy of
UNCW News Bureau

Internationally known coastal ecologist Dr. Armando A. de la Cruz has been appointed to the Foundation Visiting Distinguished Professorship at The University of North Carolina at Wilmington for the 1983-84 academic year.

To introduce him to the university community and Wilmington area residents, the UNCW department of biological sciences is presenting de la Cruz in a lecture at 8 p.m., Monday, Sept. 26, in room 100 of the University Union on campus. A reception will follow the talk. The public is invited to attend the lecture and reception.

Title of his lecture is "Spoiled Landscapes, Waning Wetlands and Troubled Waters." He will address environmental awareness from a historical perspective and discuss the predicaments of humankind relative to environmental issues.

De la Cruz is the first scientist to hold the Foundation Distinguished Professorship since it was established by the UNCW Foundation in 1980. Previous recipients include actress Jean Muir (1982-83) and classical guitarist Michael Lorimer (1980-81, 1981-82), both in the creative arts department.

Dr. James F. Merritt, associate professor and chairman of the biological sciences department, commented that this is "an excellent opportunity for undergraduate and graduate students to interact with an internationally recognized scientist in the field of wetlands ecology."

"This affords students an opportunity to have ideas that they are studying presented from a national and international perspective. We are all very excited and pleased that he was able to join us and look forward to seminar presentations and other types of interactions between de la Cruz, other UNCW departments, and the community," Merritt said.

Known around the world and in the United States for his estuarine research, de la Cruz has applied his research skills to problems that affect people along the coasts in both the developed and undeveloped world. In addition, he has worked with chemists on the pharmaceutical production of pulpwood.

His work on coastal ecosystems of the United States has expanded to encompass wetland values and uses in tropical countries in Africa, Southeast Asia, and the Caribbean.

His specific area of research includes ecology of coastal marshes and mangrove tidelands, limnology of reservoirs and wetlands, fate and effects of biocides in ecosystems, and general environmental management.

Letter To The Seniors From Class President

A UNCW first, a meeting of the senior class, has been scheduled to discuss commencement 1984, and will be held in room 100 of the Student Union on Wednesday, September 28, at 5 p.m.

Senior class president, Sankey Blanton, requests all interested seniors who wish an input in planning the May 1984 ceremony attend this organizational meeting.

"There are many reasons to review the present commencement format and consider changes," said Blanton.

"For one thing, the gym is now air conditioned, and most justifications for the current routine were based on having a quick ceremony before the heat of the day," Blanton explained.

According to President Blanton, most graduates want to be handed their diploma by the chancellor as their name is announced by their dean of college. "This is especially nice for all the relatives with zoom lens cameras," said Blanton.

Commencement next year is expected to include about 700 graduating seniors and 30 masters candidates. Ceremonies in past years had various groups announced en masse and pronounced graduated by the chancellor. Many alumni have expressed feelings that this was the last administrative burden before they could leave.

"Most seniors don't realize that their hallowed notions about grabbing the ole' sheepskin may not be honored at UNC-Wonderful," said Blanton. "If a lot of the hopefuls get together soon enough to express their desires for an appropriate recognition ceremony, there is a good chance the administration will cooperate."

The meeting on Wednesday, September 28, is a first step in the planning process. An explanation of the graduation fee ($30), discussion of the present commencement routine, and various improvement ideas will be presented.

"Every November, the chancellor appoints a committee to plan the commencement program," said Blanton. "With any luck, this year's seniors will be prepared to make their voices heard."

Reporter Speaks

Steep Fee For Lack Of Space

Parking at UNCW has gone from bad to intolerable. The forty dollars required for a parking sticker not only does nothing to insure a parking space within close proximity of classes, does nothing to insure parking on campus!

Case in point: 11 o'clock class in the Social Sciences building. No parking is available in the lot adjacent to that building, neither is there parking available in Morton parking lot, nor the physics parking lot, nor the cafeteria parking lot, nor the parking lot across from the Marine Science building. Result: late for class after having to park in the lot closest to Kenan Auditorium.

The problem has grown to the point where people are forced to wait in the center of the lots for spaces to open. This practice, while being annoying, is also a safety hazard. Cars are parked in the spaces, in the center of the lot, while other cars are moving around them. All of which causes confusion, which could lead to an accident.

The only answer seems to be additional parking, perhaps in the area between the Social Science building and the Marine Science building. After all, for $40.00 we deserve better.

"The cop was just about to tear up the ticket when Marmaduke popped bubble gum in his face!"

Stillpoint

by Bob Haywood

Last week I used the image of our world as a "global village" to point to the interconnectedness of all of our human family and the interdependence of all of our dreams and goals.

Now let me point to the only energy source that is sufficient for acting out our interconnected state. It is compassion. Compassion is the caring energy that flows out of the discovery of the mutual destiny of our human family. It is not pity or sympathy, both of which connote an "us" against or for "them"; but a force based on recognition that our neighbors across the globe are persons who share their humanity "with" you. Across all barriers of land language, wealth and poverty, knowledge and ignorance, we are still one, created from the same dust, subject to the same laws and destined for the same end.

As Henri Nouwen has noted, "in the expression of the oppressed I recognize my own hands which speak of powerlessness and helplessness. His flesh is my flesh, his blood is my blood, his pain is my pain and his smile is my smile. There is nothing in me that he would find strange, and there is nothing in him that I would not recognize. In my heart I know his yearning for love, and down to my entrails I can feel his cruelty. In his eyes I see my plea for forgiveness and in his hardened frown I see my refusal.

When he murders I know that I too could have done that and when he gives birth I know that I am capable of doing that as well. In the depths of my being I have met my fellow man with whom nothing is strange, neither love nor hate, nor life, nor death." Such is the sense of connection, "with" that births compassion.

And compassion is in trouble. Our global, even our personal relationships are often characterized by competition, hostility, suspicion and envy rather than compassion. We are all victims and are dying from lack of compassion, for, in living without compassion we are surrendering our humanity together. To be compassionate, as Matthew

Fox notes, "is to incorporate one's own fullest energies with cosmic ones into the twin tasks of relieving the pain of fellow creatures by way of justice-making and celebrating existence, time and space that all creatures share as a gift from the only One who is fully Compassionate."

Seek compassion. Your well-being and our future depend on it.

Blind Students Dispel Stereotypes

Sherry Johnson
Journalism Contributor

Everyone who attends a University has to adjust to a new environment. These adjustments include becoming familiar with the layout of the campus, locating classrooms, and meeting new people. For Barbara Jones and Leroy Harkley, these adjustments are challenges they must face each day as blind students on the campus of UNCW.

Barbara, a second semester sophomore, began her studies at UNCW in January of 1983. She was the salutatorian of her graduating class at West Brunswick High School.

Leroy, a senior, became a student at UNCW after transferring from Pitt Community College three years ago. He was a high school graduate from the Governor Morehead School. Although his major is social work, Leroy eventually wants to go to law school and become a sports lawyer.

Barbara became blind when she was an infant. Although there is the possibility that she has seen before, she has no recollections of ever seeing anything.

Leroy, on the other hand, has memories of flowers, trees, and animals he saw before going blind when he was approximately seven years old. His condition was caused by a bad case of cataracts and glaucoma.

Barbara and Leroy chose to attend UNCW after they heard many good things about the university. Both agree that the greatest frustration they face on campus concerns their acceptance as a "normal" person.

"What I find most frustrating are not my problems in themselves, but how some individuals perceive blind people in general. Blind people are like anyone else. We just don't have our eyesight," Barbara said.

She is quick to emphasize that most people at UNCW are friendly. She continues, "My ultimate goal is to be included in the group like everyone else, and on this campus I think I have."

Leroy agrees, "There are many stereotypes and misconceptions about blind people. I want society to see me as a 'normal' person. That's what I am. Once I start talking to people, they feel more relaxed and comfortable. They see that I am a normal person."

campus from a mobility instructor. This is a person who is trained to help visually impaired people become familiar with their surroundings. It only took these two determined students a few days of instruction before they were on their way to class with no help.

Barbara and Leroy have tape recorders that accompany them to all of their classes. After class the students return to their rooms with the lectures recorded on tape. Barbara and Leroy transcribe the main ideas into a notebook using the braille system.

Premed Meeting Planned

A meeting of students in the premedical sciences curricula is scheduled for Thursday, September 22, at 7:00 p.m., in the first floor lecture room of the Chemistry-Physics Building (C114). Plans for problem sessions to help prepare students for the MCAT and DCAT exams will be discussed, as well as other aspects of the premedical sciences advising program.

All students interested in medicine or dentistry are invited to attend.

Music Professors To Perform

A selection of music by Ives, Bach, Paganini and Franck will be presented in concert for violin and piano at 8 p.m., Friday, Sept. 23, in Kenan Auditorium on the campus of The University of North Carolina at Wilmington. Admission is free and the public is invited.

Performers will be Dr. James Gardner, assistant professor of music, on violin, and Dr. Sherrill Martin, associate professor of music, on piano. They are both on the faculty at UNCW.

Their program will include the Sonata No. 4 for Violin and Piano: Children's Day at the Camp Meeting, by Charles Ives; Chaconne from D Minor Partita by Johann Sebastian Bach; Caprice No. 24 by Nicolo Paganini; and Sonata for Violin and Piano by Cesar Franck.

Gardner, who has been on the UNCW music faculty since 1980, received the doctor of musical arts degree specializing in church music from Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary in Fort Worth, Texas, and also studied violin at North Texas State University at Denton as part of the D.M.A. degree. His educational background also includes a master of music from Southwestern Seminary and a bachelor's degree in music from Oklahoma City University, specializing in violin performance.

Wilmington audiences have seen him perform with the UNCW Community Orchestra where he has served as concertmaster since 1980. He played with the Fort Worth Symphony Orchestra from 1975-1980.

Martin holds degrees from the University of Alabama and the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. In addition to performance and research, Martin has been active as a leader at the local, state, and national level in the Music Teachers National Association.

She is a frequent recitalist and chamber musician of organ, harpsichord, and piano. Last season, she presented several concerts for duo-pianist, featuring as her partner, Dr. Richard Deas, professor of music at UNCW.

Hawks Win Volleyball Match

by George Walker
Staff Writer

Making few unforced errors and dominating the net, the Seahawk Volleyball team swept a tri-match in Hanover Hall Friday night.

UNCW's first match against High Point was its most spirited so far. High Point Coach Nancy Little protested the match, claiming the net was two inches too high.

The action on the court was just as intense, with the Seahawks pulling away midway through the first game. Kim Arthur and Bonnie Whitaker used their height to make numerous spikes while Pam Owen and Judy Bender complemented them with nifty defensive play.

After wins of 15-10 and 15-9, Coach Jackie Bartlett was pleased. "Our four seniors give us experience that we have never had. High Point was nationally ranked last year and won the District Championships."

was more low key. Junior Sara Womble led the Seahawks to a quick 15-7, 15-7 victory.

"We really don't have one star this year, everyone contributes," commented Coach Bartlett.

June Benton, Mollie Odom, and Kay Baker made key plays in the win. Stephanie Wall, Anne Wilson, Martha Byrd, and Kelli Braunbach contributed heavily as the Hawks used their entire roster. The win raised the record to 6-2.

Golf Team Sets Record

by Beverly Moore

The UNCW women's golf team won the title of the Longwood College Golf Invitational.

The first day was very successful when the team scored a total of 310, 6 strokes ahead of Longwood. Also on Friday, Heidi Crossley, a UNCW player, shot a 73 with a hole in one on the par 3, seventeenth hole to tie with a player from Longwood for the individual lead.

The team maintained their lead on Saturday with a total of 634, which was nine strokes ahead of William and Mary.

Crossley was also tied in the lead on Saturday with a score of 151 and in second place on Sunday with an individual score of 225.

UNCW had a total of 941 for the three days and set a new record for the school on Sunday with a score of 307.

Anyone interested in playing Women's Soccer come out to Brooks Field Monday-Thursday at 4:00 p.m. A fall schedule is already completed and we open our season Saturday, September 24th at N.C. State against their newly formed Varsity squad. Also a trip to Florida is being arranged now.

Intramural Volleyball beginning sign-up will start September 19th and the deadline is September 30th. The managers meeting will be held October 4th. Sign up in the Intramural office, in the lobby of Hanover Gym. Ya'll come on out and play. Must have valid ID and a health card to play.

Corkball

Intramural Corkball will also be starting soon. The sign-up begins September 21st and the deadline is October 7th. The managers meeting will be held October 11th. Sign up in the Intramural office, in the lobby of Hanover Gym. Come out and join the fun. Must have valid ID and health card on file.

UNCW Beats UNC-CH

The UNCW Club Football team won its first home game in 3 years by defeating the UNC-Chapel Hill club 14-7, on Saturday, Sept. 17. The win ended an 11 game losing streak and brings the team to a total of 26 points offensively in two games. In the 20 games prior to this season the team only scored a total of 32 points.

The Seahawks took an early 6-0 lead on tailback John Odom's 80-yard dash. The Tarheels quickly struck back on a 60-yard pass play making the score 7-6 at halftime. The score remained in the Tarheels favor until early in the fourth quarter when Odom crashed in from the two yard line and Jay Tilghman hit receiver Tad Baucom for the two point conversion. The Seahawks then stopped a last minute drive by the UNC team when Baucom intercepted the ball near the UNCW goal-line. The club's next home game is Oct. 1 against Duke at 2:00 p.m.

Varsity Track Teams To Host Campbell

George Walker ran to a strong 8th place finish in the 12th Annual Pembroke Invitational Cross Country Meet, but inexperience on the part of the younger freshmen runners kept the team from finishing higher than 8th overall.

Covering the rolling 5-mile course in 26 minutes, 24 seconds, Walker finished nearly four minutes ahead of second and third plac Seahawks, freshmen Bob Nelson and John Leahy, who had identical times of 30:07. They placed 54th and 55th out of 90 runners.

"This team is really much better than they have shown themselves to be so far," said Coach Bill Atwill. "The freshmen are still learning how to race the longer college distances."

Rounding out the seven-man team were freshmen, Rick Olson and Chuck Luey, followed by senior, Bill Walters and sophomore, Dale Lee, who is coming back from injuries.

This Saturday, Sept. 24, both men and women varsity squads compete against Campbell University at home. The women's five kilometer will begin at 11 a.m., followed by the men's 10K at 11:30.

GENHEIM Fellowship. He is certified by the Ecological Society of America as a Senior Ecologist.

His research and teaching activities have resulted in the publication of four lab manuals, numerous reports, and over 90 scientific papers. His international travel has taken him to 30 countries for lectures, symposia, conferences, congresses, and research in Southeast Asia and the Caribbean.

His professional career has included positions in the Philippines and 13 years as an ecologist and professor of biological sciences at Mississippi State University. At MSU, he was awarded the MSU Faculty Outstanding Achievement Award for Research in 1979 and recently was presented the 1983 Outstanding Achievement Award from the University of the Philippines. He also received the MSU Sigma Xi

Research Award in 1975.

"Ecology encompasses many areas beyond pure science," he pointed out, noting that he plans involvement with other UNCW departments including chemistry, anthropology, and philosophy and religion. This broad aspect of his specialty makes him particularly attractive to groups in the Wilmington area who would like to learn about coastal ecology.

De la Cruz began his career doing basic ecological work of coastal marshes, "looking at how productive these areas are and the relationship of the productivity to the ecology of the wetlands, especially in reference to fisheries.

Summarizing his scientific interests, de la Cruz said he is "looking at the world's wetlands, to find out how they are being altered and at what rate, and what will be the long-term consequences of these alteration."

Radio Station Underway

Thirty-five interested students attended the first meeting of the Campus Radio Organization at the Student Union Tuesday. Jay Barnes, student representative for radio development said he was pleased with the turnout and urged students to give their support to the radio station.

The meeting concentrated on the immense organizational responsibilities now facing the station. Barnes repeatedly stressed the importance of student interest and participation needed to get the station on the air.

"It's not my organization," he said. "It belongs to the people who belong to it."

Barnes said top priority is to establish a charter with the Student Government Association. "Until we go on the air, we're just a club, not a radio station," Barnes explained.

The SGA has allocated funds to cover operational costs.

Also present at the meeting were Ray Yates and Scott Bluebond. Yates, who was active in early efforts to establish a radio station at UNCW, has since graduated but remains interested in the club.

Bluebond offers his assistance as faculty advisor, but stresses that students are capable of running the station themselves. He would eventually like to see the students in control with little or no interference from faculty or administration.

The station hopes to have 100 to 150 watts, enabling it to reach the entire Wilmington area including Wrightsville Beach. Since it will be operating as a non-commercial station, it will be free from the traditional confines of commercial radio, allowing students more freedom in operation.

The station plans to have offices set up soon. Until then, students wishing to get involved with the station can contact Susie Goodrum, secretary of the SGA, in room 200 of the University Union.

The Seahawk

The Seahawk now has several positions open to the public student body.

Please apply in person to The Seahawk office in room 205-E at the University Union between the hours of 8 and 12, Wednesday through Friday. If this time is not convenient for you then call to make and appointment. The number is 791-4330, ext. 2229.

Campus Postal Service Available

Angie Latta
Features Editor

Located between the post office and the snack bar in the new Student Union, the convenience of on-campus post office boxes is finally here!

Post office box keys can be picked up at the UNCW Station post office during regular hours (8:30-4:30 Monday-Friday).

The boxes are property of the U.S. Postal Service and are issued to students at no extra charge as long as the key to the box is returned. If the key is lost, a ten dollar "rekeying" fee is charged.

Students will keep the same box throughout their college career as long as they preregister and prepay each semester. Every student enrolled at the University is required to have a post office box, regardless of the number of enrolled hours. This enables the University to communicate with the entire student body.

The Postal attendants recommend that students check their boxes regularly—at least once a week. In addition to regular mail, the boxes will also be used for on-campus mail such as notices from faculty advisors, class schedules, tuition bills, registration and graduation information, and special event notices, just to name a few.

Grades will still be mailed to home addresses because they are sent out during breaks between semesters.

To ensure proper transport, all post office mail should be addressed as follows:

Student's Name
P.O. Box Number
UNCW Station
Wilmington, NC 28407

The new zip code (28407) and student box number must be listed or the mail received will be returned to the sender.

If any problems or questions arise, stop by or call the UNCW Station (extension 2182). The postal attendants are more than willing to help and the UNCW Students is primarily for students, so use your box!!

Areas For Study

Angie Latta
Features Editor

Library too crowded? Too much noise at the dorms? Too many distractions at home?

Then come to the University Union to study! The Union, especially for students, has many quiet, private places to study.

A large living room with deep comfortable chairs and individual tables serves as the main study area. For those who prefer complete quiet, the smaller enclosed study room beside the living room is perfect. This room has two couches and several tables and doors that can be closed to insure quietness.

Total privacy is available in several small conference rooms that can be reserved as long as no conferences and previous meetings are planned. To reserve the smaller rooms, call 791-4330 (extension 2833) between 7:30 and 4:30 weekdays. After 4:30 and on weekends, call extension 2841. These rooms are limited, so call early to make sure one can be reserved.

Now you have no excuse for bad grades....except Zack's, Red Dogs, The Mad Monk...

Cadets To Be Honored

Wilmington businessman Hugh MacRae will be guest speaker at the Fall Awards Ceremony of the ROTC detachment at The University of North Carolina at Wilmington. The event will be held at 3 p.m., Wednesday, Sept. 28, in room 100 of the University Union.

Cadets will be honored for their outstanding performance at Advanced Camp during the summer of 1983. Awards will also be presented for Distinguished Military Students, physical fitness, top 10 percent of graduating cadets, scholarships, and Deans List. Recondo badge will also be distributed.

Record Review

"Ooooh-Ooooh" begins the longing look of Elvis Costello and the Attractions with the release of the hit single "Everyday I Write The Book"; a song which threatens to finally put this band beyond mere cult status. Loaded with hooks and cemented together by the typewriter keyboard of pianist-arranger Steve Nieve this can't-miss 45 shows off the Motown influences to fine advantage. It also shows off just how fine a tunesmith and singer Elvis Costello has become with this, his 9th LP, Punch The Clock.

Never a workingman's band with a taste for sledgehammer power chords or lead guitar, Elvis and the Attractions were the first commercially viable new wave band signed by Stiff Records back in '76. My Aim Is True, the first album, immediately catapulted this band to stardom in Europe. Success, however, has not been that easy in the States. The only real Top 40 airplay was the song "Alison" and it took Linda Ronstadt to sing that one.

Image has always been the problem Elvis has had to face up to. Your typical rock band does not write a pop song in under 4 minutes by using every American influence available. Armed to his barbed teeth and prickly tongue with subtle ironies and deceptions (You thought the "...Book" was a nice love song!?) Elvis Costello has always had his way with a satiric phrase. In "Mouth Almighty" he shouts "I can't control my tongue" acknowledging his greatest weakness and his greatest strength at the same time. The cover of My Aim Is True gave a haughty wide angle pose of Elvis with the neck of a turkey and the in-your-face obnoxious attitude. In his college days, Elvis and his team of smart alecks won the G.E. College Bowl 5 times; so if you need to fight this dude, just punch him out because otherwise he'll talk circles around you.

Now after 9 LPs the neck has fleshed out and the song constructions have become a science. Often times words and music become one and the same as in the classical promenade that mirrors "The King of Thieves" with each entrance and exit. The tight catchy melodies sometimes propel these songs as if he had ripped off energy from a Judas Priest ("Element Within Her," "Love Went Mad") while the slower songs become social satire to the max like the touching "Shipbuilding".

Not for those of us who'd sooner blurt out a cuss word than try to string a few sentences together, I recommend all of Elvis Costello's albums to English majors and folks that like to read a good book. With Punch The Clock you just might find yourself humming through it.

Calendar Planned

UNCW students and faculty may be pleasantly surprised in November when they see some familiar faces in the limelight.

Grand Prix Modeling Agency is preparing a full color calendar with twelve ladies from UNCW and the New Hanover area clad in bikinis. This will give students (especially the guys) an opportunity to see a beautiful girl each month as well as an easy access to the day's date.

Techniques

Utilizing Japanese Management Techniques: This course will cover the various management techniques used by the Japanese to improve employee performance. Decision-making processes, life-time employment, management development and quality circles are some of the topics to be discussed. The course will be conducted by Dr. Stephen Harper from 7:00-10:00 p.m. on October 11, 1983. The fee is $20. Registration deadline: September 29, 1983.

Managerial Problem Solving: This one-night program to be held on October 12, 1983, will focus on the fundamental process of analyzing business problems and developing best workable courses of action. It is intended for present and prospective middle-level and first-line managers in any business or institutional function. It will be conducted by Dr. Charles W. West from 7:00-10:00 p.m. The fee is $20 per participant and the registration deadline is September 30, 1983.

Tax Planning For Real Estate Investors With Emphasis on Tax Shelters: This seminar will acquaint investors with the fundamentals of the real estate investment decision and the impact of taxes on that decision. Tax shelters and taxation influences on the acquisition, operation, and disposition of real estate investments will be discussed. Dr. Ronald E. Copley will conduct the seminar. It is a two-evening event, and it will be offered twice: Session no. 1: Tuesday and Thursday, Sept. 27 & 29, 1983, 7:00-10:00 p.m. Registration deadline: Sept. 20, 1983. Session no. 2: Monday and Wednesday, Oct. 10 & 12, 1983. Register by Oct. 3, 1983. The fee for either session is $50 including materials.

Surf Club Active; Support Encouraged

Bryan Tracy
Journalism Contributor

The UNCW Surf Club has existed for several years on campus, but the 1983-84 year will only be the third year the club has been formally organized. Last year the club had over 40 active members.

Fund raisers, such as selling T-shirts and showing movies are a part of the club's function, however, the Surf Club's primary emphasis is in competitive surfing.

This year's schedule includes a series of intra-club contests to determine initial team rankings. The contests have been planned against numerous other colleges including NCSU and the Florida Institute of Technology.

Competitive and non-competitive surfers are encouraged to attend the bi-weekly Thursday evening meetings at the Union or contact any of the officers for further information.

Recreation Majors Honored

The American Heart Association presented the Recreation Majors Association with a certificate of recognition during their first meeting, September 7.

They were honored for assisting the New Hanover County branch of the AHA in a fund-raising effort last spring.

Many recreation majors took time off from study during finals to address and stuff envelopes, look up zip codes, work other seemingly menial tasks.

The successful campaign raised funds for research into the prevention and treatment of cardiovascular disease.

Bike-In To Benefit UNCW

Are you a bicyclist who has been hit by a car? Has your bike ever been stolen? And aren't you tired of chaining your bike up against a tree because there are not enough bike racks available?

Well, the UNCW Recreation Majors Association is trying to help solve some of the problems. The group is sponsoring a "Bike-In" at noon, Wednesday, Sept. 28, in front of the University Union.

"Bike-In" events include a bike ride around campus along a roped-off course, bike inspections, and an opportunity to register bikes with the campus police and the City of Wilmington (bike registration helps the police in recovering stolen bicycles and returning them to the rightful owners).

Also, individuals have an opportunity to win a Coastline Cruiser bicycle by purchasing a $1.00 raffle ticket from a recreation major. Drawing of the $168.00 bicycle furnished by Winter Park Bicycles, will be held at the "Bike-In" at noon.

All proceeds will go to the UNCW Student Government Association to be used for bicycling projects, facilities, and activities.

The event is being sponsored in conjunction with the Governor's Outdoors Events program, the first of which is designed to promote bicycling in North Carolina.

Campus Police On The Alert

The UNCW Campus Police is comprised of twelve sworn officers and nineteen student security personnel. The sworn officers are commissioned under Article 74A of the North Carolina General Statute which gives them the same powers as a county and municipal police officer while on campus. A minimum of 260 hours of police related training is required for this commission. Twenty-four hour patrol is provided by these officers, augmented by student security, with radio communication at all times.

In addition to providing security, the Campus Police offers several services to the student population. The services include an escort service, films and lectures on crime awareness and prevention, Operation ID, bicycle registration, and safety tips. All of these services are free of charge and students are urged to participate.

grams throughout North Carolina and to promote bicycle riding as a family activity.

The UNCW Recreation Association will sponsor a Bike-In to be staged at the end of September. In this event bikers are encouraged to bike in to UNCW, where they will ride along a mapped out course through the campus. Other events taking place at the Bike-In include a bicycle registration, the organization of a bike club, and also a bike raffle.

Bicyclists are encouraged to come to UNCW and bike for the fun of it, which will show their support of bicycling as a healthy and enjoyable recreation.

Internships Available

One internship program offered at UNCW is through the Division of Communications.

The two major categories of communications internships, public relations internships supervised by Dr. Betty Jo Welch, and mass media internships supervised by Mr. Scott Bluebond, are available to students who are of junior or senior standing, have a 2.5 or better G.P.A., and have taken at least one mass media course.

Any students interested in a communications internship for the spring semester may pick up an application in room 208 in Kenan Hall.

The Leadership Development Program sponsored by the Cameron School of Business Administration will hold its organizational meeting on September 29, at 12:30 in the University Center, Room 201. This program is designed to help business students develop their leadership skills. Sophomore Business students who are interested in participating in this challenging new program should contact Professors McInerney or Harper and plan to attend this meeting.

Barbara and Leroy use their tapes and braille notes to study for tests. Although there are various methods of test-taking for Barbara and Leroy, both students respond to test questions orally. These answers are given to the professor or are received by fellow students who record the answers on paper to be graded by the teacher.

Although their study habits are time consuming, Barbara and Leroy do find time for recreation and relaxation. Since Barbara has had nine years of piano lessons, seven years of violin, and two years of voice training, music fills much of her free time. When not enjoying this form of entertainment, she likes to read the Reader's Digest, which is available in braille. She also loves to rollerskate.

Leroy is an avid sports fan. Although he does not prefer one sport over another, he enjoys playing basketball. Another pastime of Leroy's is playing cards with his friends. He has a regular set of cards in which he has identified in braille on their corners. Leroy also has an interest in jazz music and is learning how to play the guitar.

Barbara and Leroy are enjoying the achievements and friends they have made at UNCW. Both have accepted their blindness and are willing to share their experiences with fellow students.

"I like people to ask me about my blindness. By talking to them, I can help inform them about my condition," Leroy said. Barbara is just as eager to inform the public of an impairment that will remain with her. "Getting my eyesight back will not be a dream that will become a reality tomorrow," she explained.

A regional meeting for students interested in learning more about career opportunities in optometry and special low tuition rates in certain optometry schools is scheduled for Thursday, September 29, at 3:00 p.m. in Chemistry-Physics 114. A film on optometry will be shown, and optometrists will be available for discussion. Refreshments will be served. All interested students are invited to attend.

Police Bust Bikes

Kevin Coughlin
Staff Writer

Park your car illegally and you will probably end up with a ticket. But chain your bike where it's not supposed to be and it might not be there when you get back. Campus police are cracking down on bicycles locked up to anything other than a bike rack. Part of the reason is that ramps and other access areas for the handicapped are often blocked by illegally parked bikes, explained Jackie Murray of the Campus Police office.

Bicycles chained or locked to railings are cut free with a boltcutter and taken to the UNCW police office. A charge of $2.00 is levied for return of the bike, not to mention the cost of a new lock.

Murray said most students have been cooperative and understanding of the reasons behind the crackdown. In front of the Student Union last week, students had to move a stack of bicycles so a person in a wheelchair could get by.

Some students have complained, however, that bicycles wouldn't be parked in unauthorized areas if there were enough racks around.

Police remove bikes obstructing walk-ways and handicap ramps.

Employment Office Now In Student Union

Lorna Gold
News Editor

In an effort to make its services more accessible to students, the Career Planning and Placement Center has moved to Room 106 in the University Union.

According to Sandra Harkin, director of the Center, the old office facilities in Alderman were not large enough to accommodate the expanding services of the Center.

The new location includes a multi-purpose room, three recruiting rooms, additional office space, and a career resource center.

The Career Resource Center and Library offer occupational and career literature from various companies, and graduate information for further study. Material on interviewing techniques and job-hunting is also available.

The move has also enabled the Center to add the new Job Location and Development Program, headed by Tom Field. This service locates jobs and internships for interested undergraduates.

According to Harkin, the transition from "office" to "Center" will allow for more individualized departments. The new location is also more convenient for students.

"We are now getting more students in because it is easier for students to stop in between classes," Mrs. Harkin said.

Since it was first established in 1976, approximately 3000 students and alumni have registered with the Career Planning and Placement Center.

Diving Instructor To Lecture On Safety

UNCW News Bureau

Dick Rutkowski, deputy diving coordinator for the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, will present a talk on emergency management of diving accidents at 7:30 p.m., Thursday, October 6, at UNCW's Randall Library Auditorium.

Rutkowski is being brought to campus by Frank Chapman, science coordinator for the NOAA-funded National Undersea Program at UNCW that is responsible for the Research Vessel Seahawk's scientific diving missions.

Chapman, who also teaches SCUBA diving courses at UNCW, explained that more and more people are taking small boats out into the ocean to make dives of 80-100 foot depths. "Charter boats are also increasingly available for deep dives," he said.

"Already there has been one serious diving accident off Wrightsville Beach. People don't know enough about diving safety or how to deal with accidents. That's why we're bringing Dick Rutowski to talk about how to prevent and handle diving accidents should they occur," Chapman said.

Among his awards is the National Association of Underwater Instructors Public Service Award in 1977 and 1982 for his work in South Florida and nationally in the field of diving accident management.

Rutkowski is a diver and a member of the NOAA Diving Safety Board which is responsible for making rules and regulations pertaining to NOAA diving safety. He also maintains and operates recompression chambers and trains NOAA hyperbaric chamber personnel, and conducts numerous seminars and special training programs around the country.

He also authored the "Diving Accident Management Manual," a copy of which will be given to all attending the meeting. He also coordinated and directed a 20 minute film about diving accident management which is used as a guideline to recognize, stabilize, and administer first aid and evacuate diving accident victims into an hyperbaric trauma network.

Nursing Gift

At 10 a.m., Friday September 30, a major event in the development of the UNCW four-year school of nursing will occur. Lt. Gen. George S. Boylan (USAF ret.) president of Babies Hospital, Inc., will present to Chancellor William H. Wagoner the first installment of the Foundation's $200,000.00 gift announced last spring. You are cordially invited to attend the presentation in the second floor Board Room of Alderman Hall.

Gen. Boylan and other members of the foundation board are expected to be on hand for the presentation.

Triathlon

Dave Hodge, a UNCW senior, placed a close second in the Fifth Annual Pepsi Triathlon, Sunday, Sept. 25. Hodge, 24, finished the 1 1/4-mile swim, 25-mile bicycle ride, and 9.3-mile run in 2 hours, 31 minutes, 39 seconds. He was just 1 minute, 17 seconds behind USMC Major, Vic Kelly.

After placing in the top 20 in last year's Pepsi Triathlon, Hodge trained seriously for several months to prepare for this year's competition.

More than 600 competitors jumped into Banks Channel at Wrightsville Beach early Sunday morning to begin the first leg of the race, the 1.4 mile swim. Leaving the water at Harbor Island, the contestants were faced with a 25-mile cycle ride, followed by the 9.3-mile run.

Safety instructors from the YMCA and the Wilmington Swim Club supervised the swimming. The Wilmington Road Runner and the Cape Fear Cyclists provided the runners with aid and water stations during the cycling and running events.

Editorial

The Seahawk is a weekly newspaper put out by the students at UNCW and paid for with student fees. The purpose of this newspaper is to print news that relates in some way to the campus community. Feature articles and news related articles are also a part of this paper.

However, public announcements are a service of The Seahawk and indeed NOT the purpose of the paper. It should be understood that not all announcements can be printed due to a lack of space, that no department or department head has priority over another and that The Seahawk staff has the responsibility to fill the paper with as much news as possible.

Announcements are printed when there is space available and when the news, features and sports departments have covered all current issues.

We gratefully encourage people to continue to submit announcements but at the same time it should be acknowledged that the editorial board, which is made up of students, discusses what to print with the final decision being made by the editor.

Stillpoint

by Bob Haywood

Several years ago I rappelled down a cliff on the side of a mountain in Colorado. In my group I was last over the edge because I was afraid. In that fear, I backed over the edge with white knuckled fists, grasping the rope so hard that I moved only inches at a time. Once over the edge, the fear disappeared and exhilaration took over, allowing me to loosen my grip and repel in great bouncing arcs down the mountain.

Clenched fists and gentle grasps—another image for daily life. You and I live in a time that sends the message loud and clear—“grab all the gusto you can get” and hang on. And hang on we do. We all have self concepts that often include some negative feelings based on past struggles and turmoils in our lives. How we cling to those feelings! “That’s just the way I am,” and we hang on tightly, unwilling to let the past go, unwilling to grow, living a clenched-fisted present characterized by “I can’t.” We find a special friend, the one with whom we can be fully ourselves (warts and all) and share our deepest yearnings. But, filled with fear of losing them, we clasp them ever so tightly with increased expectations and control, and the relationship is smothered in our white-knuckled grasp. Still again, we have other good friends who, on occasion, speak a harsh word or do not perform as we expect so that we are offended. How tightly we cling to the offense; holding it closely, tightly, and nurturing it into full blown resentment and anger. Even as we dream into our futures, we decide what we must become to be successful; what things we must have to be comfortable; what lifestyle we must attain for happiness. We grasp those dreams to our souls and instead of enlivening our studies and helping us dance into our hope-filled future, our dreams become compulsions, filling us with anxiety and dread lest we do not attain. So we hang on, hold tight, sit tight, and live in to day with clenched fists. Some learn to live with gentler grasps; willing to let go of an insecure past and risk living in some new ways; willing to allow those dearest to us freedoms to be and become in their own ways; willing to give up anger and jealousy and see my role in our misunderstanding; willing to let dreams be dreams and live into our future with trust and openness. I am one who tends to grip my job too tightly, filling my days with oughts and shoulds and lists of things I must do. It’s the “American Way!” But I am learning and anyone can learn to loosen our grip so that our journey contains less demand and anxiety and excelleration, more openness, more gentleness.

Look at the “musts,” “have tos,” and “can’ts” in your life, the ones you clasp to yourself and the ones you press on others through expectations. Be aware of all the tightness in you life from tight schedules to tight shoulders. Awareness led me to solitude and prayer. Wherever it leads you, I wish you a day held, oh, so very gently.

Freeman Presents "The Contract"

Kelly Duff
Journalism Contributor

Nathan Freeman, of the drama department, along with the Wilmington Actors Association presented The Contract during the weekend of the 16th-18th in Kenan Auditorium. The Actor's Association is pleased with the outcome of the play which received favorable reviews from the Wilmington Star.

The plot presented a man caught up in a struggle between purpose and belief, right and wrong. Performances have been given in New York, Off-broadway, high school, and a church of Wilmington.

Nathan Freeman, producer, director, and writer of the script played the minister. Jean Jones, UNCW sophomore, portrayed Jesus Christ, while Nathan's wife played Gem, the angel. Burt Freeman sponsored the show.

New Faculty

New to the Communications Department, Mr. Frank Trimble is now an instructor and coach for the forensics team.

Frank Trimble's major field of study was Organizational Communications and his minor was concerned with both Oral Interpretation and Theater.

Originally from Youngstown, Ohio, he attended Youngstown State University. After two years he transferred to Southern Illinois University where he received both his B.S. and M.S. degrees and taught as a graduate student.

Trimble is taking Dr. Bob Rosenthal's place as the forensics coach. He realizes that with the team's past record, he will have the reputation of the University to uphold. With the cooperation of the returning team members, he hopes to maintain the team's previous performance level and possibly gain greater exposure for the University at the National Forensics Tournament.

McGuire For Bids Council

"Preservation and Progress" is the slogan being used by UNCW's Phillip McGuire in his bid for one of the three contested seats on Wilmington's City Council.

McGuire, a history professor in his sixth year at UNCW, is one of the ten people vying for the Council seats.

In his first attempt at a public office, McGuire hopes to fulfill the City Council's need for forceful councilmen to represent the people.

McGuire's credentials include being a discussant at a Wilmington Town Meeting on Offender Aid and Restoration and an elected official to the Executive Board of Directors of the New Hanover County Branch of the NAACP.

A ten point program of "Progress and Preservation" outlines McGuire's proposals. Some of the proposals are: limited annexation; required public meetings by elected officials; and legislation making it easier for young, responsible working men and women to secure credit.

According to McGuire, "It is time for all of us to shake off the embarrassing yoke of seeing some areas of the city in bright, appealing condition while, within five minutes, one is confronted with drab and dilapidated buildings lining major arteries."

Bikes are a common mode of transportation on the UNCW campus.

Cycling Benefits Pockets and Legs

Cindie Sherfield
Journalism Contributor

Bicycles can be seen almost as often as students on campus this year. Whether on their way to class, running errands, or simply out for some exercise, bikers are everywhere.

There are several advantages to riding bikes as opposed to driving a car. Saving money is the biggest advantage. If you live close enough to campus to ride a bike from home, lots of money can be saved on gas, not to mention the $40.00 parking sticker fee.

Parking spaces are scarce unless you get here a six a.m. With a bicycle, parking spaces are no problem...just pedal up to the necessary building and lock the bike up to any one of the numerous bike racks right outside the door. Walking to class is no longer a problem, since the bicycles can be ridden right up to the building. For students with a long haul between classes and ten minutes to get where they're going, a bicycle gets there much quicker.

And, of course, cycling keeps the legs in shape much more effectively than the gas pedal of the car!

The plastic cards for permanent IDs are now in . IDs are being made between the hours of 8:30-10:30 and 2:30-4:30 in the University Union, room 214. Bring your temporary ID with you when you come to get your permanent one made.

September 1983

The Delta Tau Delta fraternity Little Sisters welcome you back to UNC by the sea. I'm sure everyone had an eventful summer and I know that this year will be likewise, especially if you are a Delta female. Already, we have experienced several rush activities and there are plans for a few more. All announcements about our future activities will be posted in the Student Union.

To recap on last year, the Little Sisters raffled off an AM/FM walkman radio. Also four new members were granted active sistership; Kim Yates, Susan Ross, Yvonne Williams and Kim Croom. They performed a community service at Grotchens Nursing Home and also helped with the raffle of the walkman.

To get back to the present, our supervisor, Dr. Betty Jo Welch, has recently recieved the Teaching Excellence Award here at UNC-W for 1983. Now she sets the example as to the power of a woman since she is the first female to be honored with this award. Not only do we Delta Sisters appreciate her leadership, we say thanks for being a professor with our University.

The new officers for the 83-84 year are as follows:
President: Val Skipper
Vice President: Joy Dawn
Treasurer: Silvia Lupo, assistant
Bonnie Council
Recording Secretary: Betsy Sowers

Corresponding Secretary: Kim Croom

Rush Chairmen: Paula Pipkin, Janis Bino and Kim Yates

Sergeant at arms: Kim Croom

The Delta Little Sisters will be rushing during the month of September so look for the announcements in the Student Union. It's going to be a great year!!!

"Our American Cousin" To Be Presented

Donna Holden
Features Editor

UNCW is proud to join Thalian Hall in the celebration of the one hundred twenty-fifth anniversary of its opening.

"Our American Cousin," a play being presented by the Creative Arts Department, premiered in New York City on October 15th, 1858, so it too is celebrating its one hundred and twenty-fifth anniversary.

President Lincoln was watching Laura Keane perform this play by Tom Taylor at Ford's Theatre when he was assassinated.

Terry Theodore, the director, calls it "one of the most popular comedies in America during the nineteenth century. It is a fast-paced, boisterous evening of fun and work that makes for a fine enjoyment."

The play, a lively comedy, is about a gentleman, Sir Edward (Les Patternotte) who is in debt to a villain, Coyle (Mark Simms.) Edward's cousin from America, Asa Trenchard (Andrew Dyer), arrives to save Sir Edward from bankruptcy.

The plot revolves around each character's individual habits, which makes the play amusing.

Julian Shaw, Hope Hill, and Travis Parker, actors in the play, all feel they are "enjoying working on the show."

Paul Sebastian (Harry Vernon) said, "It's gonna be a good show...actors have put forth their best efforts. Everyone has really grown as actors, and the performance will show it."

"I'm glad I got in the show. I enjoy reacting with other people and meeting other actors," stated Rod Flinchum who plays Captain DeBoots.

Mark Simms, who plays the villain Coyle, said, "It's an enjoyable cast to work with...an enjoyable show...Light, a lot of fun. People of all ages will enjoy it."

Performances of "Our American Cousin" will be presented on October 6, 7, 8 at 8:00 p.m. in Kenan Auditorium. Tickets are $4.00 for adults and $1.00 for students and children.

Students who have not been to the University Post Office and received a Post Office Box assignment will be automatically assigned a box by the computer the latter part of September. All University mail, including Spring tuition bills, will be placed in these boxes. It is the student's responsibility to check these boxes for pertinent information throughout the entire year.

English Club Poetry Contest

The English Club is sponsoring this year's Fall Poetry Contest. Open to the whole student body, we encourage entries from all aspects of our community- not just English Majors.

The limit is three "fresh" poems per person, writers should not place their names on any works. Poems should be left with a filled-in information form attached to each entry at the Reserve Reading Desk in the library.

The deadline is Friday, Oct. seventh at 5:00 p.m. There are only two weeks left so enter them soon. The finalists can have their works published in the Atlantis if they so desire. Thanks to the Jessie Rehder Memorial Fund, there is a $50 first prize and prizes for second and third places. The top ten entries will automatically be submitted to the Atlantis for review.

The English Club also sponsors a weekly Film Festival featuring classics of variety and interest. Watch for dates and places of showing. Dr. James McGowan opened the Philosophy and Religion Department's Fall Lecture Series last Thursday evening with a demanding question, "Of Gods and Men: Who Created Whom?" The seven-lecture series is planned to investigate the Faces of God in Western Tradition and will be presented on Thursday evenings at 8:00 p.m. in King Auditorium.

As if in tribute to the main figures of the series, the small auditorium was filled to capacity by student, faculty and members of the larger community which UNCW serves.

Dr. Schmid explained the annual nature of the lecture series as a contribution to public dialogue on matters concerning Western philosophical traditions.

He also enlightened the audience on the development of this year's series as an extension of the 1981 discussion on "Humanism".

Dr. McGowan, introduced as the 'Fireman' of the University, gave a typical Sunday definition of God-The-Magician and presented some light-hearted descriptions of his son's reactions to his topic. He followed with a description of 20th century man as the recipient of centuries of questioning and searching on the concepts of God, Human and Universe.

The main thrust of Dr. McGowan's presentation centered on the following contradicting questions. "Is it possible that the word 'God' really does refer to some entity that creates and sustains the Universe? Or...is it possible that humans have actually conjured up this God image?"

Dr. McGowan, describing humans as time-limited, life/death beings; declared that it was hard to imagine existence in the space-time continuum without a God Creator. He presented, however, an imaginative human nature as capable of inventing an all powerful God concept as the plausible explanation for natural phenomena.

Dr. McGowan, who received his Ph.D. in Philosophy in Belgium, encouraged the audience not to try to resolve the contradiction or seek an "ultimate truth"; but rather to learn to live with the paradox in a state of harmonious tension; retaining both possibilities in order to constantly fuel the search and dialogue. According to McGowan, humans need to have a recognition of their own limitations and their responsibility to foster both questions in order to be fully alive.

A lively question period followed Dr. McGowan's talk, but in the spirit of the intellectual, he deftly refused to answer anything concretely. The next lecture, scheduled for Thursday, September 29th, will feature Dr. Gerald Shinn on the topic of "Jahwen Ant The Gods and Goddesses of the Hebrews". This lecture will also be at 8:00 p.m. in King auditorium, and promises to be a standing room only crowd.

The Philosophy and Religion lecture series has been an annual presentation at UNCW since 1975. It is free of charge and open to the public. This year's series will run until November 10th. Due to the illness of one of the participants, only six more topics will be presented.

School Kids Record Review

Earlier this year a band from Ireland, U2, caught fire with their LP War followed by a highly successful tour. Borrowing many of its musical ideas from the psychedelic 60's, the lyrics were much more specific--an individual's perspective on war and love in strife-torn Ireland.

Another band from the British Isles (this time from Scotland) has released an LP similar in scope and style to that of War. Far from a mimicry; pressing the repeat of an echoplex and pulling off the guitar ambience of "The Edge", Big Country has come up with a sparkling debut with a sound of confidence all their own. The album...The Crossing.

A shout and crashing drums begin the remarkable song "In A Big Country" seemingly from all of the 4 great directions. "So take that look out of here, it doesn't fit you...You can't stay here with every single hope you had shattered. In a big country dreams stay with you..." Dense, textured guitars featuring Elbow which evokes the Scottish moors with its traces of bagpipes and traditional dance melodies. Full of energy and enthusiasm, no single individual dominates Big Country. All share in the vocals. Preferring a chaotic, emotional sound which pricks the ears and by daring combination of rock and folk forms, Big Country readily identifies itself with the land and common people; desperation rising from all around. "Inwards" nervously tells "I pull everything inwards but everything's loose," "Chance" laments "Oh, Lord I never felt so low," yet the battle march of "Fields of Fire" proclaims boldly "the beating heart will never die." The "Storm" concludes the A side with a plea for peace and a realization that the fever of war gobbles up all hope.

Side 2 continues much too closely the electrified folk sound of Big Country as the intensity and purpose inherent initially begins to wane. The focus of the first two songs appears hazy and unsure. Producer Steve Lillywhite decides to give some much needed separation and solo space in "Close Action," a welcome reprieve after a tired drop into sameness. "Porrohman" beautifully ends this set with an unfamiliar pattern of guitar runs which build to a sinister vision of future and fate. It reaffirms my initial response that The Crossing is one of the most unusual and creative debuts from the Isles since U2. They just need a little more time.

Literary Magazine Accepting Submissions

Sue Vance
Journalism Contributor

Atlanta, the UNCW Literary-Art magazine, is a creative expression journal published biannually. Entering its fourteenth year of existence, Atlanta serves as an important literary and artistic outlet for UNCW students.

Atlanta is currently accepting submissions for the fall '83 issue, which will be released in early December. All UNCW students are encouraged to submit their creative work to be considered for publication.

Literary material accepted includes poetry, prose works, essays, and short stories. Art material considered for publication can be any size, any subject, and in any medium. Keep in mind, however, that all art work will be reproduced in black and white. Photography must also be black and white, unmatted, and free of dust spots.

Written material should be typed, double-spaced and titled. Since selections are made anonymously by the prose and poetry staffs, the author's name should not appear anywhere on the submission. Forms for this information are provided in the Atlanta office, and they must be filled out and attached to each submission.

Because of monetary limitations, there are space limitations. Poetry submissions are limited to five per student. Prose work, short story and essay submissions are limited to two per student. Art work and photography submissions are unlimited and will be returned after publication.

The deadline for submissions to Atlanta is Thursday, October sixth at 4:00 p.m. Submissions should be turned in to the Atlanta office, located in room 205 of the Student Union.

For further information about Atlanta, material submissions or working with staffs, please call Alan Johnson (392-7823), Susan Vance (762-3002), or Atlanta advisor, Professor Charles Fort (ext. 2329, Morton Hall, English Department).

Toplin Produces History Series

By Sharon Bounds
Staff Writer

Dr. Robert Toplin of UNCW's History Department is currently involved in some very exciting projects that may change the history teaching techniques throughout the nation.

Toplin's first film was aired on PBS in 1982. He is previously working on the second of this eight part slavery series: "A House Divided". It is about a free, black man kidnapped into slavery, a true story due to air in 1984.

Yet Toplin's big news is a nationwide 13-part "USA: History in Controversy" series. Toplin is Project Director/Producer to both projects, but this series has also involved most of UNCW's History department, including both faculty and students. They will do research and even interviews with people who can give live accounts of history.

The series will cover America's history from the civil war. Controversies will be presented to make the public aware of the existing arguments within interpreting history. "It's not just all stating facts. There are live controversies that the public needs to be aware of," states Toplin. This is one of two main goals in Toplin's project.

His second goal is to produce shows that will work as basic material of college courses. This will enable students to watch TV in the comfort of their own home and then have an examination, resulting in credit hours. Discussions will be held throughout the showings.

Sample tests, study guides, reading books, previews, and questionnaires will also be printed and made available to assist in a thorough understanding. A grant has been passed from Annenberg Project/Corporation for Broadcasting, for a pilot film. The one selected from the 13, entitled "Mr.

Wilson and the Great War", deals with questions such as "Was President Wilson responsible for the failure of the peace treaty after WWI?" and "Was Wilson too heavy-handed in denying the right of free speech during war years?"

UNCW becomes headquarters for this exciting technological advancement in education. It is a fantastic new format for bringing history to life and into the homes of America.

NO CIVILIAN BAND CAN MAKE YOU THIS OFFER.

If you're a musician who's serious about performing, you should take a serious look at the Army.

Army bands offer you an average of 40 performances a month. In everything from concerts to parades.

Army bands also offer you a chance to travel.

The Army has bands performing in Japan, Hawaii, Europe and all across America.

And Army bands offer you the chance to play with good musicians. Just to qualify, you have to be able to sight-read music you've never seen before and demonstrate several other musical skills.

It's a genuine, right-now, immediate opportunity.

Compare it to your civilian offers. Then write: Army Opportunities, P.O. Box 300, North Hollywood, CA 91603.

Soccer: The Seahawk soccer team finally found its scoring punch and snapped a four-game losing streak in the process this weekend in the Georgia State Invitational in Atlanta.

UNCW, which had been shutout three straight games, outshot host Georgia State on Saturday, 30-16, but still fell to the Panthers, 5-3. Rick Cantore, Mike Lawrence and Brad Dixon scored goals for the 'Hawks.

On Sunday, however, Coach Calvin Lane's squad recovered to defeat Emory, 3-0, behind Alberto Rodriguez's two goals and another by Lawrence.

"We played well in Atlanta and can hopefully put some victories together during October," Lane said. "There are no easy games on our schedule, but I feel we can turn our season around if we continue to work hard and improve."

Kevin Cox also played well for UNCW in Atlanta, collecting four assists—two in each game.

Volleyball: The Lady Seahawk volleyball team raised its record to 8-4 on the year last week with a successful road-trip that netted the squad four wins in five outings.

UNCW defeated Wingate, UNC-Asheville, Catawba and Pfeiffer, but lost to Lenior-Rhyne. The 'Hawks are now 7-2 in NAIA District 26 play with two more district matches on tap this Wednesday with Elon and St. Augustine's here.

"We played well away from home, which is something that we haven't been doing," coach Jackie Bartlett said. "I'm pleased with the season to date, but we still have some big matches yet to play."

The Seahawks journey outside the district this weekend when they take part in the William and Mary Tournament in Williamsburg, Va.

Water Polo: The Seahawk water polo team finished third in its own invitational behind teams from Duke and South Carolina. The 'Hawks defeated Lynchburg, Hampden-Sydney and Virginia Commonwealth, but lost close contests to the Blue Devil and Gamecock squads.

Tennis: Both UNCW tennis teams were also active, with the men's team coming in fourth in its own Fall Invitational behind East Carolina, Coastal Carolina and Campbell, and the women's squad falling to UNC-Greensboro, 9-0.

Gridiron Loss

The UNCW Club Football team was defeated by the Galludet Bisons of Washington D.C. on Sept. 24.

The game, which was the Seahawk's best effort this season and their only varsity competition, was a battle in which the Seahawks defense led by Lewis Stewart, Chuck Rideout, and Craig Willetts dealt severe punishment to the Bison offensive unit.

The Bisons, stopped cold on the ground on nearly every play, did manage to score on a fluke pass which was tipped by a Seahawk defender and fell into wide receiver Chubby Hamilton's grasp.

The Seahawk offense charged up and down the field during the day, trying to tie the score only to be thwarted by penalties on each drive. The Seahawks undaunted by the 7-0 loss, were proud as well as pleased with their performance. "I was proud to be involved in a game in which a club team was matched against a varsity team and though they should have been blown out, they showed Galludet what they could do when they play as a team," remarked Assistant Coach Jon Seiniger.

George Walker nears the finish of the 10 kilometer cross country run hosted by UNCW Saturday, which he won handily.

Women Golfers Victorious

Stacey Almond and Caroline Brady finished first and second overall, to lead the Seahawk women's cross country team to a close victory over Campbell University, 24-31.

Kim Blount's strong fourth place finish assured the win. Sharon Royal and Nancy Knapp finished eighth and ninth.

UNCW's George Walker ran away from the field to win the men's 10-kilometer race more than a minute ahead of the Camel's Robert Ruegger.

However, Campbell packed four runners between Walker and Seahawk, Bob Nelson, to easily win the meet, 22-37.

The UNCW women's soccer team started its season on Sat. September 24th against NC State. The Seahawks scored in the first half and kept the lead for 77 minutes of the match. After some controversial calls and with only 13 minutes left to play, State scored two goals to defeat the Seahawks, 2-1. Two important UNCW players were Patty Schlieff in the goal, and Betty Jenkins who scored the only Seahawk goal.

UNCW will host a Round Robin Tournament Oct. 1st and 2nd with the Seahawks playing Greensboro in the first game at 12:00 on Saturday at Brooks field. Come on out and watch the Seahawks as well as teams from Wake Forest, UNC-Chapel Hill, and Moorehead City.

UNCW's golf program is a young one, only in its fifth year. Even so, it has advanced from division three to division one and shows indications of steady improvement.

However, as coach Lea Larson points out, the road to improvement has required much hard work.

According to Larson, "It hasn't been overnight sensation."

"We have a nucleus of Heidi Crossley, Leigh Watters, and Janet Shaw all back from last year, plus new players that really add a lot," Larson continued.

On their first road trip, the team broke or tied 8 out of 8 previous records. Junior Heidi Crossley scored 73-78-74-225 and came in second place. In addition, Crossley scored a hole in one on the 17th hole, only the second time the team has scored a hole in competition.

Coach Larson explains, "Building a strong golf program is an ongoing process. It has to be done slowly and carefully. We're paying our dues."

Sign up now for Volleyball Intramurals. The deadline is September 30. The Managers will meet on October 4. We have Mens, Womens, & Coed teams. Get your teams together today! Must have valid ID & health card on file. Sign up in the Intramural office in the lobby of Hanover Gym.

Writer's Forum

Kim Messick
Journalism Contributor

The Wilmington Writers Forum held its first meeting this fall on Mon. Sept. 12. About 20 people gathered to discuss how and where to have work published, how to enter local and national writing contests, and how to find literary agents.

During the meeting, 15 literary magazines published in N.C. were discussed. Also a new magazine, the Will-ington Review was introduced.

The Writers Forum, a writer's workshop, allows people to read their work and then have the group discuss it.

"Everyone is looking for feedback," said Sue Vance, Co-editor of the Atlantis who was present.

The Forum meets on the second Monday of every month from 7 p.m. until 10 p.m. in room 214, Morton Hall. A charge of $10.00 per member will be used to fund readings and receptions.

Cadets Drill On TV

Bentley Suggs
Journalism Contributor

UNCW was recently the scene of cadets in drill training sessions. WWAY TV-3 was on hand to broadcast the event.

The cadets had stations consisting of grenade throwing, firing at attacking tanks, learning how to wear gas masks during emergencies, and first aid. During the last twenty minutes of the session, the cadets performed physical training.

The first year ROTC was on campus there were only 27 cadets, in comparison to the 127 men and women currently enrolled in the ROTC program.

Over the past two years the ROTC program has awarded nine scholarships and held two High School Junior ROTC Track and Field days, as well as hosting two Veteran's Day ceremonies.

UNCW commissioned its first 14 lieutenants this summer. Ten are now on Active Duty and eight have graduated from the U.S. Army Airborne school at Fort Benning, Georgia.

ROTC at UNCW has become one of the largest programs in the state and its outlook for increased enrollment looks promising.

Health Forum

Sore throat is one of the most frequently mistreated ailments.

It is important to know when to consult a doctor and when you can rely on home remedies to relieve discomfort and time to heal. You should call a physician if you have a sore throat that is:

- ACCOMPANIED by a cough, hoarseness, difficulty in breathing, or a temperature over 100° Fahrenheit
- SEVERE or has lasted for longer than a week

It is crucial not to stop taking the antibiotic when the symptoms disappear, but continue, as prescribed, for the entire 10 days. A repeat culture is advisable afterward, to be sure the infection has cleared.

It is unwise to give antibiotics if strep or some other bacterium is not the cause of a sore throat. Antibiotics can have serious side effects, including allergic reactions and the emergence of infectious bacteria that can resist antibiotic treatment.

Anyone interested in trying out for cheerleader (male or female) at UNCW should plan to attend an organizational meeting in Trask Coliseum, Room 119, on Monday, October 3rd at 3:30 p.m. Candidates will have 10 days to prepare for the official try-out session on Oct. 13.

Cheerleaders will be selected on enthusiasm, agility, coordination, and appearance. Candidates will also be given a short interview as part of the selection process.

Persons who cannot attend Monday's meeting should see Coach Jackie Bartlett in Hanover Hall no later than Oct. 4th.

SORRY, DEAR... BUT ACCORDING TO NEW FEDERAL GUIDELINES, YOU JUST DON'T CLASSIFY AS A TRULY NEEDY...

Psychology Professors Awarded National Science Foundation Grant

Woodrow Willis
Journalism Contributor

Dr. Mark Galizio and Dr. Michael Perone of the Psychology Department were awarded a $20,783 grant by the National Science Foundation this past June for their proposed research in drugs and animal behavior.

The title of the grant is "Acquisition of a Microcomputer Control System for Behavioral Research." The grant will allow UNCW to buy three complete micro computer systems (which will control the research) and four testing chambers for animals.

The research involves white mice and two drugs, Naloxone and Naltrexone. It is believed that these drugs block the endorphin system which secretes chemicals in the brain.

The endorphin system secretes opiates into the brain that are very similar to morphine and heroine as a sedative. An example is, in the case of a serious accident, the opiates will be released and reduce pain.

It is also believed that the endorphines may affect, besides sensitivity, memory and learning. This is what Dr. Galizio and Dr. Perone hope to find out.

To be awarded a grant, a proposal must first be written and submitted to the National Science Foundation. It is then sent to other scientists to be given a rating according to its merits. The proposal with the highest rating will then be awarded the grant. In light of the competition, this is a great honor for both UNCW and Drs. Galizio and Perone.

There are five students who are working very closely with Dr. Galizio and Dr. Perone in their research. They are Barbara Spencer, Steve Morgart, Richard Loren, David Fair, and Frank Stanley.

Debate Continues Over Masonboro Island

Karen Waddell
Staff Writer

A major issue in the Wilmington community, the Masonboro Island controversy affects the UNCW community as well. This issue centers on whether or not the Island should be developed or left in its present natural state.

Masonboro Island was selected as a protected land because of its educational and research value. The island is well known for its Tern nesting sites and endangered sea turtles.

The site now has several different owners which includes the federal government, and state and private citizens as well. Lots on the island are up for sale which greatly increases the chances for future development.

But because of the extensive marshland and flooding on the island, only 146 acres can be developed. At the present time, zoning would only allow single-family dwellings to be constructed but on October 29, the moratorium on building permits ends.

A group of concerned citizens comprised of county commissioners, private citizens, students and faculty members want to organize a society dedicated to saving this natural island.

Their goal is to acquire Masonboro Island for public ownership and they are hoping to come up with sufficient funds to compensate the owners for their land. Presently, 600 acres are state owned, 120 acres are privately owned, 15.2 acres are owned by the county and 12.5 acres are owned by the federal government. The UNCW Biology Club is pushing for efforts to save Masonboro Island. Many biology students use the island for a considerable amount of their research so it is of much value to them.

Most of those involved with the campaign to save Masonboro Island feel that hasty actions could be detrimental because of the controversial nature of the issue.

Biology Club treasurer, Lori Wickham, said "Those involved should wait for the people in the planning commission to make their plans and then give them our support."

"Men Without Tubes" says the sail of a UNCW entry in the Riverfest Raft Race.

Editorial

Well, I've been 18 years old for 48 days now. Being 18 is really fun! On my birthday, Mom and Dad gave me the ol' "You Are An Adult Now" lecture and my shot records. ("If you lose them, you'll have to get your shots ALL over again!") But best of all, since I've come to UNCW, I get to go to places like The Mad Monk or Crazy Zack's and listen to bands and drink if I want to. No more movies, arcades, or skating rinks for me, I vowed!!

It all ended on Saturday, October 1st.

With the passage of the Safe Roads Act, one of my "rights" was taken away. I still don't understand. I'm old enough to vote and get drafted, right? Why doesn't that change too?!

I know that drinking and driving don't mix, and that something HAD to be done about that problem, but cutting off all the 18-year-old's privileges just isn't much of a solution. Do 19-year-olds drink? Of course! What's the big difference? Will I be THAT much older and more responsible in 317 days? Probably a little, but I don't expect any significant changes.

I think they could have passed a tougher drunk driving law without changing the drinking age. I mean, if I get caught "Driving While Impaired" the fine will be the same no matter how old I am. A 40-year-old pays the same fine a 19-year-old does. Age has no bearing on the matter.

But since I AM still old enough to vote, I'll use that power to change what I can about this law that I don't agree with. (Revenge is sweet!!)

I feel sorry for the people who've been 18 for awhile. They're a lot more used to going to bars and things than I am. Any way you look at it, though, I'm going to have to dig up my skates again.

College just isn't the same anymore. I have all this freedom and nothing to do with it. Oh well... look out SportsWorld, here I come!!

Stillpoint

By Bob Haywood, Campus Minister

Laughter springs from one of two wellsprings in our lives—pleasure and joy, wellsprings which are quite distinct. Pleasure comes from without; from all that we find in our world that appeals, that gives content to that illusive experience that we call "happiness". Think of all the places you'd like being, people you want to be with, activities that touch your senses of pleasure.

How do you play? When and where does the child in you get loose and "play ball" or "get hugged" or wander in the secret garden of your imaginations? We all like feeling good and spend a good deal of time figuring out with whom and at which point we can move into our environment in such a way that has the best chance of producing pleasure.

How good it is to laugh and feel the release that laughter brings. It is all too easy to get caught up in taking ourselves and all the heavy issues that impinge on our life so seriously that we lose the capacity for humor.

We seek a career that seeks pleasure. We look for relationships that do the same. Some of us even determine that a certain lifestyle or position in life will bring pleasure and therefore we work to those ends.

There's another wellspring of laughter that holds more promise, I believe. It is joy. Joy comes from within, rather than from without. Joy is the happiness of love, a deep inner feeling that can fill out being even in the midst of personal suffering; yep! even when we are in pain. Joy emerges as we live in congruence with our deepest internal values. For me that means living lovingly, or to put it in other terms, to live out of the heart of God.

Joy, then, has little to do with our external world measured in terms of pleasure or affluence or success. It has everything to do with discovering our deepest selves with all our yearnings and strivings, hopes and dreams, fears and frustrations and being true to that Self. If we are true to our God-gifted self, we will know joy even if the outward course of events brings suffering, opposition, or injustice to our lives.

Even if the world seems to conspire to deny us pleasure, we still can live with much joy. I've known many who lack joy and seek frantically to fill that void with the pursuit of pleasure. Much of partying, much of sexual activity seems to have that kind of franticness that speaks clearly of a lack of joy.

Those others that have discovered the kind of loving that balances the needs of self with the needs of others also discover that a wellspring of joy, no matter what the external circumstances, allows smiles, a sense of delight, a freedom to appreciate the smallest gifts and insights. Would that we could all move beyond our search for pleasure into the deeper, more sustaining experience of joy.

To the Editor:

I agree totally that bicycles should be parked in the bicycle racks which are provided. Chaining or locking bicycles to railings does cause problems for people who must use the ramps to enter buildings.

But with close to 2,000 bicycles on campus, finding a space in a rack is also a problem. I believe that if enough bike racks were provided by the University this problem would be eliminated.

Shinn Attacks Hebrew Traditions

Sankey Blanton III
Journalism Contributor

Dr. Gerald Shinn launched right in with a vigorous attack on a veritable herd of sacred cows which he claimed have been assumed by many religionists about the Hebrews. This was the second of the Philosophy and Religion Lecture Series, entitled, "Yahweh and the Gods and Goddesses of the Hebrews."

Three of the fatted calves slaughtered last Thursday evening in King Hall were the notions that Hebrews had been always faithful to the one God tradition and were the only monotheist in the ancient Middle East; second, that the Hebrews might have been influenced by an older Egyptian practice of monotheism; and lastly, that the monotheistic tradition had steadily grown upward and outward in a progressive, evolutionary way, or, in Dr. Shinn's words, "like kudza."

Citing the "primary reference source", the professor's synonym for the Torah and other Old Testament documents, Shinn covered Mideast history and symbolism from Abram to Ziggurat. This lecture, complete with visual presentations, was an entertaining monologue as well as an educational experience.

Professor Shinn, whose undergraduate and Master's degree are from Duke University's School of Divinity, has a Ph.D. in Medieval Germanic law and has been with UNCW since 1967. His extensive background in Hebrew and history make him one of the more welcome speakers in the larger community, as well as one of the most controversial. Dr. Shinn concluded with a hypothesis that the cults of the ancient gods and goddesses were still alive and well, and living in Wilmington. "Some of them live in spired houses and stained glass boxes", said Shinn. "The nature and fertility deities still enslave body, soul and heart."

The Philosophy and Religion lecture series will continue this Thursday evening with a talk by Dr. Thomas Schmid on "God, Justice and Tragedy in Ancient Greece." This lecture is at 8:00 p.m. in King Hall and is free.

Chisholm To Speak At Brogden

Former Congresswoman Shirley Chisholm will be the featured speaker at a town meeting sponsored by Alpha Phi Alpha Fraternity, Saturday, October 8, at Brogden Hall.

Chisholm, the only woman, and the only Black American to sit on the powerful House Rules Committee was also a leading member of the Congressional Black Caucus.

In 1972 she seriously campaigned for the Democratic Party nomination for President; the first Black woman to seek the nation's highest office.

Presently a professor at Mt. Holyoak College in Boston, Chisholm decided not to seek reelection to the Congress. Through writing, teaching, and lecturing Mrs. Chisholm hopes to create a new national state of mind that demands peace, prosperity and equality for all Americans.

New Job Agency Opens In Union

UNCW News Bureau

Students at The University of North Carolina at Wilmington who need a job and employers in the Wilmington area who need employees will have an easier time getting together due to a new program just begun in the UNCW Career Planning and Placement Center.

Called the Job Location and Development Program, the program is under the direction of Tom Fields, assistant professor of sociology at UNCW.

"There are plenty of jobs out there. We find that students don't know where to go or how to find them," Fields said. "My job is to canvass potential employers to know where the jobs are, interview the students, then match the listings with students who are interested and available by providing instructions." He also follows up on placement.

Jobs may be permanent or temporary off-campus jobs, both part and full-time, during the school year and the summer. Fields explained that most jobs are in the minimum wage range, but some pay as much as $4.50 an hour.

"Right now with this program getting underway Oct. 1, I have listings for 100 different job openings. Employers on the list include retailers, babysitting, fast-food restaurants, and others," Fields said.

"There is no guarantee UNCW students will get these jobs, but we let them know about it and our students must compete for these jobs. We expect a high percentage to be placed. One local company, for example, will hire between 30 and 50 people between now and Christmas," he said.

The Job Location and Development Program is an adjunct to the College Work-Study Program. Only students registered at UNCW, either full-time or part-time, are eligible to register for this job placement program. Registration is available in the Career Planning and Placement Center, Room 106, University Union, between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m. Monday through Friday, and students may call 791-4330 ext. 2174 for information.

Fields commented that part-time jobs for students complement their education as well as help pay for it because, "I think a part-time job teaches good life-functioning habits and helps students define their career goals. If they want a job, and contact our office, we'll do our best to help them find one."

If Senior Senator Buddy Henderson and his committee have their way, a Senate-Faculty committee will be set up to provide for the publishing of student evaluations of faculty. This motion was the last one made during a special meeting held by the Student Government on September 29 to swear in 13 new senators and orient them with parliamentary procedures.

The meeting featured three speakers: Dr. Betty Jo Welch, Communications professor and registered parliamentarian; Charles Parsons, 1981 SGA president; and Nancy Kelker, former senator and 1982-83 SGA Vice president.

Dr. Welch spoke on the importance of being familiar with parliamentary procedure, and to emphasize her point, gave senators "a little test" entitled the Parliamentary Pepper Upper.

She stressed that although many view parliamentary procedure as "dry and dull," it is necessary to make meetings run more smoothly and only those who are familiar with the rules can truly participate.

Charles Parsons spoke on how to write a resolution, which is either a statement of opinion or a view of how something should be done.

The last speaker, Nancy Kelker, stressed the need for cooperation, and, at times, compromise. She advised the senators to think before they act or vote about what is best for the students and for the future of UNCW.

The next order of business was to hand out packets for the new senators containing the operating rules, Student Government constitution, and other necessary information. The new senators were then sworn in by Christopher Cole, the new Chief Justice.

After the Executive Officers Report, SGA President, Eric Squires, swore in Attorney General Mickey Gahagan.

Squires referred to the recent Leadership Seminar and also mentioned the fact that the Student Government has received several hundred dollars from the administration for its programs.

For the scheduled business, Estella Davis made a motion to change Article Four, which would allow a more lenient attendance policy for scheduled meetings. As it stands now, one unexcused absence "is considered dereliction of duty and is grounds for reprimand." She moved that it be changed to two unexcused absences. Reactions were divided and a move was made to table the motion until a later meeting.

UNCW Defeats Deacs

By Dean Buchan
Sports Information

UNC-Wilmington's soccer team edged Wake Forest 1-0 in Winston-Salem for its third straight win, and first win against an ACC opponent in three years.

For the Seahawk booters, Sunday's shutout over the Deacons indicated that the young team's talent may finally be coming together after struggling earlier in the year against some nationally ranked competition. Mike Lawrence's goal 12 minutes into the contest was good enough for the win, as goalie Billy Ireland got four saves in route to his third shutout of the year. For Lawrence, who got the assist from Dave Compere, it was his third goal of the year.

"I'm very pleased with the way we played last week," UNCW Coach Calvin Lane said. "The Wake Forest game was our best by far this year. If we keep up this level of play, we could still have a fine year."

For UNCW, now 4-5, the Wake Forest win marked the first victory of the year over an Atlantic Coast Conference school, after losing to North Carolina, N.C. State, and Virginia earlier in the year.

The Seahawk winning streak started with a win over Emory, and a close 2-1 win over Atlantic Christian College on Wednesday, Sept. 28.

The Atlantic Christian win at Brooks Field saw Rick Cantore scoring a goal that would give the Seahawks a 1-0 edge that stood up until, with only two minutes left, ACC tied the score. Freshman Pat Brown scored the winning goal with only 24 seconds remaining.

UNCW played at Pembroke State Wednesday, hoping to reach the .500 mark.

Polo Expects Winning Season

The UNCW water polo team is coming off of a 10-15 record from last year and coach Marc Ellington is expecting a winning record this year. "This is just the second year that we have had a team," says Ellington. "We have five returnees and six new players. We'd like to have a winning season." Last weekend UNCW hosted a tournament, taking third place out of the six teams participating. They defeated Virginia Commonwealth 15-6, Hampton Sydney 20-5, and Lynchburg College 16-4. The 'Hawks only lost two games, 10-13 to Duke and 8-10 to the University of South Carolina. This weekend the 'Hawks will be on the road to Washington and Lee University in Lexington, Virginia, where they will play five games. "Hopefully we'll bring back a winning record," says Ellington. "We're playing better than we ever did last year." The 'Hawks are 4-6 overall.

Volleyball Victorious

The volleyball team won two of three matches last weekend in the William and Mary Invitational.

UNCW whipped Salisbury State 15-4, 15-3, and Christopher-Newport, 15-3, 15-0, before losing to the tourney hosts 13-15, 8-15. The Lady Seahawks are now 13-6 overall.

Earlier in the week, UNCW downed Elon for its fifth straight home win, before losing to St. Augustine's in a close match.

UNCW played at Coastal Carolina Tuesday, and will play in the Francis-Marion Tournament this weekend.

School Kids Record Review

Jackson Browne could easily have become the sensitive poet-songwriter who got so hung up on truth and cool, he became uncool. Fortunately, unlike many of his peers, Jackson exposed an imperfect vulnerable side which always added to his considerable warmth and charm. "The Pretender" still sticks in mind as one of the most candid conversations between the individual and society.

With the aid of David Lindley, Hold On, Hold Out! helped push Browne beyond the acoustic limits. Now the talented guitarist has split to front his own eccentricities in El-Rayo-X. Finally, out comes Lawyers In Love which for the first time finds Jackson Browne understanding the lyric for the sound of the band.

"Lawyers In Love," the top ten hit, dares you to make sense of the tongue-in-cheek lyrics as the cyclical rockabilly guitar of Rick Vito drills the tone into memory. "Downtown" and the album conclusion "For A Rocker" continue the trend towards rousing upbeat rock. Though there are no rambling epic soliloquys which characterized much of his earlier work, a complete transition to band has not been entire. It is this very lack of consistency which tends to confuse the focus of this LP. "On The Day" is a paean to love which lacks the total emotional intensity associated with Browne. "Say It Isn't True" is a slow funereal procession regarding nuclear holocaust that seems out of place and is too long for all its simplicity. "Cut It Away" is easily the album highlight, featuring a guitar solo which sweeps away like a plugged in vacuum cleaner. This song best combines an integrated band concept with some great lyrics and intimacy that only Jackson Browne can give. "Tender Is The Night" is memorable for the guitar signature reminiscent of Lindley.

(According to this reviewer, "I still miss this multi-instrumentalist's lap

"Knock On Any Door" has an interesting call back response that leaves me wonderin' about the female choir harmonies of his previous work.

All of the tender qualities which make Browne so likeable are still intact on Lawyers In Love. However, the songs are not as personable or telling as before which serves to take away much of the impact. Perhaps Browne has discovered that regardless of their inherent truths, words take second place to actions, which always speak louder. "For A Rocker" and "Cut It Away" certainly point to a fresh direction for this band. I just hope the holding pattern is cut away completely next time around.

Recreation Club Extends Thanks

The UNCW Recreation Majors Association would like to thank those who supported and participated in the "Bike-In" on Sept. 28. Dr. Robert M. Wolff, assistant professor of recreation, who headed the project and prompted the Recreation Association to get involved said, "I was impressed and encouraged by the enthusiasm of the UNCW Recreation majors in sponsorship and involvement in Bike-Along '83."

Bike-Along '83 is part of the Governor's Outdoors Events Program to help promote bicycling in North Carolina. Points will be given to communities for each bicycling event they hold. The three communities with the highest points will be presented the Governor's Community Award of Excellence for Bicycling.

The UNCW "Bike-In" contributed approximately 75 points. Those 75 points plus points earned by the City of Wilmington will be totaled and will compete for top honors in the state.

The Recreation Association would like to thank the UNCW Campus Police Department for taking time to register bicycles. Of the 104 bicycles registered in the month of September, 43 were registered on the day of the "Bike-In." Thanks also to the Two Wheeler Dealer for providing a mechanic to inspect bikes and make small repairs. And a special thanks to all local media for their advance publicity and same-day coverage of the event.

The Recreation Majors Association raised $375.00 which will go back to UNCW for bicycle projects, activities, and facilities.

Campus police register bikes at last week's Bike-A-Long.

University Theatre Holds Tryouts

The University Theatre will hold tryouts for its second major production of 1983-84. The play is Tennessee Williams' "Small Craft Warnings" and the tryouts will be held at 7:30 October 10th and 11th in the SRO Theatre located in the Xenan Creative Arts Building.

There are parts for two women and seven men. This is an open tryout and all university students are welcome.

"Small Craft Warnings" is based on one of William's shorter works, "Confessional," originally published in his collection Dragon Country in 1969.

It was expanded into a full "evening," for an off-Broadway production in the spring of 1972.

Audiences' and critics alike were moved by one of Williams' most searching works. Monk's Place, a bar somewhere on the Pacific coast of California, provides the setting in which a group of ordinary, sometimes defeated, and often courageous castoffs grapple with existence and survival.

This is a work of enormous compassion that will create an exciting and moving evening of theatre. The University Theatre invites you to be a part of its creation.

Safe Road Act Effects Felt

By Sherry Johnson
Journalism Contributor

The enforcement of the Safe Roads Act of 1983 has already affected many UNCW students since it became effective on October 1.

Owners and managers of popular local bars reported a substantial decrease in business during the first week of the law's enforcement. They do not totally attribute this to the absence of 18-year-old former customers although the new legal drinking age is a significant factor.

The manager of the Mad Monk, Charlie Maultsby, said business at his bar has definitely been hurt by the Safe Roads Act. He estimated a 40-45 percent loss of business compared to the business he normally does each weekend.

Maultsby is unsure what impact the barring of 18-year-olds will have. However, he did give an estimated business decrease of 10-15 percent the first weekend in October.

Maultsby, who is also the owner of Sgodder's, said his Wrightsville Beach bar is also suffering from the effects of the new law. People are afraid to drive down on the beach.

Maultsby is optimistic about retaining his customers as the law becomes more established and the novelty wears off. He said business will eventually pick up.

Manager Jack Edmonds of Crazy Zack's agrees that the law is responsible for a definite market decrease in his business. "It's a little early to tell how much of our business has been affected," he said.

Located only a few minutes from the UNCW campus, Zack's, which enjoyed a large business with 18-year-olds, is the setting for many UNCW sorority and fraternity parties.

In the past these parties were sure to bring a big business to Zack's. However, this has not been the case since the beginning of October.

"When 'guaranteed crowds' (such as the sorority and fraternity parties) don't bring a crowd, it hurts," Edmonds said.

When these fraternities and sororities are not socializing at local bars, they hold their parties on campus. However, the regulations for holding an on-campus party must be maintained.

Melissa Morgan, president of the Alpha Delta Pi Sorority, said that she will obtain a permit before having an on-campus party. A guard will check all IDs before allowing admission to the party.

When large parties will be held for everyone in the sorority, the underage members will be required to wear an arm band which will not allow them to have any alcoholic beverages.

Since fraternities or sororities may not like leaving out some of their members, they probably will not hold as many on-campus parties in which only a partial group will be permitted to enjoy.

Whether UNCW students are underage or concerned about possible consequences of violating the law, the Safe Roads Act of 1983 has affected much of the university community.

Nursing Department Gift

Stephanie Loftus
News Editor

The University of North Carolina received the first $40,000.00 installment of a $200,000.00 gift from Babies Hospital, Inc., to be used in the development of a baccalaureate degree program in nursing.

President of the corporation, Lt. Gen. George S. Boylan (USAF ret) presented the money on September 30, the rest to be provided over a five-year period to assist the transition from the AD to BS program.

UNCW, the only institution within the 16-University system in North Carolina to offer a two-year degree in nursing, has been pursuing a four-year school of nursing since 1978.

After lengthy planning, the university discovered that it would be impossible to field this program unless a non-tax appropriated fund source was discovered, since state funds were not available.

UNCW Chancellor William Wagoner approached Babies Hospital, "knowing this particular group is intensely interested in medical care."

Gen. Boylan, anxious to help the university, stated, "We are very fortunate to be in the same locality and have the resources to assist this fine institution with its nursing program."

The nursing program at UNCW will gradually shift from an AD to a BS degree over a four- to five-year period. The last class admitted to the ADN program will be in the fall of 1984, with the ADN program to be phased out by the spring of 1986. The first BS in nursing will probably be granted in 1987.

"In the years ahead, I think this program will be most important to southeastern North Carolina," commented Lt. Gen. Boylan. "Nurses are key to the health programs."

Funds from Babies Hospital gift will be used for nursing instruction an expanded library and laboratory development.

Sexual Assault: No Joking Matter

Kelly Duff
Journalism Contributor

Sexual assault is not a matter to be taken lightly these days. It occurs on college campuses more frequently than you might think.

Just last month, an 18 year-old freshman was sexually assaulted in UNCW's Galloway dorm.

While the student was doing her laundry, a 21-year-old non-student from Wilmington walked up, introduced himself, exchanged a few words of conversation and then left.

Later, when she was alone in the lounge, he came in, closed the door and "was all over me", as she put it.

"He grabbed me, tore my shirt, and I ran to a friend's room. Then he came in there and tried to get me to take him home", according to the victim.

Since it was past 11 p.m., he decided to leave before the RA found him.

The man persisted, however, pestering the girl. He called her the next day. Getting no answer, he went back to her room, left a note, and called her three times after that. He even got another girl to knock on her door for him.

Shortly after that, her friends identified him to campus police, who came and picked him up. The man is charged with 2nd degree sexual assault and has been released on $5000.00 bond. He is not allowed to approach the girl or to even set foot on campus again.

Letters To The Editor

Dear Editor:

I have been impressed for some time with the quality of education that UNCW has provided, as I talked with my daughter-in-law and son. She graduated with a Masters in Marine Science while my youngest son is a sophomore. The evident pride both have in UNCW is a compliment to the leadership of the faculty and students.

Recently, I have had a most interesting experience in another aspect of collegiate life. For the past four weeks, I have attended the games played by the club football team. As a former high school, military service and collegiate athlete, I have left each game with increasing admiration for the players and the coaching staff. I know what commitment it takes to participate in a sport on an extra-curricular basis. There seems to be an extra effort put forth since club football is not a varsity sport.

It is my understanding that the Student Government Association allocates a specific sum of money to help defray expenses, but the greater part of necessary funds must be raised through various endeavors, such as car washes and receipts from concession stand sales during home games.

This team now faces a large hurdle as it prepares for its upcoming road games to Clemson on October 9 and the Duke and UNC-CH games during November. It needs the attention and assistance of all in order to raise funds.

This team has comported itself with class and is a credit to UNCW. You would have been pleased at the reception given it by the players and fans at Galludet.

The parents of the players do what they can, but assistance is needed from faculty and students in terms of money and attendance.

I make this request for support as a friend of the University, a parent and as one who appreciates commitment by those who have dreams and goals to make those dreams reality.

Stillpoint

By Bob Haywood, Campus Minister

We are all fortunate to live in a time where the concept of sex has been enlarged to include the broader understanding of sexuality. Not only have we begun to confirm the inequity and bondage of traditional masculine and feminine sex roles; but we can even explore how every person reflects masculine and feminine characteristics within themselves. Any man or woman can be competitive, assertive, tough (traditional male characteristics) and also be gentle, nurturing, collaborative (traditional female characteristics) and feel all the more whole because of it.

The problems associated with sex roles are more than individual. We have projected these sex roles on our culture to the detriment of us all. Our political, military and economic systems are dominated by masculine images—competition, climbing the ladder of success, dominance, ruthlessness, independence, control, elitism, survival of the fittest, getting on top. Social services and religious institutions are the places in our culture with which you associate images like caring, nurturing, supporting, collaborating, and interdependence, more feminine characteristics. In our educational system there is a mixture with some strong nurturing and caring elements as well as a lot of competition and drive to excel.

In individuals, when there is a blend of these two dimensions of our personalities, our growth toward wholeness is enhanced. Those that are really unbalanced at either extreme of the masculine-feminine continuum seem often to have difficulty in relating to significant others in their lives as well as to the society at large. Some kind of balance of my masculine-feminine self seems to be most productive.

My concern lies in the imbalance that seems to exist in the power groups in our nation. In our political, military and economic systems it seems that only masculine qualities are appreciated. Climbing some kind of ladder of success or power seems to be the controlling motif operating in these systems. Someone or some few are always seeking to be on top. Only a few can be there, which makes this a ladder mentality restrictive and elitist. The ladder is so full of insecurity that once people have ascended to the heights, their intent is to preserve their positions at all cost. This in turn brings hostility, jealousy, defensiveness and even war.

Another more feminine and more appropriate symbol is that of the circle. The circle bespeaks community. Our world is round. In the circle we think in terms of we-ness rather than "us" versus "them". This speaks of mutuality, nurturing, and sharing, thus interdependence becomes the reigning dynamic so that "my" future is some how interwoven with "our" future.

Our years at the university provide us an opportunity to increase our awareness of ourselves and the development of greater balance in our masculine/feminine selves. Let it be also a time to become aware of the imbalances that are at work in the systems that are the focus of our interest and job aspirations. Even in higher education, let us be aware and beware the forces that encourage us to develop only one dimension of our personality, probably the masculine. Think about and raise questions of those who tout competition as the only way to success and "making it to the top" as the only goal worth achieving in life. I believe we must bring some of our feminine perspective to bear in deciding what is important, what success means and, even, how we might go about handling global conflict.

ROTC Cadets Honored

Cindie Sherfield
Journalism Contributor

Outstanding ROTC cadets were honored during a 90-minute awards ceremony held in the Student Union Wednesday afternoon.

Twenty-nine ROTC cadets are classified this year as MS 4's. This means that each student is in his or her last year of ROTC service on this campus.

The awards given out were the Commanders 300 Club, the APRT Proficiency award, the Honor Company award, the Recondo award, the Airborne Training Certificate, the Dean's List award, the Distinguished Military Student award, and three ROTC scholarships.

Winners of the most prestigious award, the Distinguished Student Award, were: Cadet First Lieutenant Daniel Hayes, Cadet Captain Kevin Hewett, Cadet Captain Karen Kilstadius, Cadet Major Ivan Mack, Cadet First Lieutenant Gregory Marinich, Cadet Captain David Newton, Cadet Captain Ed Totten, Cadet First Lieutenant Frank Trainor, Cadet Captain Gary Weaver, and Cadet Captain Debra Owen. Winner of the three-year scholarship was Cadet Sergeant William Dribben. Cadet Sergeants Michael Silver and Jerry Ashton received the two-year ROTC scholarships.

De La Cruz Speaks On Environmental Awareness

This type of threatening incident is unfortunately becoming more common. Often the victim is permanently affected by the assault, the young woman who was assaulted on the UNCW campus says she is now shy around guys. She is more cautious in making sure her door is always locked, she is more aware of the people

Non-trads Hold Luncheon

By Donna Holden
Features Editor

After a successful first luncheon, the Non-traditional students who gathered in the Student Union Snack Bar last week seem pleased.

Associate Dean of Students, Pat Leonard, has big plans for these future luncheons. More are scheduled for November 2, 16, and 30.

There will be a new topic for each informal discussion. The first, held on October 12, was "Academic and Learning Support Resources."

Presently there is a "need survey" available to all non-traditional students, which will be used to determine future topics of discussion. These surveys may be picked up and returned to the Dean of Students office, the central resource area for non-traditional students.

All non-traditional students are invited and urged to attend in order to be heard on matters of concern and importance.

Each luncheon is a bring-your-own held at noon on every other Wednesday.

The Student North Carolina Association of Educators (SNCAE) serves as a representative body to future teachers, provides education students with a voice in matters affecting their education and profession and helps to develop an understanding of the state and national education associations.

The UNCW chapter of SNCAE is a member of the North Carolina Association of Educators and the National Education Association.

Members of SNCAE are entitled to all privileges of the state and national teaching organizations. Therefore, all student members are able to have a voice in education issues, along with 1400 other students throughout 38 colleges and universities across North Carolina.

Members also receive several publications including Today's Education, Student Impact, NCAE News Bulletin, North Carolina Education, and Student Newsletter, as well as automatic liability insurance for all classroom experiences, including student teaching. Discount benefits on travel, prescription drugs, book clubs, and car rentals, plus many more are included also.

Throughout the year, local programs, guest speakers and workshops will be presented as well as conferences on the state levels.

SNCAE will be having a general meeting October 27 at 3:30. Several members are also planning to attend the leadership conference in Raleigh on October 14 and 15.

For more information about SNCAE and membership information, contact the Education department, ext. 2366. As the slogan says, "Teaching... instructing in reality and suggesting dreams. Be a part of it: join SNCAE, the student voice of the United Teaching Profession!"

Fall Feud

What was fun, exciting, and had good food and tough competition? Fall Feud '83, that's what!

Last Saturday found on-campus housing students at Brooks Field for the annual Fall Feud, a day of fun and games between dormitory halls and apartments.

This year, for the first time, the event was run strictly by students. Margaret Taylor, Coordinator of Residence Life, took primarily an advisory role this year.

"The students worked it... I asked a lot of questions, and answered a lot, too. I took mainly the role of advisor this year. It was very successful," said Taylor. "I prompted students, and I was there when they needed me."

The next major event for the on-campus students will be the Cage Party on October 28. Music will be provided by The Pedestrians.

Soccer Team Wins

The soccer squad got goals from Pat Brown, Matt Smith and Mike Lawrence in Sunday's win over Virginia Tech. Brown and Smith lead the team in scoring, each now with four goals this year.

The previous day, Alderson-Broadus, a fine NAIA club, shut out UNCW. Earlier in the week UNCW won 2-0 over Pembroke State.

UNCW's soccer team came away with a 3-0 victory over Virginia Tech Sunday in the second day of competition in the William & Mary Classic to spotlight a week of activities on the road for UNCW teams.

Before blanking Virginia Tech., the soccer team was shut out by Alderson-Broadus, 0-3. Meanwhile, the volleyball team had their troubles in the Francis-Marion Invitational, and the Women's Golf team visited Durham for the Duke Invitational.

"I was pleased with our play this week," UNCW Coach Calvin Lane said. "Alderson-Broadus had possibly the best team we've ever seen all year."

UNCW, which played home Wednesday, will travel to the Queen City Sunday to play UNC-Charlotte.

The road has been a familiar site for the Seahawk booters. Eight of its twelve matches have been on the road.

The volleyball team was also on the road last week, playing in the Francis-Marion Invitational. The Lady Seahawks dipped to 16-10 after losing four of six matches.

In golf, after a sluggish first round, UNCW's top four putt scores of 324-313-311 for a 948, and a 7th place finish in the 12 team event. Heidi Crossley was low for the Lady Seahawks, as she finished ninth overall.

The Women's tennis match scheduled with St. Andrew's, and the water polo match were both cancelled last week.

Golf Team Results

The UNCW Men's Golf team finished 16th of 26 teams in the rain-shortened James Madison Invitational Sat. (Oct. 1)

The Seahawks shot 313-322/635 score, led by Robert Long's 36-hole score of 159. Elon shot 604 to take first place. The event was scheduled for 54 holes, but rain on Friday knocked off 18 holes.

The UNCW women's golf team came close, but failed to defend their title in the Yale Invitational last weekend in New Haven, Ct.

The Lady Seahawks were tied with Penn State with a 680 score after the 36-hole event, but Penn State won in a match of cards with the no. 5 player of each team. (Only the top four player's scores count in regulation.)

School Kids Record Review

Warm, breezy neon nights cruising down the boulevard...Gazing from the haze atop the Hollywood Hills; the sultry pout of singer-songwriter Martha Davis and the Motels decorate an L.A. billboard. Welcome to the world of prostitutes and pimps where honey-colored words open any door and love is for sale. As we pass along the Strip, the Motels break into "Where Do We Go From Here" and seductively chastise "one thing is clear, nothings sacred any more." A keyboard rhythm characteristic of the Doors filters through. This is truly an L.A. band!

Looking for love? Don't go near L.A. Time can stand still as in the slow-burn of the single "Suddenly Last Summer" but then suddenly romance becomes heartbreak and we are left with the plaintive cries in "Trust Me," "I'm never gonna leave you" over and over again.

Little Robbers is the Motel's 4th LP. The first two went largely unnoticed yet the word around was out. In sensually-teasing fashion the Motels could slice through the California experience and, with the help of Tim McGovern, produce a razor sharp stutter sound that left them balancing precariously on The Edge. It was this duality which brought this band early cult status. Since McGovern split, the band has chosen to step back a bit to open up centerstage for Martha. Their 3rd LP All Four One gave them wider recognition with two huge singles. Little Robbers continues the tradition with little new ground being broken.

The steamy, love-torn essays are still apparent, shockingly real by the voice of heart-break. The painful loss of true love and its constant search dominate the tracks. "I can't go back but I can't stay" is the curse in "Remember the Nights." "Little Robbers" possess a driving freshness unexpectedly lacking on the rest of the LP. It reminds one of the more New Wavish influences of the earlier albums with more say added. "Into the Heartland" is a great exodus song that rocks out with some solid guitar playing which misses on some of the other songs. "Footsteps" is a reggae flavored dance tune that grows on the listener. The lasting impression the Motels leave the listener with is not surprising; "I hear footsteps as you walk out the door."

Eastern Religions Studied

Woodrow Willis
Journalism Contributor

Dr. John Buescher, a recent addition to the Philosophy and Religion department at UNCW, centers his studies around the religions of the East.

After finishing undergraduate school at the University of Virginia with a major in both Religious Studies and Asian Studies, he became interested in Zen Buddhism and travelled to California where he lived in the Tassajara Zen Monastery for six months.

Buescher decided to resume his studies and become a scholar of Buddhism. He reapplied to the University of Virginia to complete his graduate work. Dr. Buescher received his B.A., M.A. and Ph.D. -degrees from the University of Virginia in Religious Studies.

While working on his dissertation with a Tibetan monk, Buescher and his wife lived in Japan for two years where they taught English at the YM-CA in Yokohama.

Dr. Buescher has recently completed a book entitled "The Serpent and the Mound", which deals with the images of snakes that appear throughout the mythology of India.

UNCW Growth To Continue

By Cindie Sherfield
Journalism Contributor

UNCW has quite a bit of change to look forward to in years to come.

A plan adopted by the UNCW Board of Trustees in October of 1980 is slowly coming into existence. Many students have noticed the work being done behind the Behavioral Sciences building. That is going to connect the road that leads to the student apartment parking lots with the road that runs out of the Behavioral Sciences parking lot.

As the plan originally stated, by 1985 the new additions to campus were to be the road currently under construction plus a new Creative Arts building, a new Physical Sciences building, a Field House on Brooks Field, plus the doubling of the library and the expansion of the Business building.

However, due to a delay in government funding, this plan will not be reached in the next two years. "Our next step is to finish the road," states Carl Dempsey, the Vice Chancellor for Business. He also hopes for a new bookstore and a residence hall for the Fall '85 semester.

Also planned for the near future is an Instructional Track at Brooks Field, but more land must be acquired before this can be built.

Looking further ahead, UNCW can expect 10 new buildings, a Continuing Education facility, housing and resident parking for 400 students, plus a change in the parking structure.

Most of the parking lots on campus now will be torn up and a large commuter parking area will be built behind the Marine Sciences building. "The object of this is to get cars off the campus," says Dempsey. Originally these changes were to be made by the year 2,000, but that is tentative.

Seemingly, all this construction would make the campus more crowded. Not so, according to Dempsey. "We have 650 acres and have developed maybe 300 acres, if that much.

NCNB Donates $100,000

Bentley Suggs

UNCW Chancellor, Dr. William Wagoner, announced Oct. 4, that North Carolina National Bank has donated a gift of $100,000 that will be used in support of the University's Cameron School of Business Administration and to establish an NCNB Scholars Program at UNCW.

"This gift is important for NCNB and for UNCW because it represents a shared commitment by our bank and by this university to make North Carolina a better place to live," said Paul Leonard, NCNB's city executive in Wilmington.

Mr. Leonard took part in the announcement with Dr. Wagoner during the meeting of the University's Board of Trustees.

Leonard said the gift will be used in support of the business school's teaching and research mission and to establish the NCNB Scholar's Program at UNCW. An award will be presented annually to a rising senior in the business school based on academic excellence and leadership qualities. It will begin in the fall of 1984.

"Scholarships, such as this one, will help develop the kind of leadership American businesses need to remain competitive in a worldwide economy," said Leonard.

Fitness Course Opening

Courtesy of
UNCW News Bureau

A Wells Fargo jogging/fitness course will be officially opened in ceremonies at 12 noon, Wednesday, Nov. 2 at the entrance to the jogging path near the UNCW tennis courts.

The 20-station, 1.25 mile jogging and fitness course has been installed at The University of North Carolina at Wilmington through cooperative effort by the Wells Fargo Gamefield Fitness Program, the Health, Physical Education, and Recreation Department, the Athletics Department, and the HPER student majors' club.

Designed to promote lifelong fitness, the course includes a variety of warm-up, conditioning, and cool-down exercises to be done in conjunction with jogging. The path begins at the tennis courts, runs behind the softball field, loops behind Brooks Field, and ends behind the soccer field.

Dr. Lucinda Hollifield, assistant professor of health, physical education and recreation, explained that the course will be good for the university because, "It fits in with the objectives of the physical education 101 class. Through 101, students will come up with an individualized exercise program that leads to lifelong fitness," she said. "It also provides good recreation for those who like to exercise in their free time. The jogging course is intended to promote lifelong fitness among faculty, staff and students."

The $8,000 project was partially funded by a grant of $2,500 from the Wells Fargo Gamefield program.

Letters to the Editor

There is an axiom in both big business and government that says, "You scratch my back and I'll scratch yours." If this applies to James Watt, our outgoing Secretary of the Interior, he should have little trouble finding new employment in any number of coal, oil, mining, or logging companies.

Watt has not only been scratching the backs of these industries, he's been using the public and its property to scratch with.

Since his confirmation as Secretary, Watt has made it clear that federal lands, supposedly protected by laws in the public interest, would be opened to big business.

These lands, once visited because of their aesthetic beauty and wildlife, are now open for business. And in case you haven't seen coal mines or forests stripped, the sight is not very appealing.

Watt's carnage has not been confined to the land. The State of North Carolina threatened to go to court over proposed oil wells off its coast. And although the proposed sites are further north, the effects on Wilmington, Wrightsville Beach, and UNCW could be tremendous. Imagine an offshore accident; UNC-by-the-Sea could turn into UNC-by-the-Sludge.

James Watt has been a menace to ecologists and the environment in general for 3 years. It is amazing that he got away with selling public lands at cut rate prices and is now resigning because of a slip of the tongue. Or is it amazing? Was James Watt doing anything that Ronald Reagan didn't want? It's doubtful.

An educated guess would be that the next Secretary of the Interior will be a man who continues previous policies, but knows how to keep his mouth shut or at least keep his opinions to himself.

Dear Club Presidents,

Welcome back. I hope you enjoyed Fall Break. I would like to invite you to the next leadership activity. On October 4, a group of Student leaders met to continue the program, but during the afternoons. We believe that an afternoon meeting will prove to be a more convenient time. The next meeting will be Tuesday, November 1 at 4:00 pm in the Union SnackBar.

The purpose of these meetings is to enable Club Presidents to share ideas, concerns, and problems. By discussing current happenings within the diversified clubs and organizations, we hope the groups will be able to work together and develop a network for communication. Please join us on November 1 and bring any interested members from your club.

If you have any further questions, please feel free to stop by my office which is room 202B in the Union or call me at ext. 2284.

I look forward to seeing you on November 1.

Sincerely,
Ellen P. Servetnick
Program Director

Now that the break is over, anybody ready to lose a few pounds? We are certainly a weight conscious society, aren't we? You would sometimes think that the greatest threat to human existence is the middle age spread or fat thighs! And lately there seems to be more books out on dieting than sex! What a switch!

So let me add my two cents. For so many the struggle to take off pounds seems to be a life long one. People go from one diet plan to another and most successes turn out to be temporary.

I believe that many people attack the problem at the wrong place. We enter into a war with our bodies, attacking ourselves one pound at a time. I believe that underneath all the plans and promises, the real issue is our self esteem. How good we feel about ourselves, how secure we are in our own self image is critical to our ability to change ourselves by losing weight or gaining self confidence.

When we try to lose weight, we talk to ourselves like parents talking to a child and lay on ourselves a whole list of "shoulds": I shouldn't be like I am, I should stop eating, I should get in shape. At the other extreme, we work on ourself to change out of childlike feelings: I'm ugly and nobody likes me, she sure is pretty, what's wrong with me. Both kinds of messages, whether parental or childlike, reflect a lack of acceptance that negates the power for real change.

Significant personal growth and change is rooted in the discovery that we are persons of worth and value. A sense of personal worth leads to real internal power that allows us to set realistic goals that are important to us and follow through on them.

Knowing this doesn't make things all that much easier. Self acceptance is a real struggle for lots of folks; often taking an outside helper or friend or a deep spiritual experience for us to discover and come to believe in ourselves. Still, I think it is important to fight a battle in the right place. The struggle is not with our external pounds, but with our internal image of self. Calling ourselves names or laying out a whole list of shoulds just doesn't get the work done. Discovering the beautiful being that lives at the center of us is the liberating experience that will allow us to shape our bodies and our lives.

Hey, maybe I ought to write a book. I could call it "God, Self Image and Weight Loss". Probably not! Too much work! Anybody for pizza?!

Seahawk Editorial

Sunday, October 23rd.

At 6:20 a.m. a fanatic terrorist carried out a suicide attack on multinational peacekeeping forces stationed in Beirut, Lebanon. A two-and-a-half ton Mercedes truck loaded with explosives crashed through a Marine barricade, a fence and another obstacle into the lobby of the "Beirut Hilton" Marine Corps barracks. It exploded, reducing the four-story concrete building to a 20-ft. high pile of rubble. Inside were sleeping American Marines. More than 200 of them died.

As the daughter of a Marine, this tragedy affects me deeply, since I've lived all my life in Jacksonville near Camp LeJeune, the base for most of those Marines.

I was there Sunday as Camp LeJeune was put on "air alert", a state of readiness to deploy more troops, and I heard frantic wives calling radio stations, trying to find out details about their husbands in Beirut.

By 3:00 p.m. Sunday, 400 more Marines were shipped to Lebanon from the base and ships diverted to Grenada were re-routed to Beirut. Morale was supposedly at "a fever pitch," according to Commanding General Al Gray.

I know Marines who were deployed Sunday, and I've tried hard to understand why we are involved in Beirut in the first place. A lot of people are clamoring for all the Marines to leave, but why leave now?

If we had to be there before, we might as well stick it out.

This is a major event in world history and it calls for major decisions and security measures. As soldiers, these Marines need to take precautions -- frankly, our men are sitting ducks over there. No one likes Americans in that position.

Our government needs to either pull the Marines out totally or invade forcefully. Slaps on the wrist won't stop people willing to kill themselves to blow up sleeping soldiers.

We need to be committed strongly to a cause, for without one, the deployment of men to foreign posts makes no sense at all.

Faculty Network

Promotes Women's Issues

Kim Messick
Journalism Contributor

Promoting and supporting professional interests among faculty women is the main objective of the Faculty Women's Network, an organization which has existed at UNCW since 1981.

Assistant Professor of History, Kathy Berkely recognized the need for an organization for women when she joined the staff three years ago.

Since the formation of Faculty Women's Network, there has been interest in the group. The committee is headed by Berkely, Margaret Parish, Sylvia Polgar, Gayla Sanders and Barbara Waxman. The Faculty Women's Network promotes issues pertaining to women.

A child care program, if established on campus, would be for faculty, staff and students needing care for their children during the day.

"A child care program has a place on campus," said Berkely, "it would offer experience for education, psychology and recreation majors and nursing students."

Although there has not been a problem of discrimination at UNCW, the Network is concerned that male and female faculty members are treated equally and are recruited on an equal basis.

Berkely stresses that the Faculty Women's Network is open to all faculty members that are interested in the issues the committee supports.

"We promote women's business," said Berkely. "We help each other pursue professional interests and goals."

In addition to sponsoring National Women's History Week at UNCW every March, the Network is concerned with issues such as women's studies on campus, child care on campus and equality among male and female faculty members.

According to Berkely, women's studies are still in the thinking stage. They are looking at models of women's studies that already exist in the UNC system and will determine if there is a student interest at UNCW.

Upcoming Fun

Leigh Ann Askew
Journalism Contributor

On Thursday, October 27, capture the past and present with Antique Images, an old-time photographing troupe. Dress in their historical clothing, using your imagination to create your own personal image.

Friday night, October 28, Residence Life is staging a Cage Party behind Galloway Hall. Identification and Meal Cards are required at the gate. BYOB.

Saturday night, October 29, films will be shown in Galloway Hall. (Possibly Rocky Horror Picture Show—still in discussion with UPB).

On Saturday night, October 30, room 100 of the University Union will host a Creep Show to bring Halloween in with a scream.

A Halloween Party will be held in Hanover Hall on October 31, with the band Schizo and a Disc Jockey will be present to provide music during the band breaks. Admission will be $1.00 for those without costume, and .50 for those dressed for the occasion.

University Program Director, Ellen Servetnick comments, "Figmanka offers a week of fun and entertainment for students, and allows them to ease back into daily routine after Fall Break. It also helps to promote the University Program Board, the University Union, and their services."

Servetnick adds, "We want students to get involved in the University Program Board, and we want them to realize that it is a service created exclusively for their entertainment."

Fall Break Debate

By Leigh Ann Askew
Journalism Contributor

Fall Break: an entire week designed for the sole purpose of rest and relaxation. However, there is a possibility that fall break will cease to exist as early as next year.

Fall break has not always been a five day vacation. Twelve years ago it only lasted two days, but the faculty found that students cut classes to create their own five day break. About five or six years ago, the five-day vacation came into being.

There has been some attempt to eliminate fall break completely, or to reduce it to a two day break. Fall break is more difficult to fit into the fall schedule, whereas spring break poses no problems in the spring calendar.

But, the science department insists that, due to lab schedules, fall break must be a five day vacation or none at all. Also, Thomas C. McCall, chairman of the Calendar Committee, says, "I consider fall break not one bit less important than spring break—everybody has spring break."

McCall feels, "A fall break, and the benefit of resting the brain, is just as important, if not more important than the benefit spring break offers."

"The calendar of this school should serve the students," says McCall. "My responsibility is to look at it from the student's angle."

The final decision for or against fall break rests in the hands of the Chancellor. However, the Calendar Committee will continue to include fall break in the yearly schedule.

UNCW Hosts Top-Ranked Duke

Never before has the country's top-ranked team (in any sport) appeared on the UNCW campus.

But that will be the case next Wednesday (Nov. 2) when the Seahawk soccer squad hosts the powerful Duke Blue Devils here at 3 p.m. Barring an upset loss this weekend, Duke will bring an unbeaten record and the number one rating in the nation up against the 'Hawks.

The Blue Devils finished second in the country last year, losing to Indiana in the finals of the NCAA playoffs.

Sports Round Up:

While most UNCW students took a break from school over Fall break, many UNCW teams were in action.

The soccer team split a pair, UNCW's harriers competed in the state cross country meet, while the volleyball, golf and water polo teams hit the road to compete in tournament action.

UNCW defeated UNC Charlotte 3-1 on Sunday, Oct. 16, avenging a soccer loss earlier in the year in the Port City Classic. The following Tuesday, host South Carolina shut out the Seahawks 2-0 in Columbia. The 'Hawks win over the 49'ers in Charlotte saw goals by Freshman Pat Brown, Dave Compere, and Alberto Rodriguez.

The Seahawks are 8-7 for the year, and played Methodist College of Fayetteville on Tuesday. A big week is ahead for the squad, with a home match Wednesday against the nation's top team, Duke. On Saturday, Campbell comes to town to close out the season in a match that will likely determine whether the 'Hawks have a winning season or not.

The Duke match will mark the first time the nation's top-ranked team (in any sport) has visited the UNCW campus.

Coach Bill Atwill's men's and women's cross country teams traveled to Raleigh on Thursday, Oct. 13 for the state championships.

The men's team finished 13th out of 15 teams. N.C. State took top honors in both the men's and women's meet. Wake Forest was second in the men's race, while North Carolina was runner-up in the women's meet.

George Walker was UNCW's top finisher in the men's race, and Stacy Almond was first for the women.

Last Saturday, UNCW's Caroline Brady finished first in the ten-team Citadel Invitational. Brady led a group of Lady Seahawks that finished 8th out of ten teams.

As the regular season nears to a close, UNCW's volleyball team has 24 victories to its credit, breaking the school record of 21 set last year.

Coach Jackie Bartlett's squad won 5 of 6 matches over the break, including a third-place finish in the Coastal Carolina Invitational. In that tournament, UNCW defeated Coker, Concord, USC-Aiken (twice), and Greensboro College, losing only to Baptist. Monday at Shaw, the Lady 'Hawks whipped the home team and Winston-Salem State.

In Campbell's Invitational Golf Match last week, UNCW finished 17th out of 18 teams. UNCW finished with a 959 in the 54-hole event. Robert Freeman and Bill Fennell, Jr. were low for the 'Hawks at 235. Duke defeated Guilford in a playoff for the team title.

UNCW's water polo team took wins over Hampton-Sydney and Virginia Commonwealth to finish 2-3, and in a tie for third place at Richmond last weekend.

The Seahawk losses came to Washington & Lee, Richmond, and George Washington.

PSST.. THINK THERE'S ANYTHING TO THIS NFL DRUG BUSINESS..?

School Keeps Walker Running

Woody Willis
Production Staff

It is almost impossible to reach George Walker. Why? Not because he's out walking around, but rather because he's out running.

Walker is the Captain of the Cross Country Team and says that he runs somewhere between 80 and 90 miles a week. He also lifts weights 3 times a week and spends several hours a day stretching.

Walker says he hasn't missed a day of workout in about 8 months. He devotes about 25 to 30 hours a week to disciplined exercises.

All the time he spends running and working out doesn't affect his classes or grades. He spends almost every evening in the library and maintains a 3.5 GPA in a double major of History and English.

Sacrifices must be made to keep up the grades and to excel in the sport.

"It takes years to get good," Walker said, "You must build up slowly, you must become sort of addicted."

He cuts out the routine things like watching television and just lying around. He tries to keep his work out schedule flexible in case something important comes up he can take care of that first and work out later.

"The important thing is to set goals and go after them," Walker said.

He has two main goals at the moment. He hopes to lower his school record time of 31 minutes 42 seconds for 6.2 miles, and he hopes to qualify for the Olympic trials in four years.

The UNCW Student Women's Organization is sponsoring a film festival with a feminist perspective at 3 p.m., Sunday, Oct. 30. The event is free and the public is invited to attend.

Two features will be shown, "W.O.W. (Women of the World)" and "Kypseli: Men and Women Apart." Both are briefly described below.

Produced in honor of International Women's Year, "W.O.W." uses an animated collage of world art to present a creative history of the earth from the feminist point of view. The film evokes early creation myths and relationships between females and males in ancient matriarchal times. The invention of architecture, art, and the development of religion and civilization show women in leadership.

Suddenly, matriarchal life gives way to patriarchy. Women are silenced, caged, or wrapped up and placed on pedestals. Without voice and franchise, they scrub, toil, and bear children until the globe is overpopulated. Male-dominated governments fail to solve problems.

In anguish, the women rebel and are "born again." They abandon their cages, descend from their pedestals, achieve and organize. In the final sequences, equal partners celebrate together and figures reach out tentatively on a new equilibrium to explore the future.

"Kypseli: Women and Men Apart" is a film essay on the peasant society of Kypseli, a small isolated Greek village on the island of Thira. It depicts how the people of Kypseli divide time, space, material possessions, and activities according to an underlying pattern based on the separation of the sexes, and shows how this division determines the village social structure.

Leonard said UNCW's leadership role in North Carolina has expanded in recent years and he expects the university to be even more important to the state in the future, provided it receives proper support from state and private sources.

Wagoner expressed appreciation for the contribution to the Cameron School of Business Administration. "I applaud the leadership shown by NCNB in establishing the NCNB Scholar Program," he said.

Dr. Norman Kaylor, dean of the business school, noted that NCNB has been "one of our strong supporters over the years."

Bond is Back

Never Say Never Again

Sean Connery, vowing never to play Bond again, returns triumphantly as 007, wolf-grin intact to reclaim some of his former glory.

Though Roger Moore successfully replaced Connery in the Bond films after his departure, a legal sleight of hand has allowed this script (which Ian Fleming helped write) to fall in the hands of producer, Jack Schwartzman and director, Irin Kershner.

The result offers the serious Bond aficionado a tremendous opportunity to contrast the different approaches to the Bond image that Connery and Moore emplot.

Apparently Kershner as director sensed this same challenge for he meticulously constructs a slow, methodical suspense that perfectly captures the pace that Connery projects as Bond. Whereas Roger Moore can be seen darting around in a flying golf cart in the alleyways of India killing off spies with a wink and a pardon me, Sean Connery is a more ancient Bond who has his superiors doubting his worthiness in a more realistic world with more limited reliance on gadgetry.

The real tongue-in-cheek to all these comparisons is the fact that this script was actually used as a part of an earlier Bond film, Thunderball. The irony and satire are apparent throughout which makes this film so enticing.

Connery is still gorgeous and offers a portrayal full of magnetism. Kim Basinger as one of the female leads looks as fetching as any of the Bond women but is surpassed in performance by the slithery snake-charmer Barbara Carrera.

As Carrera tears into a juicy villainous role with sheer abandon. Her departure as a screaming Banshee secure in the fact she was Bonds best . . . (?) is one of the film's highlights.

Specture, M, Q, and Miss Money Penny are all still around in various guises yet this remains Connery's film. Go see the original James Bond today!

Initially knocked about as a Yes band imitation with art rock pretensions, the original Genesis band had too much talent to ignore. At the height of their live shows Peter Gabriel ('Shock the Monkey') left for one of his many costume changes and never came back . . . exit stage left. Given up for dead, Genesis grimly regrouped without their frontman and astonishingly their drummer, Phil Collins, started singing as if Gabriel was still in the band. Then the guitarist, Steve Hackett, left for the murky solo depths and the remaining three piece was left without their shoes and socks. Faced with yet another dilemma this band again showed their determination and talent. Then There Was Three was released and yielded a big hit 'Follow You, Follow Me'; a love song which perfectly mirrored the emotional merry-go-round of living happily ever after. Last year's Abacab capped off the hard work and versatility with a top ten album of catchy pop phrasing and jazz riff solos. Combined with the dynamic emotional catharsis that Phil Collins first laid bare on his solo LP (Face Value), Genesis had finally struck gold and had risen from the twilight like a phoenix.

Genesis is the followup to Abacab, after another round of solo ventures, and demonstrates the total studio control and musicianship which has given this band such resilience over the years. For anyone who enjoyed Abacab the new LP will not prove disappointing. Similar in style and content, Genesis does borrow more of the pop commercialism of Collins' solo career at a loss of the musical textures which made Abacab so interesting.

'Mama', frankly, is a poor choice for a single for this LP. It's too slow and plodding with Collins raving about in an echo chamber, something fully explored in Face Value. Besides, there is something about Mama twenty or thirty times that hurts the ears. 'Taking It All Too Hard' is a beautiful lament with Beatlesque power that would make a more powerful single. Buoyed by bassist Mike Rutherford's switch to guitar and Tony Banks' keyboard aura effects the stark simplicity of this cut illustrates well the sacrifice this band makes for the sake of a song. Other songs such as 'Just A Job To Do' and 'Illegal Alien' bring to mind Abacab with uptempo rhythms and the keyboard wizardry of Tony Banks, certainly one of rock's greatest keyboardists.

Though Genesis does not hang together as well in concept like the early albums with Gabriel, there are still plenty of highlights on this varied LP. 'Second Home By The Sea' has a dynamic intro that features the bottom heavy drumming of Collins in tandem with the meandering hypnosis of Banks. 'It's Gonna Get Better' could be another single with a sensitive vocal falsetto and some bewitching synthesizer that leaves us guessing about this band's commitment to the future.

SNCAE

The Student North Carolina Association for Educators held a membership drive party on Sept. 29 to encourage students to join the organization.

A crowd gathered by the steps of King Hall to eat ice cream and watch performances by Lloyd Wilson and Tim Kennedy of Artist Outreach.

As part of the African celebration theme, the "SNCAE Volunteer African Percussion Ensemble" was formed from six members of the audience who played assorted percussion instruments to the accompaniment of rhythmical clapping from the crowd.

The SNCAE's purpose, according to Treasurer Jamie Chestnutt, is "to make the students more aware as student educators." At monthly club meetings they receive practical advice from professional educators about education in the community.

Students interested in joining this organization can contact either Jamie Chestnutt, Elaina Meiz (President) or Dr. Bartolome (Advisor).

Ghost Haunts Thalian Hall

Mary Jeffries
Journalism Contributor

Do you believe in ghosts? You might after visiting Thalian Hall.

Thalian Hall, on the corner of Third and Princess streets, has been a part of Wilmington for over 125 years. According to Tyrone Power Jr., it is considered one of the three greatest theatres in the world with its impressive exterior and beautifully designed interior.

Thalian Hall is not only known for its history, but also for the ghost that haunts it. James O'Neal performed in many productions in Thalian Hall and died some years ago, but to some people his presence is still there.

Phillip Cumber, manager at Thalian Hall, has never really been visited by James, but knows of some incredible stories, such as things being moved around and figures appearing.

One evening during rehearsal the actors on stage looked up in the balcony to see two people sitting there. The actors went up to the balcony but no one was there, only two seats folded out where the figures were spotted.

"I have been here myself late at night, and you get the feeling someone is watching you, over your shoulder type of thing, so I don't stay here by myself too much," said Cumber.

Scott Davis, the technical director works very late hours sometimes from midnight to 8 a.m. by himself.

"I have had many experiences with James, such as my tools being moved when I need them, and one time I was using my tape measure and put it down just for a second, when I reached back down for it, it had been moved six feet! I get mad at James and yell at him, and usually I get my tools back," claims Davis.

Joan Preston, an actress, has encountered James in Thalian Hall and she believes he has also followed her home.

After the production "West Side Story," Preston and another actor were closing the theatre. They turned out the lights but they kept coming back on. There was no one else in the theatre and they had the only key to the light board. Preston felt that James had been frightened by the violent murder scenes in the play and wanted to keep the lights on. Preston compromised with the ghost and told him he could leave on one light. The lights dimmed and only the hall light stayed on.

One night Preston came home from having an emotional evening in the theatre and a friend was staying the night. As she reached to turn the lamp off to go to bed, it clicked like it should have turned off, but it remained on. This went on for about ten minutes.

"I thought that James was worried about me since I was upset, so I told him I was okay

No Pay TV In Dorms

Karen Waddell
Staff Writer

At UNCW, students living on campus will have to stick only to network television and cable stations. To many student's dismay, pay television channels are not available to those living in the dorms or in on-campus apartments.

In today's society, as television's capabilities increase, most people have access to a wider variety of television entertainment. But UNCW resident students are an exception.

When asked why on-campus students cannot get pay television channels, Ed Jones, Auxiliary Services Coordinator at UNCW, said that the dorms are now on a common cable and that if one person received a pay channel, everyone would have to.

"The budget doesn't allow us," said Jones. "We can't afford it."

At present, UNCW provides free cable to all resident students.

A Vision Cable employee who asked not to be named, offered a slightly different view of the subject. The employee said that the university does not want to be bothered with adding pay channels to the already installed cable.

Some students are less than pleased with the arrangement. Dorm student, John Van Campen said, "Since we have the capacity and the cable is already there, then there is no reason why we should be restricted if we are willing to pay for the additional channels."

Another dorm student wishing to remain anonymous, said that he had rigged up HBO and other pay channels in his room successfully. He reported that no one else received those signals and that it was possible for one television to receive additional channels without interfering with the signal of anyone else in the dorm.

"Brownie, he real little. He only six. But he real smart. He know how to read." This quote from an eight-year-old black child speaks to the heart of the Ann Arbor Black English case as described by educator Geneva Smitherman Friday at UNCW.

Smitherman told a packed King Hall auditorium that the case was brought on behalf of elementary school students against the Ann Arbor school district. The intent, she said, was to force the school system to do only what it was supposed to do—teach students to read.

Standard English was being taught in the Michigan schools, she said, but black children who used black English were judged as having learning disabilities and treated accordingly.

Because of her expertise in linguistics, Smitherman was very involved in the case, which along with language barrier problems involved suspensions, other disciplinary actions and speech classes for the 13 percent black population of the Martin Luther King Elementary School.

Smitherman charged that schools can't blame parents' backgrounds. "The school is obligated to educate," she said.

The case was based on a provision in the Equal Educational Opportunity Act of 1974, which protects any child from discrimination based on an inability to speak English.

Smitherman said the negative attitude of faculty toward black English-speaking children affected them mentally by placing them on learning disability status. It became "a

Letters to the Editor

As you know, in the last edition of the Seahawk there was an announcement from our wonderful food service. It informed the students that the times for eating lunch in the Snack Bar with a meal ticket have changed. This is unfair. On-campus residents are forced to buy meal plans and I purchased as few meals as possible, ten a week. I only use this meal plan at lunch and the only place and time is the Union at eleven o'clock. My classes run so that this is the only time I can eat. I like eating in the Union. The food is good and it is easy and the Union is uncrowded, unlike the cafeteria. I am now going to have to go without lunch. I pay for ten meals a week. Up to now, I have only used half of them. I hate to imagine the money this food service is making off me and others like me.

The reason the times have changed is because the Snack Bar is taking money away from the cafeteria. That should tell them something about the food. I have eaten there only a few times this year. When I heard we were getting a new food service, I was extremely happy. The food had to improve! I was sadly mistaken. The portions that they give you are small, but then this is good since the food lacks flavor! Meals which I thought would be impossible to ruin, this cafeteria has found a way to.

When the contract was made, the students had no input into it. As a result, they are making up rules for the students (whom they are supposedly serving) at the student's expense. I would like to see the times changed back to the way they were or better yet, be able to use your meal card all day. I am sure if enough students protest, we can reach a compromise or at least better food.

Kathy Harris

We students are being taken advantage of every day in one of several ways; here's just a few ways that I can think of:

1. Our ARA, who is here to serve the students constantly changes snack bar serving hours and rules (such as accepting checks) at their whim. What they decide goes no matter what students and faculty have to say about it.

2. We living on campus, are required to buy a meal ticket, but as hours are changed and limits are declared, students pay for meals they aren't able to eat. Guess who pockets the extra money?

3. ARA is contracted to be the only catering service for clubs, groups or organizations, therefore there can be no outside intervention. Last year PFM allowed students to use their meal cards to delete from the price of a catered meal, this year you can forget it. Besides paying once for the catering meal cards will not be accepted, thus we're paying twice for one meal.

4. ARA may have underbid PFM in gaining contract with us, but now they're making up for the difference through us.

5. ARA has signed a 5 year contract with UNCW at this rate we'll be paying 5 times more for the next 5 years.

Is this the quality service you paid for? Make your view known and join a constructive effort to make a difference. Things will not be improved until we say "Enough is enough".

Cindy Holt

ARA and their dining hour changes. Pretty soon there won't be any hours for me to work around.

How about dinner from 5:40 to 5:43, or breakfast at 3:00 in the morning?

I thought I had it all figured out, switched my schedule so that I could have a nice deli sandwich at 4:30, which is when meal card dinner starts. Guess what folks--the deli is now closed at 4:00! The deli's new hours are from 9:00 to 4:00.

Who wants a deli sandwich at 9:00 in the morning? (Maybe they mean 9 p.m. to 4 a.m.)

Why do they even call the place a student snack bar? Oh, I think I understand now. Once you take away all the possible hours and delete the cooks and deli shop, all you have is a few crackers that you paid at least $377.50 per semester for--and that is if you live off-campus.

Q: When is getting more actually getting less?

A: When you're trying to eat lunch at UNCW!!

Coming back from Fall Break, Monday, October 24, it slipped my mind that the hours had been changed, so I skipped down to the Student Union Snack Bar to eat my merry little lunch before class at 12:00. (I have classes 'til 2:00 and I work at the Seahawk office 'til 11:15.) Alas!! I discovered to my horror that (gasp!) I was no longer permitted to eat with my meal card!

That really ticked me off.

I ate in the Snack Bar because it was extremely inconvenient for me to go to the cafeteria. There's always a long line there, and to be perfectly frank, the food's not that great. But I expect that in a cafeteria.

I asked the food service director, Paul Thomas, why the hours had been changed. He told me that the University and the food service agreed that the Snack Bar was being overcrowded and that it really had been designed for cash-only customers.

I paid cash for my meal card. Doesn't that count?

Thomas also pointed out that now lunch hours were actually longer(!) Yeah, but I'm still gonna have to eat in the cafeteria.

The way I figure it, since I don't usually eat breakfast and I don't eat at all on weekends--the food service people owe me something...if not money, then at least the right to eat where and when it's convenient.

I write amidst the unfolding agony of Beirut and the incredible invasion of Grenada. Families sit waiting for the news of death. Soldiers are going to places like these and Central America. Our weapons, a whole new generation of weapons, are being deployed in Europe over the protests of masses of people who are our allies.

I feel no pride. Rather, there is a growing sense of despair in the pit of my stomach. I grew up with the image of Americans as everyone's allies. Since Vietnam there has been an increasing perception of Americans as enemies rather than friends.

While I love my nation, I cannot bring myself to be nationalistic. We live in a world plagued with nationalist attitudes where one country's agenda is carried out with no regard for the agenda of any other nation and where the ends perceived as dominant to the small ruling elite seem to justify the means.

Patriotism carries a better feeling for me. Patriotism connotes a deep love for my country, its peoples and its dreams. Yet it also allows for opposition, even for protest by its citizens. Those of us who feel deeply that the escalating arms race and increasing intervention in the affairs of other nations is wrong, dangerous and self defeating are not unAmerican or unpatriotic. On the contrary, it is out of the deepest sort of love of country that many of us whose innocence was lost during Vietnam and Watergate are willing to examine our countries' weaknesses as well as its strengths. To be a loving and outspoken critic is, to me, an increasingly patriotic role.

Even deeper than patriotism lies my faith and the perceptions and values that emerge from rooting my life in the selfgiving love of God. From that perspective, too, come grave questions about seeking security in weapons and warriors when true security can only be found in the love of God. And the percentage of our national wealth used for military purposes rather than dealing with the personal and life nourishing needs of our society and the peoples of other nations seems immoral. To see my country increasing joining in the dance of death that is war and the preparation for war is sad and disheartening. I don't want to dance. I don't want my nation to be a part of that dance. The body count is already too high!

UNCW Cadets Get Grenada-Style Training

Spearheading the recent U.S. invasion of Grenada were the Army's elite airborne Rangers, experts in striking quietly and quickly.

More often than not that means getting there by jumping out of an airplane with a parachute on.

This type of training is not part of every soldier's curriculum, but even here at UNCW, ROTC cadets have been to jump school and earned their wings.

Cadet captain Kevin Hewett recalls what the experience was like:

"This summer eight students from the UNCW Army ROTC cadet corp attended the U.S. Army Airborne School. Five received their wings from Fort Benning, Georgia (the original Airborne school), and the other three through the shorter course at Fort Bragg, NC, taught by members of the Fifth Special Forces Group.

The Basic Airborne Course is one of the Army's most physically demanding, designed to orient a soldier to the rigorous and dangerous profession of the U.S. Army paratrooper.

Each day began at 3:30 a.m. or 4:30 a.m. with continuous running and several hundred push-ups. To successfully complete "Jump School", as it is commonly called, cadets had to maintain a positive attitude regardless of the mental and physical abuse they encountered.

At Fort Benning the three-week course was broken down into three phases.

The first phase is "ground week", intended to teach the students the proper way to react when contact with the ground is made, as well as how to exit the aircraft. The exits started from "mock-ups" of the aircraft fuselage on the ground, then went to 34 foot towers.

The second week, known as "tower week", increases the physical training, and teaches various emergency procedures in case of a malfunction. This week is highlighted by two free-drops from the world famous "Ungava" 250 foot tower.

The third week, "jump week" used everything the cadets learned in the first two weeks.

Most of the student's first jumps were "night jumps", meaning they were too frightened to open their eyes. However, to finish the course, the student must make five successful jumps from an aircraft at heights ranging from 1,250 feet to 1,500 feet.

As they loaded up for their jumps, the fear was evident, especially when the airplane's door was opened, letting in a sudden rush of wind and the roar of the engines.

Once the jumpmaster gave his command, "Stand in the door!", there was no turning back. Suddenly the lights turned green and he shouted "GO!!" They next instant was a blur, with the prop blast and the sudden loss of balance (not to mention loss of airplane).

The shock of the chute opening and the sight of a full canopy was a wonderful experience. But the ride was not over yet. Now you have to avoid all of these other guys floating around up there with you. Soon you prepare to land—hopeful of executing a dynamite landing fall, springing to your feet uninjured and shouting "AIRBORNE!". After your fifth and final qualifying jump you are now worthy of wearing the coveted Airborne Wings and being a member of an elite group known as The Airborne!

Lost And Found

By Angie Latta

You know the feeling: as you go to pay for the movie, you realize your wallet is gone. You turn the car upside-down and kick your roommate out of bed while looking for it. But you realize that it's truly lost, along with your driver's license, student I.D., the pictures of your sweetheart and the $5.00 bill that was to last the two weeks until payday!

Don't fret, because there may be one more place that you haven't thought of: the Lost and Found at the Student Union.

In this lost and found, there are keys, calculators, clothes, books, basketballs, watches, and everything else anyone could have lost. All you have to do is stop by the information center and take a look to see if what you lost is there. (Hey! Maybe that's where my gym shorts from PE 101—spring '80—are!!)

So stop by the Union and check it out from 8-10 on weekdays and 12-10 on weekends.

New Job Location and Development Program Begins

Job hunting? You are in luck. A new Job Location and Development Program has just been launched at UNCW.

As part of the Career Planning and Placement office, Job Location and Development can help full or part time students find permanent or temporary off-campus employment.

The UNCW program has been modeled after several other NC universities and colleges such as UNCG, UNCC, Guilford, Greensboro, and Bennett. These programs have been proven effective.

According to Tom Fields, Job Location and Development Coordinator, there has already been "a heavy volume of successful students."

Most of the job listings that the office receives are part-time, minimum wage, and located within New Hanover County. However, there are some exceptions like internships and summer employment opportunities.

To become registered with the program, a student must complete an information card and meet with Mr. Fields. The entire registration process takes only about ten minutes, and students must re-register every semester in order to update class schedules and employment interests.

The Job Location and Development Offices are located in Room 106 in the University Union and the hours are 8 a.m.-5 p.m. Monday through Friday.

A Grand Opening for the office is scheduled for Friday, November 4th from 10 a.m. until 2 p.m. and ALL students are invited.

Lionel Richie has become a pop-soul phenomenon capable of melting hearts. A song stylist who knows no boundaries, Mr. Richie appears on all the Billboard charts. Spurred on by his success with the Commodores and the hit 'Lady' with none other than Kenny Rogers, Lionel has embarked on a huge solo career still reaching for its heights.

Richie is simple, straightforward and romantic, borrowing from all forms and mixing these elements with unobtrusive strings, keyboard and rhythm that highlight the infectious hooks and pervading melody. In a recent interview Mr. Richie expressed his desire to go beyond pop to create a song classic that would stand the test of time. Look out Las Vegas since it appears Lionel Richie has arrived!

Can't Slow Down, his second solo venture, illustrates this philosophy well and will become another huge success. The title tune 'Can't Slow Down' contrasts a funky synthesizer riff meant for dancing with a restrained vocal touch. 'All Night Long' is a balmy Jamaican night breeze in an easy calypso style headed for No. 1 with its unique vocal phrasing a la Jimmy Cliff. 'Penny Lover' and 'Stuck on You' are love songs done in a familiar Richie style... with warmth, honesty, and integrity.

The relaxed confidence shown in Lionel's voice, a gift which makes him so appealing to couple is emphasized by 'The Only One' on side 2. Who cares if the melody sounds vaguely familiar--the mix thanks to David Foster works! 'Running With The Night' features a collaboration with the legendary songwriter Cynthia Weil, an uptempo neon extravaganza that's as close to rock as Richie will get. Always better appreciated sitting down Lionel smartly closes Can't Slow Down with 'Hello' a painful song that "starts by saying I love you." For those of us familiar with his previous work the hot streak continues.

SGA Honors Dead

"In the interest of national honor I move that we dedicate one minute of this week's meeting in a silent tribute to the Marines who were killed this week in Beirut."

This motion, made at last week's Senate meeting, was, to the dismay of most of the senators, objected to.

The author of the motion, Kevin Markham, amended the motion to read "American servicemen" in place of "Marines," and "the invasion of Grenada" to be inserted after Beirut.

Again, an objection was made and Markham, obviously frustrated, said, "...all I wanted was one minute of silence instead of ten minutes of bickering."

Gavings defended his objection by saying that he wasn't against the motion, but "if you're going to write it down, do it right," and that, instead of just concerning "a specific conflict, it should be all-inclusive."

The motion passed, however, with only two negative votes.

A new $1.5 million dollar bookstore facility is planned to be built at UNCW by the fall of 1984. The student health center, campus police and parking services will be located in the building also.

The new bookstore will be located in the same area, next to the Student Union. It will be more convenient for the students to have all the offices located in one building.

The existing bookstore will be moved east of the dormitories, where a new physical plant has been designated. It will house the new physical plant offices. Later the entire plant operation will be moved to the new site.

"Big Chill" Warms Hearts

"You Can't Always Get What You Want," appropriately enough, was Alex's favorite song and is played on the organ at his funeral.

What? The Rolling Stones in church? Yes. The Big Chill deals with a group of friends who were in college together in the sixties, and consequently anything goes: drugs, embarrassing wounds from Vietnam, the prophesy of Kafka and extramarital sex.

In the first scene a woman answers the phone; we see a mournful look come over her face; we know something's happened, but what? Cut to men putting on black socks and dark suits. We know someone's died. Director/screenwriter Lawrence Kasdan has done a fine job of showing without telling.

The economy of words is just right throughout the movie, but through dialogue and implication we learn that Alex, one of the gang, has killed himself. How do his friends, spread out over the years, learn of his suicide? "I heard it through the grapevine," answers the musical score.

At the funeral, William Hurt, from Kasdan's earlier Body Heat, is reunited with Glenn Close (The World According to Garp) and Broadway's Kevin Kline, along with other college friends. There's superb acting in The Big Chill yet no one steals the show. If anyone does steal the show, it's the deceased Alex who dominates nearly everyone's mind and conversation (except Meg Tilley, playing his girlfriend, who seems about as heart-broken and caring as she did in Psycho II).

Alex's suicide has given them all "the big chill": maybe their lives since college haven't been as wonderful as they'd like to believe.

Thus, with this hard-to-swallow realization, they go through a weekend of several very believable mood changes and some extremely interesting and well-developed arguments.

They are understandably depressed, and the only thing that keeps the movie from being a total downer is the perfectly adapted music. Through Alex's suicide we see that "you can't always get what you want," but we discover through his friends that "you just might find you get what you need."

SID John Justus Hosting Daily Show on WMFD

UNCW's Sports Information Director John Justus is hosting a radio show on WMFD every Monday through Friday.

The 5-minute show, which airs at 6:05 p.m., gives insights into UNCW athletics. Justus interviews players, coaches and other UNCW athletic personalities on the show, in addition to giving results of Seahawk teams.

"I'm really happy to be doing the show," Justus said. "It gives a lot of exposure to our athletic program here."

With Fall sports coming to a close and Winter sports about to begin, Justus will be talking about the upcoming men's and women's basketball teams along with the swimming team, in addition to other happenings in the UNCW athletic program.

Justus

"The fact that the show is on five times weekly will give me a chance to cover all sports, not just the bigger sports," Justus said.

UNCW Sets Record, Advances

UNCW's record setting volleyball team will be one of six schools competing in the NAIA district 26 tournament this weekend at Guilford College.

The Lady Seahawks finished the regular season at a 25-12 mark. The 25 wins break a school record for the most victories in one season. Coach Jackie Bartlett's club collected 21 wins last year.

UNCW, which is seeded fourth, will take on Lenoir-Rhyne at 6 p.m. on Friday in one of two first-round games in the single elimination tourney. Lenoir-Rhyne is seeded fifth. Should the Lady Seahawks win, they will take on top-seeded and tourney host Guilford.

Other first round action pits third-seeded Atlantic Christian College against sixth-seeded Shaw. The winner will play second-seeded High Point in the other semifinal contest.

The finals are stated for Saturday.

UNCW appears to be peaking just in time for the tournament, winning nine of its last ten matches including a season finale win over rival East Carolina.

"I really think that any of the teams there, including us, have a shot at winning the tournament," Bartlett said. "The team that is playing well this weekend will win it," according to Bartlett.

Of the five teams that could play UNCW in the tournament, the Lady Seahawks have beaten three—Guilford, High Point and Shaw—this season.

UNCW's season-ending win over ECU, finished up a week that included four straight victories. On Monday, Oct. 24, The Lady Seahawks disposed of Winston-Salem State and Shaw. High Point fell on Wednesday in a match that was won by UNCW earlier in the year, but was protested by the Lady Panthers because the net was two inches too high.

UNCW's thriller over ECU was scored 16-14, 13-15, 17-15, 4-15, 15-12 in a best-of-five dual match.

Bartlett

Sports Round-Up

Saturday's home match with Campbell will conclude UNCW's soccer season, and could very well determine whether the Seahawks finish above .500 or not.

UNCW is 9-7, and hosted the nation's top-ranked team, Duke, on Wednesday.

UNCW's women's golf team will be winding up its season next week also. The Lady Seahawks will visit Raleigh for the NC State Invitational on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday.

UNCW Junior George Walker finished first and broke a course record in a home dual meet with Francis Marion Saturday.

Francis Marion won the meet 33-26.

Walker finished with a time of 33:31 on the 10,000 m (6.2 miles) course.

HCA Meeting Is Scheduled

All students interested in joining Home Court Advantage should attend an organizational meeting Thursday night at 7 in Trask 119.

The group attends all home basketball games and participates with the band and cheerleaders producing pep and spirit for the Seahawk cagers.

UNCW's Sarah Womble hits deck in volleyball game earlier in year.

Seashells On Display

In conjunction with the exhibit "Shells and Man" currently on display at UNCW, the Museum of World Cultures is sponsoring a lecture by Dr. R. Tucker Abbott, former president of the American Malacological Union at 8 p.m., Thursday, Nov. 10 in Bryan Auditorium in Morton Hall.

Preceding the lecture will be the formal opening of the exhibit at 7 p.m. in the second floor foyer of Randall Library Auditorium. The public is invited to attend both free events.

In addition to the display in Randall Auditorium, the shells are on exhibit in the lobby of the Social and Behavioral Sciences building. According to Dr. Gerald Shinn, acting director and curator of the Museum and professor of philosophy and religion, the exhibit is quite interesting.

"There are beautiful triton shells used in Asia for calling in buffaloes and huge trumpet shells from the islands, used for communication," Shinn said.

Landmark Ideas Sought

A committee appointed by UNCW Board of Trustees Chairman John J. Burney, Jr. is seeking ideas from all sectors of the community, students, faculty, staff and alumni to develop a suitable landmark for the campus of The University of North Carolina at Wilmington.

The landmark will be the centerpiece of a 15-acre plot of ground adjacent to the University Union in the central area of campus earmarked for development as a University Commons, with extensive landscaping, brick walkways and an amphitheatre.

Ideas for a landmark should be sent in writing to the Landmark Committee by December 1 in care of Dr. Jairy Hunter, Vice Chancellor for Business Affairs and Development, UNCW, 601 South College Road, Wilmington, N.C.

Parking Fees Detailed

Where Does Your Money Go?

By Angie Latta
Features Editor

Forty dollars can buy a dozen roses, a keg of beer, four albums, a new pair of tennis shoes, a textbook from the UNCW bookstore, and a UNCW parking sticker.

Yes, $40.00 is a lot of money for a sticky piece of paper with a bird and a number on it. But when you consider how many days you will park during an academic year, it comes out to .25 per user cost per day to park on UNCW's campus.

Still too much just to put your car between two precious white lines that you've fought over? Well, keep in mind that you're paying for more than that spot. The $40.00 goes more places than you can imagine.

For instance, a whopping 51 percent goes to parking administration and campus police salaries. Twenty-two percent goes into debits retirements (for those of us who aren't business majors, that means loan payments for existing lots!) For repair and maintenance, 17 percent is distributed and supplies and current services get 9 percent. For the future lots, a big 10 percent of the $40.00 is reserved.

When you consider all the places it goes, $40.00 isn't really that much.

At least we don't have to walk everywhere like they do at Carolina and State. But who knows, as big as UNCW is getting, right? Now that I think about it, $40.00 isn't all that much. I'd rather pay than ride the bus!

Kim Blount closes her eyes as she draws names out of a hopper at the Gamefield dedication ceremonies. Winners received Gamefield T-shirts or sun visors. Both local television stations, faculty members and students were on hand for the ribbon cutting Wednesday, Oct. 2.

Masonboro Island Current Controversy

Karen Waddell
Staff Writer

Masonboro Island, a textbook example of a barrier island, is a protected land because of its educational and research value. The island, which is located between Wrightsville and Carolina Beaches, is approximately seven miles long. Comprised of unusual varieties of plants, extensive marshland and sandy dunes, the island is famous for its Tern nesting sites and the habitation of endangered Loggerhead sea turtles.

Masonboro Island is now the center of controversy. Developers want to convert the land into a residential area and conservationists want to preserve the island.

The first meeting of the Society for Masonboro Inc. was held Wednesday night at King Hall Auditorium. The group's goal is to preserve the barrier island and keep it from future development.

During the meeting, Dr. Paul Hosier, professor of biological sciences at UNCW, showed slides of Masonboro Island to give the audience a better idea of the island's value. Over the past several years, Dr. Hosier and his students have conducted various experiments and research on the island.

Masonboro Island is first on the state's acquisition list as an estuarine sanctuary. The island was one of four areas listed by the state in 1981 to be protected.

Barnes Resigns As Radio President

La Vera Parker-Jeffreys
Editor

Jay Barnes, president of the campus radio organization, submitted his resignation on Tuesday to SGA president Eric Squires.

Barnes explained, "I resigned for personal reasons; however lack of support for the development of the station was a big factor in my decision."

"I feel that the organization has a lot of energy and desire to make the project go. But without input and guidance from administrative sources it lacks the foundation for success and will continue to be frustrated in its efforts to get on the air."

Barnes feel the group should continue to work toward having a station at UNCW and he encourages the group to further their efforts. After working on this project for a year and a half, Barnes feels he has accomplished a lot toward reaching that goal.

He expressed a desire to see the project progress. Barnes expressed his gratitude to Eric Squires and the SGA for their support of the radio at UNCW.

Food Complaints Prompt SGA Action

Debbie Connly
SGA Reporter

The appearance in last week's Seahawk of three negative letters to the editor concerning ARA, the new campus food service, has prompted the Student Government Senate to unanimously pass a motion establishing a Committee for the Improvement of Food Service on Campus.

Senators reported hearing many complaints about ARA, especially concerning new restrictions on times in which meal cards are accepted in the Student Union Snack Bar.

Students with meal cards have expressed grievances over what they consider to be inconvenient times when they are permitted to use their cards, and also what many feel to be preferential treatment being given to cash-paying customers.

These students are not satisfied with ARA's stand that the Snack Bar is designed primarily for cash-paying customers, and the cafeteria for meal card holders. They contend that the long lines at the cafeteria, along with what some have said to be poorer food, make the Snack Bar a more appealing alternative for them.

Senators are hopeful that this new committee will be instrumental in resolving the conflict between these different groups.

GOOD NEWS... I HEAR HE'S SENDING US TO THE LITTLE BIG HORN...
BUT ONLY AS ADVISORS...

Stillpoint

By Bob Haywood, Campus Minister

This week is World Hunger Awareness Week at UNCW and Friday is also Veteran's Day. Hunger awareness reminds us that hunger has never been more extensive and debilitating than it is now. Veterans Day, beyond being an occasion to honor the sacrificial death of millions of our nation's soldiers and the service of our nation's veterans, also points to the incredible price of war. It is appropriately symbolic that these two events happen in the same week for there is a connection between world hunger and the current threat of conventional war and the developing arms race.

About ten thousand people a day die from hunger or malnutrition of related diseases. Seven hundred million people are malnourished, 1.2 billion people without pure water, 16 million are refugees, 1.2 billion are without adequate clothing or housing, and 1.6 billion go without effective medical care. And yet, according to the World Bank, "At the global level, if income were distributed differently, present output of grain alone could supply every man, woman and child with more than 3,000 calories and 65 grams of protein per day - far more than the highest estimates of requirements. Eliminating malnutrition would require redirecting only about two percent of the world's grain output to the mouths that need it." Beyond food, in the rural areas of the developing world, eighty percent of all the diseases can be attributed to inadequate water or sanitation. The effect is that almost fifteen million children under the age of five die every year, accounting for more than 1/3 of all the world's deaths. What is needed is six to seven billion dollars per year to produce potable or useable water.

Are you aware that six to seven billion dollars is spent every two weeks in developed countries for military purposes? The world is spending 550 billion dollars on arms per year. That is twice as much as it spends on food, five times as much as it spends on housing, and two thousand times as much as it spends on international peacekeeping. Subsidized dining by top military and civilian officials in the Pentagon costs the U.S. tax payer $24 a meal. The school lunch program for the poor children costs $1.20 a meal. World military expenditures average $19,300 per soldier. Public expenditures for education average $380 per school age child, eleven dollars per capita for health research, and six cents per capita for peace keeping. In the global population, there are 556 soldiers and 85 physicians per 100,000 people.

And if you think the problem is somewhere over there, know that in the U.S., the world's first super power, one person in 7 lives below the poverty threshold. In the U.S.S.R., the infant mortality rate is over twice the average of other developed countries. What does this say about our priorities?

Our fear of war and search for security through arms is creating an incredible drain of our resources (the price of one jet fighter could set up about 40,000 village pharmacies), diverting an inordinate amount of technical expertise and talent, increasing the national debt of developing nations to arms suppliers, and creating a world that is less and less secure. A United Nations report states that accelerating military spending "undermines national security".

What do we do? We can begin by becoming more aware and informed by educating ourselves. We can then make some decisions about our personal lifestyle priorities and our national priorities and begin to express those opinions to decision makers and those in power. And finally, we can center our lives more and more in the heart of God where in lies the only security that can really never fail.

Living Off Campus:

Students Talk Pros and Cons

Sherry Johnson
Journalism Contributor

The advantages and disadvantages of living off-campus as opposed to living within the university community of UNCW are limited to the circumstances surrounding the lifestyles of students.

Students choose to commute to UNCW for a variety of reasons. They may want to remain at home with their families or share an apartment with friends. Perhaps they are unable to obtain a dorm room.

For whatever reasons students choose to live where they do during their college career, there are sure to be benefits and drawbacks concerning their residential status.

One major advantage of living in a dorm or an on-campus apartment is meeting more people. This setting enables fellow students to cultivate and establish many friendships.

Senior Monica Mewald, who spent her freshman year on campus, agrees. "You don't have the advantage of meeting lots of people when you live off-campus. It's harder to get to know people," she said.

Off-campus students have more privacy and a quieter atmosphere. As a result, many students see an improvement in their study habits.

Katherine Clark, a UNCW junior, says, "It's easier to study off-campus because there is less temptation to join my friends and do something else."

Perhaps the main disadvantage of living away from the university is traveling back and forth each day. Living off campus means a student must start the day earlier in order to find a parking space. Residents of the campus, on the other hand, are within walking distance of all campus buildings.

So it seems both on- and off-campus living has advantages and disadvantages. When contemplating such a move, students should decide what fits better in their life's setting.

Speech Division Requests Access To A/V Center

Steve Hill
Journalism Contributor

In a proposal to administration earlier last month, the speech division of the creative Arts department requested control over access to the Audio Visual Center, located in room 212 of the Student Union.

The proposal calls for the prioritization of usage for the center. Students working on class projects would have first priority, followed by independent student work.

The next priority would be for faculty usage, such as class instruction followed by administration usage.

According to Betty Jo Welch,

David Kechley, assistant professor of music, in the department of creative arts at UNCW, recently attended the Regional IV Conference of the American Society of University Composers at the University of Miami at Coral Gables. He served as a panelist in a discussion of qualitative musical judgement. Kechley's Brass Quintet in Three Movements was one of approximately 30 works chosen for performance at the conference.

Basketball Team Faces Tough Year

A very young UNCW basketball team, which has eight freshman on the roster, officially begins a rugged schedule in two weeks.

The Seahawks open with a top twenty team in Louisiana State at home on Monday, November 28, and things don't get a whole lot easier after that.

Road trips with three Atlantic Coast Conference schools including a January date with defending national champion NC State are on the Seahawk agenda this winter.

UNCW will play the Palmetto All-Stars, a South Carolina AAU squad, in an exhibition game Monday night at Trask Coliseum. This game will give the Seahawks one last tune-up before the regular season starts.

"I think the exhibition game will help us out a lot," Ronnie Bellamy, one of the eight freshmen, said, "I think it will give us freshmen some experience before we play LSU."

Aside from N.C. State, UNCW visits a Ralph Samson-less Virginia over Christmas break, and journeys to Winston-Salem to play Wake Forest in one of the Deacon's few home games not played in the Greensboro Coliseum.

"Personally, I like playing the tough teams," Kelly said. "And I think it's really good for the program here. It helps out with recruiting and it gives us some recognition."

The schedule would be impressive if it stopped there. But it doesn't.

The Seahawks have home and away dates with George Mason, which boasts the nation's returning leading scorer in Carlos Yates (27 ppg). Also on tap are the Stetson Hatters, one of the top major independents in the country. (Last year Stetson threw hats to the crowd on away games).

UNCW also plays a couple of teams that are favored to win

Five UNCW seniors concluded their careers Saturday in a 2-1 loss to Campbell University.

The seniors of Coach Calvin Lane's team are: Mike Lawrence, Mark Morris, Dave Compere, Greg Marinich, and Billy Ireland.

The Seahawks needed a victory in their final game to preserve their string of winning seasons, but the loss dropped them to 9-9 for the season. It was the first non-winning season in nine years.

Campbell took the lead early in the second half, but UNCW knotted the score, 1-1 with 31 minutes remaining on a goal by Alberto Rodriguez. Ten minutes later, the Camel's David Doyle knocked home the winner unassisted.

Earlier in the week, the Seahawks were beaten, 4-0 by top-ranked Duke University.

Round Up

UNCW finished third in its own invitational men's golf tournament at Echo Farms. The Seahawks finished behind Methodist and Virginia Tech in the six-team field.

The final UNCW team to finish up its fall season was the women's golf team, which participated in the N.C. State Invitational on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday of this week.

For four seniors—Kim Arthur, Judy Bender, Pam Owen, and Bonnie Whitaker—this was the last match of their collegiate careers. Kim Arthur and Sarah Womble, a junior, were named honorable mention All-District.

The UNCW Club Football team pulled their biggest upset in three years by defeating the defending league champions N.C. State Sunday October 30th.

Star running back John "Rock" Odom began the scoring by breaking four tackles and scampering 75 yards for a quick 6-0 Seahawk lead. State recovered with a 47-yard pass play and then took the halftime lead on a 36-yard field goal.

The winning touchdown for the Seahawks came on a pass play

After winning nine of its last ten matches, the Lady Seahawk volleyball team fell to Lenoir-Rhyne, Friday in the opening round of the District 26 Playoffs at Guilford College.

UNCW, one of six teams in the playoffs, won the first games against the Bears, 16-14, before dropping the next three in a best-of-five match.

Baseball Team Ready For Spring

Kelly Duff

Journalism Contributor

Coach Bobby Guthrie is getting his baseball team in shape for the spring season by playing seven warm up games during the fall.

The purpose of the fall games is to spot the players with the most potential and to give the whole team experience by letting all play in the games.

Although the pitching staff is fairly young, consisting of freshmen and sophomores, coach Guthrie feels they have good potential. He also feels that the hitting team is good, and is confident in the out and infield players, since most of them are older and have been with the team a few years.

Of the 75-80 boys he is evaluating, Guthrie hopes to make a varsity and junior varsity team with 50-55 of them.

So far the team is 1-1 with a win against Wesley and a loss to Chapel Hill. The first official game of the spring season will be February 28, against Old Dominion. There will be 52 games this spring.

Women's Soccer Team Wins

The Seahawk women's soccer team recorded their fourth consecutive shut-out Saturday afternoon in Winston-Salem. The 'Hawks exploded for a 14-0 victory over Wake Forest.

Suzanne Bragg and Jennifer Wilson led the onslaught against the Deacons, Bragg with 5 goals and Wilson contributing 4. Other scorers were Betty Jenkins and Barb Fetchks with 2 goals apiece. Pam Campbell closed out the scoring.

The Seahawks and their coach, Enio Napolitano, are looking for their fifth consecutive victory Wednesday night at Camp Lejeune.

UNCW's Pat Brown works to keep the ball away from John Kerr of the No. 1 ranked Duke Blue Devils, but the 'Hawks went down 4-0.

New Grading System Proposed

Jodi Long

Journalism Contributor

Dr. Kenneth F. Ferraro, Assistant Professor of Sociology, proposed a new grading system to the Faculty Senate during the school year of 82-83.

The proposal was for a plus-minus system which Dr. Ferraro feels is a much more sophisticated grading system than the one presently in use.

First, it will increase student motivation, and help to avoid academic "coast" due to a grade which is already determined.

For example, if a student makes B's consistently throughout a course he needs only a D on the final to maintain the B, and he may not work as hard.

Also, this system helps to differentiate the levels of ability between students.

The proposal was first received by the Academic Standards Committee, where it was tabled and never reached the Faculty Senate.

There was no reference made of the proposal in the committee's annual report.

Dr. Ferraro has been both a student under this system, as well as a teacher with it, and finds it to be a much more accurate and standard system.

Research Trip Planned

Dr. Robert George from the Institute for Biomedical Research is planning another major trip to the Anartica in January and February.

He will be accompanied by graduate students from UNCW on this fourth trip.

On the last trip to the Anartica they set out to study a particular kind of shrimp, Krill, that live in great abundance in the freezing waters, usually being measured in metric tons. George wanted to study the various stages of growth for Krill.

On the upcoming trip the team will set out to study the vital activities of the Krill and other fish. They will be traveling on the The German Polar Stern, the world's largest oceanographic ship.

Dr. George says that past trips have resulted in "some major findings," and he is looking forward to going out again.

The UNCW Student North Carolina Association of Educators will sponsor an "Educational Day Care Center" on Friday, Nov. 11, 1983, from 7:30 a.m. to 3:00 p.m. Everyone is invited to bring children (grades K-3). Cost is $1.50/hr. or $9.00/day. UNCW education students throughout the day. To register, call 791-4330, extension 2355 by Wednesday, Nov. 9. On Friday report to King Hall, room 104.

UNCW Plays Stock Market

By Stephanie Loftus
News Editor

Directed by the UNCW Center for Economic Education, 33 UNCW students and 163 southeastern N.C. high school students are into their third week of "The Stock Market Game"—a nationwide academic exercise.

Each of the 44 teams was allowed a hypothetical $100,000 to invest in the New York and American Stock Exchanges and 10 weeks to compile the largest portfolio. At the end of the 10 weeks, the team with the largest portfolio wins.

Assistant professor of economics and finance at UNCW, Dr. Luther Lawson started involvement in the stock market game in the Southeastern Mid-Atlantic region. "I think it's an exciting game that has a tremendous learning value," he commented. "No matter how they place in the state, the students will learn about stocks. It enhances their decision-making skills."

Now in the third week of play, Pender High School currently leads the state with a portfolio of $102,737.50. Thus far, these students have earned a hypothetical $2,737.50. Not bad for three weeks work.

From UNCW, team 660 consisting of team captain Cyndi Lowdermilk and members Rick Saunders, Helen Matthews, and Todd Jones, is fourth in the state.

The stock market game began in 1977 when a professor in Buffalo conceived the idea and persuaded area brokerage firms to help sponsor it. Since then it has become a nationwide organization.

Each week students fill out a scan sheet and send it to Virginia Commonwealth University, the national coordinator. VCU compiles the data and prints a weekly list showing where teams rank in the region, state, and nation.

New to UNCW, Lawson had experience in this game last year at UNC-Ashville where he started a program there also.

Teachers participating in the game received actual hands-on experience during one of three workshops held by Dr. Lawson in Kinston, Jacksonville and at UNCW. "We sat down and bought and sold stocks to explain," said Lawson. "Then we explained some tough situations they might encounter."

At UNCW the stock market game is played twice a year, spring and fall, with the next one scheduled to begin about February 9, 1984.

Teachers wishing to participate in the spring game may contact Lawson at 791-4330 ext. 2226.

Name the American band that best signifies the 60's counter-culture? Dylan, the Byrds, the Airplane, the Dead, the Velvet Underground... a few choices that come to mind. Now discount Hendrix for his English exile at the time of Monterey and the Summer of Love and the best choice remains The Doors!

Their perception was freedom and endless experimentation; pushing these limits to their final destination and apocalypse. "No eternal reward will forgive us for wasting the dawn." From the magnetic sexuality of Morrison, the neon fluorescence of Robby Krieger, to the carnival atmosphere of Ray Manzarek's keyboards, this 3-ring circus offered a forbidden vision of the future which provoked, taunted, and ultimately terrified a generation. When "Light My Fire" burst upon the scene in all its splendorous fury, the message became clear to all active participants, "the time to hesitate is thru."

As the ghettos of Detroit burned and its dark shapes outlined the surreal night, many wondered what the lessons were we needed to learn. Morrison seized the moment and twisted it... "her sudden and aborted currents breed tiny monsters. True sailing is dead." The rebellion was on and though free love was practiced there was no peace. Somewhere on "tiny rafts" was a seething violence, an evil negativism which could strike like a snake from anywhere.

Jim Morrison steps out from the drug induced paranoia for a soundcheck late in the day. The atmosphere is charged as the Doors steadily build into the emotional climax of G-L-O-R-I-A. By the time she climbs up the stairs and into the room Morrison shouts in boundless enthusiasm "Oh, Boy!"...like a kid in the cookie jar. Things begin to get darker; after a series of liberating sexual innuendos the Doors finally explode into a frenzy so tight and so near the nightmares beyond.

Freedom to do what we want, to live life searching for all our desires. When the stories started circulating about Morrison—his weird homage to Hendrix, the drunken bouts of lunacy, the no-shows and the indecent exposure in Florida (as if the music could no longer express the emotions) the Lizard-King had already left us. The flame had died and the lesson became a painful one. Know Your Limits. There is no coming back once they have been surpassed. There were many kinds of casualties in those years...the intensity for some may never be captured again.

Alive She Cried is a celebration of those limits being tested. The power is direct and still in focus. The dog days had not yet begun. This LP is a dark reminder of the incredible musical restraint that once was the Doors. Great work Jim!

Dr. Hill, chairman of the Economics and Finance Departments, set off the burglar alarms at a local savings and loan October 24. He sits on the board of the savings and loan company which usually meets on Monday nights. It is customary for the board members to go out for a late dinner after the meeting breaks up.

The group left for the restaurant thinking Dr. Hill had gone ahead of them to meet them there. However he had gone to the restroom instead.

Thinking the building was vacant, the board members secured the building for safety reasons. In the meantime, Dr. Hill came out of the bathroom only to discover he was locked in the building with no way to get out. He went to the front door and shook it, which set off the burglar alarm and drew a response from the police. In desperation Hill called on of the board members at the restaurant to explain his predicament.

He eventually found a key in one of the desks, and set himself free. In the meantime the police called back to see if everything was all right and no one answered the phone. They immediately went to the savings and loan but everything appeared to be in order.

Dr. Hill went on to the restaurant, quite shaken by the whole night, and was greeted by snickers and suppressed laughter.

Jazz Ensemble Presents Concert

The UNCW Jazz Ensembles will present a fall concert at 8 p.m. Wednesday, November 16, in Kenan Auditorium.

The concert will consist of performances by each of the five groups directed by Frank J. Bongiorno, assistant professor of music at UNCW. The first group to perform will be the Rock Ensemble, with two guitarists, bass, drums and a female vocalist. Following the rock ensemble will be the Jazz-Fusion ensemble and the Jazz Combo.

After intermission, the Supersax group will perform Cool Blues by Charlie Parker. Closing the concert will be the Large Jazz Ensemble performing big band compositions by Thad Jones, Woody Herman, Ray Brown and Chick Corea.

The public is invited to attend. There will be a $2.00 general admission charge and a $1.00 charge for UNCW students with valid I.D. cards.

Kevin Coughlin, a student at UNCW and Seahawk staff member, recently had a photograph published in the Oct. 16 issue of the Washington Post.

The picture was a reprint of the cover photograph of Nicholas Proffitt's new book, Gardens of Stone, which was reviewed by the Post. Proffitt is a former Newsweek Bureau Chief now living in Carolina Beach. He is scheduled to speak to New Hanover Friends of the Public Library on Nov. 29. His book is available at B. Dacron's and The Bookary.

Coughlin worked with Proffitt, a friend of the family, and eventually came out with a portrait that was suitable for the cover of the book. When told his picture ran in the Washington Post, Coughlin said he was glad his work was in a national publication; he felt "kinda tickled."

Coughlin prefers to shoot in black and white, and has won awards in this category in three Ft. Fisher photography contests. Two of his favorite subjects are seascapes and his son, Casey.

Coughlin explained that not all negatives produce the kind of picture you have in mind but added when one picture comes out the way you want it to, "it really feels good". Kevin Coughlin started working on The Seahawk staff in the fall of '82 as a writer as well as photographer. By the spring of '83, his work focused on photography, and by the summer he became head photographer.

UNCW Seeks Landmark

By Stephanie Loftus
News Editor

Driving along College Road, a visitor to UNCW may notice one of the University's most noted landmarks--the blue water tower located near the Marine Science building. Not a very outstanding aspect of UNCW by any means.

In order to alleviate this problem, a committee has been appointed by UNCW Board of Trustees Chairman John J. Burney, Jr. to develop a landmark for the campus.

Committee chairman Sam Bissette says the committee is looking for a landmark that is "unique and meaningful to the university, the community, and the state." He pointed out that most colleges and universities have landmarks that represent the school on letterheads or television. "As soon as you see the Old Well on TV, you know you're seeing UNC-Chapel Hill," he remarked. "The announcers don't even have to explain where they are."

feels that UNCW students need a landmark. "It's been proven on other campuses that students are proud to be identified with their school and landmark," he said. "Right now all we have is the water tower and maybe Hoggard Hall."

The landmark will be the centerpiece of University Commons, a yet unbuilt fifteen-acre plot adjacent to the University Union. Stretching to the expanded library and Morton Hall, it will have extensive landscaping, brick walkways, and an amphitheater. This will be complete in about four years and half a million dollars.

"We'd like the landmark to be 110 feet tall or higher," commented Squires. "We need something visible from College Road."

The criteria for the landmark is that it have one or more unique qualities, be physically pleasing, have one or more practical purposes, and be meaningful to the UNCW community. The committee also wants the landmark to be pleasing in such a way that people would contribute to its construction. They would also like to be able to reproduce it for promotional purposes.

Some landmark designs have already been submitted to the committee, but they are urging students, faculty, alumni and the general public to send in landmark ideas.

"The University will be here for a long time and what we build out there will have to relect us and those who come after," Squires remarked.

"We're here to leave a mark and move on, and we want to leave it better than when we came."

Once a landmark is accepted by the Board of Trustees, a fund-raising campaign to raise money for the landmark and the University Commons is expected to be underway by Spring of '84.

Ideas for a Landmark should be sent in writing to the Landmark Committee in care of Dr. Jairy Hunter, Vice Chancellor for Business Affairs and Development, UNCW, 601 South College Road, Wilmington, NC 28403. These should be sent no later than December 1, 1983.

Debbie Casey Stresses Public Awareness

Sherry Johnson
Journalism Contributor

On November 15, Debbie Casey, Miss N.C. Wheelchair of 1984, spoke to the UNCW Student N.C. Association of Educators. Her topic centered around various attitudes usually directed towards handicapped people. Casey told the audience that "attitudinal barriers" must be broken before "normal" people and the handicapped are better able to relate to each other.

As Miss Wheelchair, Casey's intentions are "to contribute to better rapport between the able-bodied and the disabled, to clear up misconceptions about handicapped people, and to foster good will among all North Carolinians."

Casey, whose disability is Friedrich's Ataxia, sent a letter to approximately 70 colleges and universities around the state offering to promote public awareness of the handicapped through speeches and lectures. Of these schools, UNCW was the first to extend and invitation to Casey.

Casey, a free-lance writer, is married and has two children. She has a B.A. from Wake Forest and a M.Ed. from UNCW.

Coughlin, an English major, will graduate in December.

Presently, Coughlin is managing editor as well as head photographer of The Seahawk.

SGA Honors Dead?

The above, without the question mark, was the title of an article in the November 3 issue of this paper. With their exception of Kevin Markham's original motion, I think the title of this article was very misleading. When a motion to dedicate "one minute" of an SGA meeting "in a silent tribute to the MARINES who were killed" in Beirut meets with and objection and "ten minutes of bickering," I can hardly refer to this as honoring the dead.

As both a student and a MARINE, it is hard for me to believe that someone or people in such a high position of campus leadership could demonstrate this poor judgement and insensitivity. It is through the willingness of those young men and women who serve in the Armed Forces and place themselves "In Harms Way" that we enjoy the many rights and secure lifestyle that we have. When Kevin Markham introduced a motion to pay "silent tribute to the MARINES who were killed this week in Beirut," I don't think (although I do not know the gentleman personally) that he was attempting to make a political statement or be "unpatriotic" or be any of the other stupid accusations that one other SGA person made. I also don't think that it was his intention to forget about the sailors and soldiers whose lives were taken.

Kevin Markham's motion was a genuine attempt by the body that represents all of us on this campus to mourn and pay tribute to our fallen "guardians." Instead, and because of a very few, it came across as an insult. Hopefully not too many more of the friends and families of our dead servicemen will see this outrageous tribute.

To Kevin Markham--my thanks for thinking of mine and my friends' fallen comrades and my sympathy for being a member of such a narrow minded and thoughtless leadership body.

The committee for the Improvement of Food Service on Campus met last week with Paul Thomas, Food Service Director, and Charlie King, Director of Auxiliary Services. Edward Troublefield, chairman of the committee, gave a report of its findings at the Student Government Senate meeting on Nov. 10.

In response to complaints about decreased food quality on campus, Mr. Thomas told the committee that the food had improved. However, the committee suggested forming a "Taster's Choice Committee" which would consist of students and/or faculty who would sample meals and rate them.

Mr. Thomas also extended an open invitation to any student who would like to go and inspect the ARA's kitchen as well as the foods.

Suggestion boxes are also being placed in the cafeteria so that students can express their opinions concerning meals.

When questioned about why restrictions have been placed on times in which meal cards are accepted at the Student Union Snack Bar, Thomas again stated that the inconvenience the long lines have caused for commuter students was the reason for the cutbacks in meal card times.

Thomas agreed to extend meal times during exams and also to provide special meals for people with special needs, such as diabetics, those with high blood pressure, and vegetarians.

Wendy Crowson, a member of the Alcoholics Awareness Task Force, asked for the Senate's help in establishing a University Pub on campus. She said that people are complaining that freshmen have had the privilege of drinking taken away from them and haven't been given anything back. The University Pub would allow alcohol to be served, but those underage will be stamped at the door to indicate that they could not be served alcohol.

SGA President Eric Squires addressed the Senate with his concerns that most of the SGA's projects never get 100% completed. He urged the senators to get more actively involved in fund raising projects, such as a concert stage riser service which he predicts could make as much as $10,000 year.

President Squires also asked that anyone with suggestions for the proposed UNCW landmark turn those in to the SGA office by Jan. 11. Some ideas which have already been suggested include a lighthouse, fountain, solar tower, and even a museum.

In other business, Vice-President Paul Bell appointed Hank Furrey to the position of Senior Class Vice-President, and declared Representative-at-Large positions will be open next spring, since Senators Lisa Gabrio and Gloria Yates are resigning. Also, Ray Hunsinger was appointed as a justice to the University Court.

VICTORY FINDS A HUNDRED FATHERS . . . DEFEAT IS AN ORPHAN.

JOHN F. KENNEDY
RAY OF PIGS

Stillpoint

By Bob Haywood, Campus Minister

This week you get "two-fers." There are two events on the public horizon that claim our attention.

First is the showing of the ABC film "The Day After" on Sunday, Nov. 20th. It is "a startling account of the effects of nuclear war...portraying what life would be like before, during, and after a nuclear attack on the United States." The film is another major event in the ongoing consciousness raising of the American people to the dangers of our arms race. The American system rarely functions better than when the people finally achieve some kind of consensus about matters of public policy. Such consensus developed in the 60's and led to significant civil rights legislation. Such consensus developed also in the early 70's and was a major factor in public policy related to the Vietnam War. Perhaps this film can be one more event in the process of achieving public consensus and bring fulfillment to the words of Dwight D. Eisenhower who said, in 1959: "I like to believe that people in the long run are going to do more to promote peace than our governments. Indeed, I think that people want peace so much that one of these days governments had better get out their way and let them have it." I believe it is a film worth watching.

Next week is also Thanksgiving. Living into Thanksgiving out of the backdrop of a film about nuclear holocaust may enrich our experience of giving thanks. In the midst of all the stresses of daily life, we so easily lose sight of our blessedness. Our world, this tiny raft in space, is such a precious, beautiful jewel. From autumn leaves, to a newborn child's cry, to moments of solitude and serenity, we are surrounded by beauty and wonder and the possibility of inner peace. Let our mind's eye roam across our world and into the cosmos; call into your memory the myriad experiences of your life's past and look for the future. Think of all those whom you love and who love you, even the ones who have left your life--for at some point, they enriched you. And for all these wonderings and rememberings and lovings, let us all be thankful.

Rally Against Blue Law

Bentley Suggs
Journalism Contributor

A rally was held at Riverfront Park in downtown Wilmington, Sunday, Nov. 6, to speak out against the blue laws in Wilmington. Dr. Jack Morgan, assistant professor of economics, was one who spoke in favor of abolishing the blue law.

About 75 people turned out for the rally, most of whom were town merchants. The blue law prohibits stores in the city limits to be open on Sunday. The only exceptions are grocery stores and drugstores, if a licensed pharmacist is at the drugstore. Stores open on Sunday cannot sell certain goods such as, clothing, household appliances, tools, and toys.

"I think merchants and the city citizens are being discriminated against," Morgan said.

Morgan further added that merchants should have the choice of being open or staying closed on Sunday. If stores were to open on Sunday it would create more jobs and increase revenue along with giving the citizens of Wilmington the opportunity to shop here instead of outside the city.

He pointed out that there are a lot of tourists in Wilmington during special events like the Azalea and Riverfest Festivals.

Morgan remarked, "Those people want to shop here and like to look around the Cotton Exchange." The blue law doesn't give these people a chance to shop.

Morgan also felt the blue law limited student's chances to shop.

The BLUE committee, which consist of people against the blue law, got about 40 new signatures on a petition Sunday. The petition will be presented to the city council at its first meeting in December.

Grading Scale Questioned

Pete Mullins
Journalism Contributor

At UNCW when is a grade of 90 percent an "A"? When you're in one of the classes taught by a teacher that does not use the 10-point grading scale.

Classes, ranging from Spanish 101 to an upper level computer science class, taught by certain teachers have a 6 or 7-point scale, but when taught by other teachers, the very same classes use a 10-point scale.

The official Administration position, on grading, is that there is no official policy. That is, each teacher is allowed to follow his or her own discretion in determining grades.

The office of Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs stated that the only the only official grading policy is found in the UNCW catalog. The catalog says only that the "grade symbols used are A-Excellent, B-Good, C-Average, D-Poor, F-Failure, I-Incomplete" but nothing about what constitutes an "A" or an "F".

Teachers asked said there should be freedom in determining grades. But should a single class having essentially the same material being taught, no matter who teaches it, have a different grading scale?

The question asked by many is if it's fair for two students taking the same subject, both having 90 averages, to receive different grades. At least for now, the university doesn't have an answer.

Wanted: Executive Assistant

One bright energetic student wishing to work for experience in office and government operations.

Duties would include:

Women's Basketball Team Mixes Youth and Experience

UNCW's women's basketball team will have a mixture of experience and youth, saturated with five freshmen. And if the chemistry is right, a fourth straight winning season and a second postseason berth in three years is well within reach.

Two full-time starters and three part-time starters are back from a club that finished 13-12 last season.

The returnees are lead by NAIA All-District performer Gwen Austin, a 6-foot-3, junior center, who has led the team in scoring since her freshman season including a 17.9 ppg clip last season.

"She's had a great pre-season so far," fifth year coach Marilyn Christoph (58-45) said. "I think she'll have a great year. She sure will be hard to stop."

Austin also led the team in three other categories last season--rebounds (11.5 pg), blocked shots (39), and field goal percentage (50.7).

Senior Jill Amos, who was the first UNCW player to break the 1000 point barrier last season, also returns along with Austin, giving Christoph a powerful one-two scoring punch.

Amos averaged 17.9 points per game last season for her third straight year of averaging in double figures. Amos also dished out 65 assists last season.

Amos and Austin have been a fixture in the Lady Seahawk lineup the past two years. Three others--Sonya Pickard, Sheila Patterson, and Sue Dean--all started at some point last year.

Pickard, a 5-foot-7 junior, was a pleasant surprise in 82-83 averaging 9.4 points per outing. Pickard will take on the ball handling duties this year.

"Sonya is a very steady player," Christoph said, "She's very consistent."

Pickard committed less than two turnovers per game last year.

Patterson averaged 8.6 ppg last year, and sat out part of the season with a now-healed ankle. Patterson will assume the wing position, but can play down low in Christoph's double-post offense because of her leaping ability.

"She (Patterson) has been most impressive in pre-season drills," Christoph said of her 5-foot-9 senior. "Sheila is just now realizing how much talent she's got and is putting it to use."

Dean, a 5-foot-9 sophomore, is an aggressive defensive specialist who took over the starting job late in the season.

"Sue works harder in practice than anyone else," Christoph stated. "She compensates for some of the skills she lacks by hustling."

Dean replaced injured freshman Susie Juma in the starting lineup. Juma was one of four academic casualties who will not be back this season.

"Experience is one of our pluses, but depth will be a real problem," Christoph said.

To solve the depth problem, Christoph has a host of freshmen that she hopes will prosper quickly. Among them is 5-foot-7 Kim Edmunson of Pintos, N.C., who will compete for playing time in the backcourts. 5-foot-9 Kim Fuller of Dunn, N.C., will see some action at forward.

Christoph has a new assistant in Drema Greer, who replaces Melanie Hinton. Greer is a former player at Clemson, where she was twice team captain.

Season Opener

Monday, November 14, the UNCW Seahawks hosted the Palmetto All-Stars in Trask Coliseum in an exhibition season opener.

The young Seahawk team, mostly freshmen, never led the game as the All-Stars kept about a 10-point lead throughout. Final score: All-Stars 57, Seahawks 46.

The Seahawks' next game is on Monday, November 28, at home against nationally ranked Louisiana State. UNCW students may attend free with a valid student I.D.

Women's Soccer Concludes Season

The Women's Soccer team concluded their fall season on a rainy Wednesday night with a game against the Jacksonville-based Camp LeJeune team. The Seahawks played to a 1-1 tie, but lead the game until the final 3 minutes when Camp LeJeune scored on a corner kick after a controversial call by the referee. The lone Seahawk goal was scored by Jennifer Wilson.

The Lady Seahawks concluded

ed their season with a record of 4-1-1, their only loss coming against N.C. State in their first game of the season. The team recorded 25 goals for, and only 3 against. The goals were lead by junior forward, Suzanne Bragg, with 8 goals, followed by 7 goals from senior forward Betty Jenkins and junior midfielder Jennifer Wilson. Other Seahawk scorers were Barb Fetchko and Pam Campbell.

P & R Department Sponsors Lecture

News Bureau

"Contemporary Christian Views of God" is the topic of the seventh and final lecture in a series sponsored by the philosophy and religion department at The University of North Carolina at Wilmington.

Presenting this lecture at 8 p.m., Thursday, November 17, in King Hall Auditorium will be Dr. James Megivern, professor and chairman of the department of philosophy and religion.

"The last 25 years have seen a wide variety of Christian responses to the problems of modernity," Megivern commented about his lecture. "An unprecedented theological pluralism has resulted, both in Europe and America.

"At least six new types of Christian theology have emerged, all of them strugging to claim continuity with the tradition while trying to integrate the advances of modern thought.

"The 'God-question' is thus placed in new contexts, faced with new questions, requiring new thinking," he pointed out. "An effort will be made in this lecture to present the three or four most interesting contemporary exponents of these reinterpretations."

The lecture is free and the public is invited to attend.

Messick Wins First Prize

This year's English Club Poetry Contest has been decided after much ado. Judges have picked three top finalists from a selection of nearly 50 poems.

The first prize of $50 was given to Kim Messick for her entry "Wounded", in which a children's game becomes grim reality after a dreadful accident.

The second prize of $30 goes to Gail Fore's "The Summer Before I Started School" a poem of delightful thoughts of a five-year-old in the midst of innocence.

Third prize, accompanied by $20, goes to Dan Headrick and his poem "South Africa", about a child left forlorn in the wake of perspective that has changed through distance.

The money for these prizes was donated by the NC Junior Sorosis which has been funding the contest for nearly thirteen years. The prizes will be presented on Monday, December 5, at 8:00 pm in the S.R.O. Theatre in Kenan Hall.

The poets will have read their winning poems. It will be a very special evening, for after the presentation, several students from the Communication and Music Departments will perform a never-attempted dramatic and musical production of Poetic Vision, poems and prose of the 18th century mystic visionary, William Blake.

It should be exciting and entertaining and the best part is it's free. So come and support the creativity in our student body.

Blood Drive Thursday and Friday

(November 17 and 18)

By Steve Hill

Journalism Contributor

The national coed service fraternity Alpha Phi Omega will hold a blood drive in conjunction with the Red Cross on Thursday and Friday in room 100 of the Student Union.

According to Ruth Baldrige, this semester's goal of 450 pints constitutes the largest ever set by the fraternity.

"We usually get people to sign up but few actually turnout (to donate). With the largest goal so far, we really need people to help us out," Baldrige said.

Members of Alpha Phi Omega will assist the Red Cross during the drive, which will run from 9:30 a.m. to 3 p.m. both days. They will register potential donors and provide refreshments for those who give blood.

Walk-ins are welcome and those who have registered are urged to follow through and donate.

SCHOL KIDS Record Review

The jangle minstrel of the 60's has quit speaking in tongues to deliver a rambling revelation full of grace and power that recalls his best work. Since Blood on the Tracks, Dylan has hidden behind religious symbols as his personal life ripped away the bite and snarl from his music. The mythmaker, "dream-twister" had become a victim—all too human, the legend had lifted with the fog.

Gathering a band featuring guitarists Mark Knopfler (Dire Straits), Mick Taylor (Rolling Stones), a rhythm section comprised of Sly Dunbar and Robbie Shakespeare (the Wailers), Dylan's latest LP Infidels, captures all the spark and stream of consciousness characteristic of the bygone days. Not bothering to offer any new musical twists, Infidels is a reaffirmation of the 'vanishing' talents.

'Jokeman' is a slow uncoiling snake of venom and power, rising behind the pumping bass of Shakespeare. Vintage Dylan with jarring harmonica intact, sings between the dueling guitars of Taylor and Knopfler. "Shedding off one more skin" and "raising a snake above the fist" Dylan returns to the fields of turbulence to combat the old themes and demons.

'Sweetheart Like You' ... "doing in a place like this" tones down the sprawling impact of 'Jokeman' with vocal tricks of inflection reminiscent of Blood on the Tracks. The Knopfler touch is added for counterpoint.

'Neighborhood Bully' borrows Mick Taylor's slide from Sticky Fingers to wail away at being alone at the political top of the scrapheap with sheep taunts that twist Bully into Bull(y)-a-a-a.

'Man of Peace' and 'Union Sundown' recall the stretched out electric sequences of Michael Bloomfield and explode with a fury unmatched since Highway 61 Revisited!

Even the proudest of men must fall and pick themselves up by their bootstraps. Dylan has been no exception.

The brooding blues of 'I and I' becomes a soliloquy between the image and the man—"one saying to the other no man sees my face and lives."

'Don't Fall Apart on Me Tonight' concludes Infidels in uncharacteristic tender fashion as Dylan reaches beneath the surface for human contact "instead of burning every bridge (I) ever crossed." Who would have ever thought Dylan could break down to say "I need you."

An album of emotional intensity and surprising honesty, Infidels propels Dylan back into the real world of shadows, magical powers intact.

★ ★ ★ ★ 1/2 TWIGG

Last Spring, Dr. John Ahrens and Alan Johnson realized there was not enough emphasis on popular modern science fiction at UNCW. They felt that something had to be done about it. So, they set out to mesh two things that they enjoyed, socializing and watching movies, to help expose students to this subject.

At first, Ahrens and Johnson tried to form a science fiction movie club through the University. They knew that for the club to be most beneficial to the students, it should be as unstructured as possible. They wanted a club that watched science fiction movies and was not burdened with the formalities of an official UNCW club.

Finding that this was virtually impossible, they began looking for another approach.

They went off campus, and the Wilmington Science Fiction Literary Society was born. The first meetings were held in Dr. Ahrens' home. He furnished movies and video equipment. Soon there were too many members to continue having the meetings in his home. "It was okay when there were only twelve people," said Ahrens, "but, when it got to be about 35 people, it was just too much."

The society moved to the Patio. On some Saturday evenings the Patio opens two hours early for the Society. Video equipment is set up and about six o'clock the movie begins. The movies shown are fairly rare or hard to come across. They are movies that aren't shown on the T.V. very often.

The society is very informal. There are no dues, no officers, and no structure. Anyone who comes in to watch the movie is a member.

The society serves another function than to just watch movies. Several members are writers, and it gives them a chance to meet and discuss their work. Through the Society they can meet and give each other support.

Dr. Ahrens and some society members went to a Science Fiction Convention, and there are hopes that another convention trip may be possible in the near future. Any students interested in the Wilmington Science Fiction Literary Society or a trip to a Science Fiction Convention should get in touch with Dr. Ahrens at his office in the P&R Department.

Only One Chance

Born in a cold, depressing, non-progressing steel mill town, Tom Cruise's character in All The Right Moves is fighting and struggling to get out. Cruise's character, Stefan Djordjevic, had only one chance: through his talent as a football player. By making All The Right Moves, Stefan could possibly get out and have a better future, a future including an education and possibly a secure job.

Making ends meet, having enough money, and an optimistic future are some of the problems this movie discusses.

Screen writer Michael Kane has given this film "real heart," although at times some of the characters seem to be acting out social problems.

The highlight of the movie was the actual football game, which was very exciting and exhilarating. The end of the movie found the audience almost clapping with enthusiasm and cheering for Stefan (Cruise). The end of the movie is not to the point of ambiguity but instead is left up to the audience to decide.

Petitions may be picked up in the SGA office in Room 200 of the Union and must be turned in by 12:00 p.m., November 29th.

If two people petition for the same position, there will be a run-off election soon following.

The UNCW chapter of Phi Kappa Phi National Honor Society is inviting applications from outstanding senior students for a $4500 Graduate Fellowship for first year graduate or professional study. It is anticipated that 40 to 50 of these scholarships will be awarded nation-wide. Each Phi Kappa Phi Chapter may nominate one student for these awards.

Graduating seniors with outstanding academic and leadership records should contact their department chairman or the Phi Kappa Phi Chapter secretary, Lee Johnston at room 214-F, Social and Behavioral Science Building, for additional information.

The general criteria considered in the selection process are scholastic achievement, test scores, transcript record, honors and enrichment programs, promise of success in graduate or professional study, leadership, participation in university and community activities, experience, evaluation by instructors, and expression of study plan and career goal. There are certain fields of study which do not require standardized tests. Outstanding students from such disciplines are given equal consideration.

Phi Kappa Phi is the only national scholastic Honor Society which recognizes academic excellence in all disciplines. It was founded in 1897 and today there are 240 Chapters in universities and colleges throughout the nation. The Fellowship Program was established in 1932 and since then has honored over 700 scholars with awards.

Non-Traditional Student

Karen Waddell
Staff Writer

Irene Ellis is a senior at UNCW but she is not a traditional student. Ten years after graduating from high school, she decided to continue her education.

Even with two children and a husband, she makes time for her studies. Irene has big hopes for her future too. Upon graduating from UNCW, she plans to open up her own video studio.

Many people are not even aware of what distinguishes the non-traditional student from the traditional student. According to Pat Leonard, Associate Dean of Students, a non-traditional student is a person who is returning to school after being out for a number of years and is 23 years of age or older.

Leonard said that these students have unique problems and needs but it is difficult to get them together to discuss their views. To help correct this, Leonard distributed a Non-traditional Students' Needs Survey. It asked students what topics they would like to have seminars on or would like help with.

Last year, non-traditional students had their own organization, but it was dissolved in February. This year the group meets informally each Wednesday in the snack bar from 12-1.

As for the future, Leonard says, "We're at a fork in the road as to where we go from here." She added that it was up to the non-traditional students on this campus to organize themselves and make their needs known.

Veteran's Day Activities

Senkey L. Blanton III
Staff Writer

Dr. James McGivern introduced the first of the Veteran's Day activities at UNCW with disclosure of an unofficial poll of students on appropriate ways to deal with international problems. Over 48% of those questioned favored Diplomacy and Conflict Resolution while only six percent chose unilateral military force as their first option. This survey was followed by a partial roll call of more than two dozen of the recent combat deaths in Lebanon and Grenada.

The main speaker for the Convocation Activities was retired Navy Commander William Withrow who is a Professor of Political Science and Geography at Gardner

Webb College in Rutherford County. Commander Withrow, a 1941 graduate of the Naval Academy and a veteran of World War II, did graduate work at Chapel Hill in the late sixties where he became acquainted with non-military points of view. His change of opinions was described as a slow process, prodded by the Pentagon Papers and Kent State shootings.

Withrow's primary viewpoint was that social, political and economical problems cannot be solved by a military action. Unfortunately, the military, which has been hired and supported by the American people, has a single peacetime mission—to prepare to win the next war. The only problem is that nuclear war is not in the economic best interest of either winner or loser.

Another problem mentioned by Withrow was a lack of ability to visualize where or how a conventional war against the Soviet Union would be fought. Both cost and logistics make full scale battle beyond realistic capability.

The definition of war, as developed by students of Gardner Webb College, was given: "war is socially approved, organized, killing of those human beings who have unfortunately been declared on enemy by a government." The only problem with this definition is that a government has to remain viable throughout the conflict to ensure the definition remains functional.

The lecture, titled "The Role of the Military in Peace," was supported primarily by the Peacework Organization, and sparsely attended by either faculty or students. In other related Veteran's Day activities, the ROTC held a military memorial service on the campus mall. Members of various veteran's organizations were invited to place wreaths at the base of the flagpole. This was followed by a classic twenty-one gun salute.

Although there are many Vietnam era veterans on the UNCW campus, the veterans who laid the wreaths were local businessmen. The early afternoon ceremony was attended primarily by administrators. Vice-Chancellors were lined up smartly on the Chancellor's right, while Deans and Directors formed ranks under the tree at his left.

As a group project for Communications 221, we are researching the idea of building a sports stadium for the University. This would be used for football, soccer, baseball, track, special olympics and intramurals.

The project discusses cost, promotion and the public attitude toward the idea. We ask for student response on such questions as:

Do you think an increased activity fee would be appropriate for such a cause?

Do you think students would support the stadium with enthusiasm and attendance at sports events?

If UNCW had a football team, do you think there would be a large student attendance at home games?

A box for student responses is located on the first floor of the Student Union. Responses will be much appreciated.

The following students chose to miss lunch last Thursday, Nov. 10, for the cause of world hunger.

Because of them ARA Food Services will donate $257 to world hunger.

We thank you students and ARA.

Builders Plan for UNCW Overflow

Sherry Johnson
Journalism Contributor

With the shortage of on-campus housing, many students are forced to make other living arrangements during their college career at UNCW. As a result of this housing deficiency, many construction companies are developing plans for future residential units near the university.

One such company, Westminster, a subsidiary of Weyerhaeuser Co., is building townhouses on Wilshire Boulevard. According to Vicky Johnson, an affiliate of Westminster, the Twin Wood Townhouses will consist of 120 two-bedroom units. These fully furnished, single-story townhouses will house four people per unit and sell for $54,300.

The price includes complete furnishings, everything from bunkbeds, appliances (stove, refrigerator, and washer and dryer), and living room furniture, to linens, cooking utensils, and silverware.

The price of $54,300 is what one would pay if the townhouse is financed through the mortgage plan of Westminster. However, if one pays cash or chooses not to finance with Westminster, the price will be $50,100.

Mrs. Johnson estimated that it would cost a student about $175 per month.

"That's not a bad deal," she added, emphasizing the furnishings that complement the townhouses.

The first group of units on the 15-acre site is expected to be completed by January. The remaining units will be available for occupancy by the start of the 1984 fall semester.

Although they are designed for college students, the Twin Wood Townhouses are not exclusively for this group.

"We're geared towards students," Mrs. Johnson said. "We're not selling any units unfurnished." "It's a good idea for parents of UNCW students to invest in this.

Loretta White, manager of College Manor Apartments, said the project will not affect the student resident status there of 35 percent.

"I really don't feel it will have an awful impact on our rentals. Most people, I feel, would rather rent than purchase."

Another housing project is being proposed by Jim Fountain Realty. According to Fountain, plans for the

Krill Studied

UNCW's research vessel, the R/V Cape Hatteras, recently cruised to the Blake Plateau off the coast of North Carolina for a series of scientific experiments from November 16-20, 1983.

UNCW Professor, Dr. Robert Y. George was accompanied by Dr. Robert P. Higgins, Senior Scientist at the Smithsonian Institute and Adjunct Professor at UNCW; Professor M.K. Chandrashekar from Madurai Kamaraj University in India; a Fulbright visiting professor at UNCW; Dr. Edward Smith, UNC-Charlotte; and two graduate and three undergraduate students from the Marine Biology Program at UNCW.

Each professor performed an experiment relating to his special area of interest.

Dr. George's project, to compare Antarctic Krill with Atlantic Krill, was successful due to a new device for obtaining these deep-sea organisms. (Krill are small, shrimp-like crustaceans.) He discovered that the Krill population off the coast of North Carolina is not as dense as that of the Antarctic, and that the Atlantic Krill are much smaller.

Another objective of Dr. George's trip was to learn if proposed oil drilling sites off North Carolina's coast overlapped the sea sanctuary at Blake's Plateau, and if the drilling would harm the life found there.

Oxford Press Recognizes Theodore

By Stephanie Loftus
News Editor

Dr. Terry Theodore, UNCW Professor of Drama in Creative Arts, was recently published, along with several international scholars, in the fourth edition of the Oxford Companion to the Theatre. This book, hailed by some as the bible of the theater, is revised and reprinted every 15-20 years to represent the most current authority on the American theater.

Dr. Theodore became involved in this project when he discovered that the third edition of the Companion neglected the 18th and 19th century theater. He contacted the publishers and suggested 36 new entries to be added to the upcoming fourth edition. The editor of the project invited him to write these new entries and submit them.

Writing about the lives, triumphs and tragedies of 18th and 19th century American men and women who established theater in this country, required extensive research by Dr. Theodore since many of his biographies are the only ones in existence.

The Oxford University Press bosses acceptance of materials on the historic and aesthetic importance of the person in theater. In Dr. Theodore's words, it is "a fitting tribute to the importance of these Americans that they are included."

This encyclopediac work represents current authority on all aspects of the theater. "The American theater is now fully represented," commented Dr. Theodore. "I feel it will be a boon to researchers in the future."

Dr. Terry Theodore, professor of Drama and Creative Arts.

The Oxford Press has also asked Dr. Theodore to contribute to two other works.

SGA

The Student Government Senate in its meeting on Nov. 17 approved the buying of a $6,100 IBM computer plus accessories for the Student Government Association's office.

The IBM was chosen over Apple and TRS-80, which are the three computers available under state contract. The SGA chose The IBM because it has been used successfully in other campus offices.

Further business for the night included another financial decision. The football team approached the senate for a loan of $900. It passed with a fine of $100 being added as a penalty for the team not going through proper channels to receive any financial advancements. The money was needed so that the team could charter a bus to a conference play-off at Appalachian State University.

In other business, Hank Furry made a motion, which passed, to form a committee to find out what UNCW students think of the SGA, what they expect of it, and how well informed they are about who represents them.

Also, SGA Treasurer Mike Godfrey gave a report on UNCW club and organization reallocations. Ten clubs appealed for a total of $5,554.59, and eight of them were reallocated funds totalling $2,715.00.

(The other two were not given funds because of "complications in budget forming.")

Godfrey also stated that the SGA General Fund now stands at roughly $25,000.

"Certain components could be toxic", he commented, "but we don't really know if it will affect it."

Dr. George also pointed out unlike Louisiana and California, the waters off North Carolina are about a mile deep which discourages deep-sea drilling and that there are no commercial amounts of oil in the Atlantic. "The technology is there", he commented, "But I understand it will be awhile before a platform will be built".

Several student positions in the Seahawk staff will be available starting Spring Semester, 1984. They include managing editor, sports editor, features editor, news editor, photographers, writers, and typists. Interested persons apply by bringing a letter of application to room 205-E, Union, by December 7, 5 p.m.

Health Forum

Students of colleges today are often faced with issues concerning sex and related problems. These issues range from dealing with new attitudes and values about sex, to the availability and use of birth control. The social work club, S.W.A.P., has found here on campus and in the community several services which address these issues.

On our campus the Student Health Services, located in the lobby of New Dorm, offers as one of its services information on birth control and sexual problems plus treatment of the symptoms of herpes, V.D., and vaginitis.

They also conduct pregnancy test and pap smears, and will start you on a prescription oral contraceptive. This service is available free of charge to any student taking six hours or more, and is conducted in complete confidentiality.

Privacy is attempted through two examining rooms and a waiting room across the lobby. We recommend not stating your exact reason for your visit until you are seen privately in one of the examining rooms.

Another resource available through the college is counseling to help you deal with decisions and values. This is available through two agencies on campus, the Campus Minister Bob Haywood, and the Counseling and Testing Center.

Bob Haywood's office is located in the Baptist Association across College Rd. from Trask Coliseum. He offers experienced, confidential counseling in relation to student concerns in this area, with particular experience in abortion counseling. Call 799-1160 and ask for Bob Haywood or stop by his office across the street.

The Counseling and Testing Center offers short term. (7-10 sessions), personal counselling on sexuality (among other areas). A specialist is available to see students and they will do referrals for longer term help. You need to call 791-4330 ext. 2280 to make an appointment. The office is open 8-5, M-F in the Hinton James building. The services are private and confidential. In cooperation with the Substance Abuse Center, Counseling & Testing has offered programs on rape prevention.

When these type of concerns become personal problems and we need to talk with someone immediately, one source to turn to is the Cape Fear Crisis Line. Crisis Line operates a confidential call in service that is as private as your own phone. Trained volunteers and staff receive callers and walk-ins at the shelter 24 hours a day. Crisis Line is designed for dealing quickly with any issue or crisis you might have. Pregnancy tests are available there for three dollars. Call 763-3695 or toll-free 1-800-672-2903 (outside New Hanover Co.) or come in at the corner of 5th and Chestnut anytime.

All services are confidential and costs are determined according to one's ability to pay. It is very important to make an appointment for scheduling is required. Contact the Public Health Dept. at 763-2931, and ask for information

Campus Radio Facilities in New Union Vacant

Eric Squires

Just recently I attended a meeting about a particular "Dead Zone." This Phantom area is cataloged as: University Union, Room 213. So far this beautiful accoustically designed room, complete with sound proofing and control booth, has been housing lectures, committee meetings, and is now holding the meetings of our present Radio organization. The area was originally designed for T.V. and standard video productions. The problem is funding. The SGA can barely handle the survival budgets of all the University clubs, organizations and publications, much less equip a TV studio. So in that light the Communications Department ment under the guidance of Dr. Betty Jo Welsh, wishes to put some life into this area.

At first, I had many reservations but the proposal I received was indeed, a thoughtful one. It simply puts us first. The Communications Department wishes to have access to this space and provide equipment and thus, a laboratory for students to gain hands-on experience. The University has several different majors in media related fields, but absolutely no studio where they can apply themselves. The advantages are obvious for both the students and the University as a whole.

I have been assured that: 1. The "Media Center" will put students and student clubs and organizations first.

2. Any qualified student may use the facility.

3. It will in no way hinder or impend any plans for the construction of the UNCW Radio Station which is located next door in room

211. This is where Minority Affairs is temporarily located. I have been assured that they will

Basketball Team Faces Tough Year

Louisiana State's Tigers showed why they are ranked as high as seventh in some polls as they rolled over UNCW 94-59 in the Seahawks opener at Trask Coliseum Monday night.

LSU was the highest ranked team to ever enter Trask. The Bayou Bengals handed the Seahawks its biggest loss in the history of the school.

"We're glad that this one is out of the way", said Seahawk coach Mel Gibson, "now we can look forward to playing teams on our level."

The 'Hawks play in the Olde Fayetteville Classic Friday and Saturday, opening up with Towson State.

The taller, quicker Tigers outran the 'Hawks for several uncontested layups, including 11 dunks.

LSU jumped out to leads of 8-0 and 12-2. UNCW did pull within 22-15 and had several chances to close the gap even further, but missed long-range bombs. The Tigers led 39-21 at the break.

UNCW shot only 39 percent (25-for-64) from the floor and was 9-of-21 from the charity stripe. Meanwhile, LSU made more than half of its shots from the field (39-for-76) and outrebounded the home team 54-37.

Senior Carlos Kelly led UNCW's attack with a team high 14 points, including three dunks. Junior Terry Shiver was also in double figures with 12 points, while pulling down 10 rebounds.

LSU had five players in double figures with all 14 players on the roster getting plenty of playing time. Jerry Reynolds led the Tiger scoring with 14, Derrick Taylor and freshmen Nakita Wilson had 12 apiece, Leonard Mitchell pumped in 11 and John Tudor had 10.

LSU is 2-0.

UNCW's previous biggest loss in its home building was a 108-87 decision in 1978 to UNC-Charlotte.

The Tigers got fine play from sophomore guard Derrick Taylor, who made six-of-ten shots from the floor, mostly from the outside. Taylor was all-American two years ago but was academically ineligible this year. Also, Nakita Wilson established himself as one of the top freshmen around with his aggressive play under the boards.

Making their 1983-84 debut, the Seahawks cheerleaders were energetic and enthusiastic, but couldn't give the 'Hawks the edge to beat nationally-ranked LSU.

"Small Craft Warnings"

For its second production of the 1983-84 season, the UNC-W University Theatre will present Tennessee Williams' moving drama "Small Craft Warnings" in the S.R.O. Theatre in Kenan Hall on the campus. This production will run from November 30 through December 4. Curtain time is 8:00 nightly.

Born in Columbus, Mississippi, Tennessee Williams established himself one of the most distinguished contemporary American playwrights by winning the Pulitzer Prize for both "A Streetcar Named Desire" and "Cat on a Hot Tin Roof". Among his other notable plays are "Sweet Bird of Youth", "Summer and Smoke", "27 Wagons of Cotton", and "The Glass Menagerie".

"Small Craft Warnings" was presented at the Truck and Warehouse Theatre in New York on April 2, 1972. This play is based on one of his shorter works, "Confessional", originally

By Steve Hill
Journalism Contributor

She tries to keep busy while she waits. She glances at the clock often and at his picture on her dresser. She tries not to think of how long they have been apart, or that they will only have a few days together. She wonders if she looks all right. "I've changed my hair," she says. "I hope he likes it."

Pamela and her boyfriend have dated for three years. She is a senior at UNCW; her boyfriend is stationed at Ft. Knox, Ky. with the Army. They see each other only a few times a year. After Christmas they will be separated for three years.

They have kept in touch, with letters and telephone calls and she feels she knows him well, but still she is nervous. "Even when you know a person, when you've been apart for awhile you wonder if the person has changed."

A long-distance love affair might be the next best thing to being there. But for many people who continue a relationship despite distance it seems a lesser of two evils. Not exactly an ideal situation, it is nevertheless an alternative to a complete breakup.

Such relationships begin for various reasons: job relocation, travel, going away to school. Some begin at a distance through correspondence.

"It takes a great deal of trust. I think for a relationship to go on, the trust and maturity have to be there," Pamela says.

Of course not everyone attempts a strictly "faithful" affair, and those who do are often greeted with a great deal of skepticism. "I've had lots of people say, 'Oh you know what they say about the long-distance thing, it usually never works out. And I've even had some of them try to set me up with someone else,' she said. "They just don't seem to understand."

Though the cost of long-distance phone bills and postage stamps are a consideration, not all factors are negative. Sometimes this type of situation can give people needed time apart. "I think it keeps the relationship exciting, very comfortable and interesting," Pamela says.

But she is not looking forward to a three-year separation. "Right now, if we had a choice we'd rather be together," she said. "We'll keep in touch. We really have faith in each other, I think that's what keeps us going."

AND NOW, THE MORMON TABERNACLE CHOIR WILL SING ANOTHER UPLIFTING HYMN...

published in his collection Dragon Country in 1969.

"Small Craft Warnings" is set in a bar along the southern California coast named Monk's Place. It provides the setting for this probing and fascinating look into the derelict existences of a group of life's misfits.

Violet is an emaciated, weepy hooker whose steady boyfriend is a 47-year old short order cook named Steve, who feels in his situation he can't be choosy. Hunter Thompson plays Steve.

The bartender/owner, Monk played by Paul Sebastian, reconciles himself to providing a port of refuge for his clientele. Among them is Doc, an alcoholic, played by Les Paternotte, who has lost his license to practice medicine. There's also Bill (Rick Marshall), a professional stud, who is kept in style in a deluxe trailer by an itinerant beautician named Leona, played by Laura McLean.

When we meet Leona, she is on a drunken binge and becomes sympathetic to the plight of Quentin, who writes blue movies and his pick-up, Bobby, an innocent youth cycling to Mexico. Quentin and Bobby are played respectively by Sam Sumner and Julian Shaw.

The role of Tony, the policeman, is played by Walt Bowen while Vern Moore portrays the Old Watchman.

Tennessee Williams has turned Monk's Place into a haven for this unlikely convocation of sometimes defeated and often courageous castoffs as they grapple with survival on the tumultuous sea of life.

Dr. Terry Rogers is the director of "Small Craft Warnings" with Stephanie Young as scenic and lighting designer and Anne Fitzgibbon as the costume designer.

Tickets and reservations may be obtained by calling the Creative Arts Department, 791-4330 extension 2440 from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday. Prices of tickets are $1.00 for UNC-W students with I.D.'s and $3.00 for all others.

This play is strictly adult entertainment that uses language that might be considered offensive to some people.

International Social Held

Last Friday night, a social was held for the twenty international students that attend UNCW to help them get acquainted and discuss the experiences they have had while here.

Though predominately from Canada, Japan, Kuwait, and Venezuela, there are also students here from Colombia, Greece, Iran, Spain, Panama, and Taiwan. UNCW received its first foreign students from Venezuela and Germany in 1966.

According to Pat Leonard, assistant dean of students, and international student advisor, there is a complicated procedure that one must follow in order to study in a foreign country.

First, the student must apply for regular admission. Next, a nationality form dealing with background information has to be completed, as well as forms showing a passing score of at least 550 on the Test of English as a Foreign Language.

Admissions evaluate all of the forms and then Pat Leonard oversees and checks the documents to ensure proper financial aid has been approved.

Most of the International Students are not allowed to work, so their respective nations pay for their education while they are in the United States.

Leonard also approves forms for the Department of Immigration, which processes the students' passport and visa applications.

Having these students

On Tuesday, October 25, at 12:35 p.m., a UNCW student, upon approaching her car, discovers a yellow slip of paper, securely placed beneath the windshield wiper, fluttering in the wind. "Faculty Parking" is marked on the five-dollar-a-shot parking ticket.

The student anxiously glances at the windshields of adjacent cars to find them without the familiar slip of paper. She then looks down at the faded white lines painted on the asphalt, to find yellow bleeding through. The present student space has been mistaken for its former faculty status.

This UNCW student promptly obtains a ticket repeal request form from the parking office, and is told to add a drawing showing the exact place of the offense.

Repeal requests are available for all parking ticket holders. A repeals committee made up of faculty and students, which meets once a week, will review the repeal and either grant or deny it.

The repeals committee requires a drawing representing the location of the reception of the ticket, before a repeal can be considered. However, there is no designated space for a drawing on the repeals form leaving the offender without indication of this requirement.

If the offender feels a parking ticket is incorrect, a repeal can be made, and with an explanatory drawing, granted.

Approximately 500 parking tickets are issued each week by police officers and fellow students.

Mistakes can be made, so if a questionable ticket has been administered, repeal it, and include an explanatory picture for proper consideration by the repeals board.

WILMINGTON - The UNCW Student Women's organization will be showing Akira Kurosawa's film "No Regrets For Our Youth" at 7:30 p.m., Friday, Dec. 2, in Morton Hall Auditorium on the campus of The University of North Carolina at Wilmington. The film is open to the public; a dollar donation is requested. Donald Ritchie, reigning authority of Japanese cinema has written: " 'No Regrets For Our Youth' assumes an honored place in Japanese film history as the first postwar attempt to portray a modern woman. In the character of Yukie, the film's heroine, Kurosawa expresses the need for postwar Japan to renew itself through respect for the individual. At the time of the film's release, Yukie's search for ethical and emotional fulfillment so astounded the critical world that male backlash overshadowed consideration of other aspects of the film... It is the characterization of Yukie, however, the sheltered young girl who gives up everything for love and moral rectitude, that remains the film's greatest and most controversial achievement."

Based on two historical incidents of the prewar period, "No Regrets For Our Youth" has been called by Joan Mellen, in THE NEW YORK TIMES "superb" and "one of Mr. Kurosawa's most deeply felt films."

This 111-minute black and white film was made in 1946. It is in Japanese with English subtitles. Akira Kurosawa also directed "Roshomon" and "The Samurai" and is critically acclaimed as a major filmmaker.

Fountain said plans are vague at the moment but the possible condominiums will be "oriented to the university."

"At this time I am not sure what type of housing it will be, but it will definitely be oriented to the university - no matter what we do."

Construction will begin at the first of the year. Fountain anticipates completion of the first phase of housing in four or five months. The units will be ready for occupancy by August of 1984.

WILMINGTON - Thirty-nine students at The University of North Carolina at Wilmington will be listed in the 1984 edition of WHO'S WHO AMONG STUDENTS IN AMERICAN UNIVERSITIES AND COLLEGES. They have been selected as being among the country's most outstanding campus leaders.

Campus nominating committees and editors of the annual directory chose these students based on their academic achievement, service to the community, leadership in extracurricular activities and future potential.

The UNCW students join an elite group - selected from more than 1,300 institutions of higher learning in all 50 states, the District of Columbia and several foreign nations. The directory was first published in 1934.

Students named this year from UNCW are:

Appleton Assists Liberia

Bentley Suggs/Leigh Ann Askew
Staff Writers

On October 19, Robert Appleton, accounting department chairman, joined an accounting staff member from Harvard Business School, and six World Bank consultants in a Structural Program in Monrovia, Liberia.

Liberia is a small country on the west coast of Africa. It is a very poor nation, with an average annual per capita income of less than $500.00. It is also over populated. Appleton said the city he was in was the size of downtown Wilmington, but had over 1/4 million people living there.

Due to a lack of accounting skills, Liberia is in great need of revision of its accounting systems by professional accountants. Some companies financial records have not been updated in three to five years.

He and the other consultants met with managing directors of various corporations in such industries as petroleum, electric utility, and air transportation, to review financial records and reports, then to propose ideas on improvements.

After careful review and study, Appleton submitted a report to the World Bank with his suggestions on improved systems in Liberia. "If the report is well accepted, I will probably go back (to Washington) in January, and possibly look for different assignments in the World Bank, with the hopes of getting more Cameron School of Business faculty members involved."

Appleton was chosen for the assignment on the recommendation of Dr. William Ward, World Bank consultant, and former UNCW faculty member. Appleton has prior experience in medium to small businesses with poor accounting skills, and has an educational background in management accounting.

Appleton cannot disclose his financial findings, but he enthusiastically raves of his adventures in Liberia.

Immediately cautioned against a possible military uprising against the ruling faction, Appleton understood the instability of the militarily ruled government, recently introduced to power with a revolution in April of 1980. The leading government official is a former master sergeant with a ninth grade education. He is now known as Commander in Chief Dr. Samuel K. Doe.

While in Liberia, Appleton ate breakfast with U.S. Ambassador William L. Swing, of Greensboro, North Carolina. He described the meal as elegantly served.

Appleton's overall impression of Liberia is that: "There is no national pride - no unity. Everybody is out for himself." He also adds, "Life there is like America was 200 years ago. They are that far behind us, and catching up is a slow process."

Officers Attend Meeting

Woodrow Willis
Staff Writer

On November 18, Eric Squires (SGA President) and Mike Godfrey (SGA Treasurer), went to Chapel Hill to discuss the new academic and alcohol policies projected to govern the sixteen universities in the UNC system.

Officers included presidents from SGAs, UNCSGA, and NCLA. There was 100% attendance by representatives of the UNCW system.

The major academic policy discussed was a proposal to increase stringency for university acceptance requirements. This proposal would set forth stricter requirements that would have to be met in high school before acceptance into the university system.

The proposal would allow students who had not done well in high school to extend their high school career in order to improve their grade point average. This, in turn, would raise the academic level of students accepted into the North Carolina universities.

In order for a person to extend their high school career, they must meet certain requirements, such as working to meet basic college requirements and having applied to a particular college.

The purpose for strengthening entrance requirements is to help set the universities apart from the technical and community colleges. Recently, there has been an interchanging of the three sectors of higher education.

SGA Discusses Calender

Debbie Conny
Managing Editor

The Student Government Senate in its meeting on Dec. 1 came out strongly against a proposal made by the calendar committee that fall break be eliminated or shortened to only two or three days. They made a resolution of their own saying that they were very much opposed to this proposal, and that the calendar committee should re-think its suggestion and take into consideration the overwhelming support that both UNCW students and faculty give to retaining fall break.

Gilly Chamberlain, the only student member of the calendar committee, addressed the Senate with her observations and concerns. She said that, "mostly the people who do want to get rid of it have come from the Chancellor's office, and that part of the Administration." She said that spring break would not be affected, and that the proposal would not go into effect until 1985.

Another relevant issue was brought up concerning the possibility of having "dead days," which would allow for two or three days in between the last day of classes and the beginning of exams. Many students have expressed a need for this time to be better prepared for exams, but, Chamberlain said, "The problem is that we have to have a certain number of academic days and everybody's trying to stuff it all in together." She suggested starting classes a week earlier in August in order to assure both a fall break and a couple of dead days in the future.

In other business, SGA President Eric Squires urged the Senate to give its approval to a current proposal from the Communication's Department that it be allowed to use Room 213 of the Student Union, which is designed as a Video Production Station, for use as a video studio for both communication's students and other students or student groups.

Also, James O. Brown, a non-traditional student and pastor, was appointed as a justice to the UNCW Student Supreme Court.

Editorial

As each semester ends, the students of this institution are provided the opportunity to evaluate faculty members. Some view this ritual as an exercise in frustration - the students revenge, while others view it only as a waste of time or a break from the lecture routine. But the evaluation process provides a great opportunity for students to voice their opinions and therefore exert some influence on the educational process.

As individuals in a mass-education system, we are apt to forget our role as consumers of the economic commodity of education. But as consumers, we are entitled to our money's worth and we are entitled to be concerned about the quality of the product in which we invest our time, effort, and money.

As students, we are likewise entitled to be concerned with the quality of the instructors who simultaneously teach and evaluate us. Their judgment of our abilities and performance will greatly affect our future. They provide the basis for the judgment of our abilities and performance for the rest of our lives, by potential employers and society as a whole.

Each semester, students evaluate faculty members on every facet of their performance: ability to organize and present material, clearness in explaining course expectations and grading procedures, knowledge of material, concern for students as shown by willingness to assist them individually, fairness in grading and testing and ability to stimulate thinking. Students are invited to make comments and suggestions, with the promise of anonymity.

It is not enough only to provide an outlet for suggestions and criticisms. If the purpose of these evaluations is to improve the quality of the university, the students must see the result of their opinions. Too many questions remain unanswered. Do my classmates feel the same as I do? What about the same instructor's students in other classes, are they equally satisfied or dissatisfied? What does the entire student body think of the education as a whole at this university? Are some instructors better than others in the same class? Are some programs stronger than others?

The administration could answer many of these questions by publishing the composite results of the student evaluations of faculty members.

The administration should also consider a system of ranking faculty members based on student evaluations, as well as evaluation by other faculty members, namely departmental heads. Though this would be basically the same thing on a larger scale, it would necessarily provide a more accurate view by means of its comprehensive aspects.

Steve Hill

Unfortunately, this doesn't apply to all the senators. Maybe they have good intentions but they just don't have the dedication for their position. Being a senator requires a lot of extra time and effort, and it looks to me like a few of them haven't realized that yet.

Part of my reason for writing this editorial is to encourage more students to take an interest in the SGA, because if they are dissatisfied with the way it's working, they need to let their opinion be known, after all, the SGA's primary responsibility is to the student body.

At each Senate meeting there is a time set aside for clubs, organizations, or individuals to speak their mind. As of today, only once have I seen anyone take advantage of this opportunity.

I think, at the very least, students should come to know who represents them, just how much power the SGA has (last year it handled 158,000 dollars), what decisions they are making, and also, just how much power we as students can have if we let our voices be heard in and through the SGA.

Debbie Connly

Season's Greetings From The Journalism Staff

As a member of the Journalism class this semester, I chose the SGA as my "beat." I knew very little about the SGA and its functions, but I was interested in finding out more.

My main responsibility has been to cover the SGA Senate meetings on Thursday nights. I'll admit that at times it has been less than thrilling, but I have come to understand more about the SGA and the people who are in it.

The SGA evokes mixed reactions from students on campus. Naturally, if a certain club receives a generous amount of funding from it, they are much more likely to have a positive attitude toward the SGA than a club that didn't.

But most of the time, students express dissatisfaction with "their" Student Government. They don't know who their representatives are or what they do, and many have a profound sense of distrust concerning them.

In my opinion, this kind of attitude is, more often than not, unsubstantiated. Granted, the SGA doesn't always please everyone, and its track record the past few years hasn't been all that great, but I honestly believe that this year the SGA is really striving to improve and to let students know that they are sincere in wanting to represent them.

Stillpoint

By Bob Haywood, Campus Minister

So much of our life seems to be lived on the surface. Our busy schedules leave us, so often, feeling like a flat stone skipping across the waters. At the end of all the skips, we sink down into stillness but only out of exhaustion. And here we are, once more entering into the hustle and bustle of December with its final exams and Christmas preparations.

At the same time all of us want to live our life in such a way that it has moments filled with the sense of meaning and significance and joy. All that we are doing, we tell ourselves, is leading to a time when we can have such experiences somewhere out there in the midst of the future. And so we work, with long lists, with much haste and frustration, never seeming to get to that point where there is time or space to feel deeply. Our lives are rushed, overfull and, often, shallow.

My belief is that unless we find ways and times to plumb the depths of ourselves, our relationships, and the world in which we live in the midst of all our busyness, we will find ourselves always feeling like a skipping stone. Henri Nouwen, during his six month stay in a Trappist monastery, comments: "maybe I have been living much too fast, too restlessly, too feverishly, forgetting to pay attention to what is happening here and now, right under my nose. Just as a whole world of beauty can be discovered in one flower, so the great grace of God can be tasted in one small moment."

But we have to find the stillness, to create moments where our consciousness can become centered in the deeper dimension. It takes a certain stillness within to appreciate the everyday, the joy of a relationship, or the wonder of simply being alive and often filled with laughter in a world that seems so threatened. Friedrich Buechner in trying to find, in a few words, the essence of everything he's trying to say as a novelist and a preacher comments: listen to your life. See it for the fathomless mystery that it is. In the boredom and the pain of it no less than in the excitement and gladness: touch, taste, smell your way to the holy and hidden heart of it because in the last analysis all moments are key moments, life itself is grace."

Let these words settle into your heart of hearts and carry them into the days and weeks of pressure and planning and list making that lie before you. Choose to make space to plumb the depths of whoever and where ever you are. I hope you will not let the pressure and activities of the exam Christmas season keep you from all the rich things and joy that can be found right here and right now.

Editorial

Physical fitness is a good thing. Some people feel that everyone should be in tip top shape. But not everyone is, not everyone is ever going to be, and not everyone wants to be.

An individual has a choice on whether to exercise or not. I feel this should be taken into account when general degree requirements are decided upon.

I agree, everyone should know that exercise benefits their health, and know the risks involved in a sedentary lifestyle so that they can feasibly make their own decision on the matter. That should be the basis of the PED course we are required to take. There should be some sort of classroom textbook course outlining the details of the relationship of the body, health, and exercise.

However, I feel that no one has the right to force me to become even averagely physically fit for a grade. If I don't want to run, I won't. I never have, and probably never will. Yes, even after taking the PED 101 course. Running bothers me. And I know of quite a few other people it bothers just as much.

Now there are other 100 level PED courses that would not bother me so much, if we must be subjected to bodily punishment, at least we could be given a choice about how it is to be done.

I believe it is a total infringement on our rights, as owners of our bodies, to try to tell us what to do with them. An in-depth health course would be very beneficial, more so than a coach throwing up sentences from a textbook in rapid fire action once a week. People need to learn this kind of thing and be allowed to choose whether or not to experience it.

Merry Christmas
from
The Seahawk Staff!

The Journalism Class has worked closely with the Seahawk staff this semester to help provide UNCW with a weekly newspaper. As a final project the Journalism Class brings you the final copy of The Seahawk for fall semester 1983.

As editor, I would like to express my appreciation to the Journalism Class and also to the Seahawk staff for their performance.

The 1983 fall semester has indeed been a challenge. However I feel we have accomplished many things, one being we have printed a paper every week and another being that the quality of the paper has improved. I look forward to serving the campus as editor through the spring 1984 semester.

Thank you for your support and a special thanks to my staff - they're the greatest.

Improving Student Life

Duff, Kelly

Although the students of UNCW are all here for the same reason, they can still enjoy these years of learning in their spare time.

With an average of three to four hours of class time and a few hours of studying each day, even the most dedicated student has plenty of time left over to occupy in some way. The problem seems to be finding something to do with it.

Since the drinking age has been raised, rules are more strict on campus concerning alcoholic beverages. Beer is only allowed in students' rooms who are of age and at certain times and designated areas of the Student Union.

The students here are apathetic because there are not enough campus-sponsored activities to be involved in, and the events that are held are not publicized well enough to get participation or there are too many restrictions for students to really enjoy themselves. This has prompted students to go home on weekends or to other schools, such as Carolina, State and ECU to have a good time.

What can elevate the field of entertainment on campus for students of UNCW? One speech class had a group discussion, resulting in the following ideas:

1) Doug Hunter, a sophomore, suggested that bars be built on the isolated road near Trask Coliseum, beside the tennis courts. They would be well within walking distance for those who don't have cars, as well as providing a convenient and safe place to party. Doug also suggested that beer be sold in the Student Union, which would lower the number of students getting DUI's.

Of the few concerts UNCW has, such as Seaside Jam, there are alcohol restrictions of one beer per hour. Also, the cage parties held in the tennis courts by the apartments are limited to only on-campus residents.

2) The cafeteria in the Student Union is big enough that with all the tables cleared from the center, dances could be held with live bands.

3) According to Melissa Dray, a Seahawk cheerleader, sports and related programs need more promotion. UNCW has no sports teams in a conference. With more money and support, the Philosophy and religion professor, Dr. Gerald Shinn, has made plans for a two-week tour with UNCW's Museum of World Cultures to Israel and Egypt from May 12-26th.

They will be touring the historic sites and museums. The price of the trip will be just under $2,000.00.

"I'm always excited about going over there," Dr. Shinn commented on his travels -thus far, he has journeyed there five times.

The 15 day itinerary begins when they reach Jerusalem, where they will spend two days exploring places of interest such as the Old City walls and gates, the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, the Dome of the Rock Mosque, the Valley of Hinnom, and the Garden Tomb.

On the fifth day, they will travel south to visit Bethlehem, the Herodium, Tekoa and Hebron.

They will spend the night in Arad and rise early for a drive to Masada, a spectacular fortress built by Herod the Great on an isolated plateau overlooking the Dead Sea. Then, driving north to Qumran, they will visit the spot where the Dead Sea Scrolls were discovered. Back in Jerusalem they will see the Shrine of the Book where they are displayed.

The 8th-10th days leads them on an excursion into northern Israel and Galilee to see archaeological ruins at Hazor and explore several New Testament sites along the Sea of Galilee.

On day 11, they will cross Egypt's border to meet an Egyptian guide and driver. At the capital of Sinai they will view the ruins of years of battles between Egypt and Israel and will cross the Suez Canal by ferry and travel along the Nile Delta to Cairo.

Rising to a full day of sightseeing at sites like the Pyramids of Giza, the site of Memphis, Necropolis of Sakara, and the Egyptian Antiquities Museum. This museum contains the world's most comprehensive collection of artifacts from ancient Egypt, including those of the tomb of Tut-Ankh-Amun.

Day 13 takes them to Luxor, capital of Egypt during its Empire Age. After exploring the temple complex at Karnak, with its famous avenue of the Sphinxes and massive Hypostyle Hall, they will cross the Nile to the Valley of Kings. Tut's tomb was discovered there in 1922. There, also, are the tombs of Seti I and Ramses VI. They will visit the funerary temples of Queen Hatshepsut and Ramses III, the famous Colossi of Memnon, and then return to Luxor for a flight back to Cairo.

The next morning, they will take a 7 a.m. flight to Brussels for a free afternoon of shopping and sightseeing.

On day 15, they will be homeward bound, arriving in Atlanta by mid-afternoon. Back home they will take up their usual routines.

athletic department could be placed into a conference. Cheerleaders could sponsor pep rallies to build school spirit and participation in sports. Everyone loves rivalry and competition.

4) According to Carl Dempsey, assistant to the Vice-Chancellor in business administration, UNCW has 650 acres of land in its possession, but "not over 300 are in use."

Basic plans for the remaining land include more student housing, academic buildings, and parking. But that certainly won't take up 350 acres. The land could be cleared and put to use in some way to benefit the students. Fraternity and sorority houses could be built, which would increase student involvement in fraternities and sororities and activities sponsored by them.

5) According to Linda Hinshaw, a senior and group leader, there are about 48 clubs and organizations at UNCW, but hardly any student involvement. The problem here lies in poor advertisement. Not many people have heard of clubs such as Circle K, Ten Pin Club, UNCW Young Democrats, or the University Program Board.

Advertisements are usually put only in buildings where the major of the event is taught.

Instead of the years passing by in inactivity and boredom, student life can be improved for better enjoyment and memories of college life.

Surviving EXAMS

Coping with ANXIETY

Sherry Johnson
Staff Writer

With the approaching week of final exams, many UNCW students are beginning to experience exam anxiety.

According to Dr. Ed Reilly of the UNCW Testing and Counseling Center, students that have not kept up with their assignments throughout the semester may be dealing with an "element of unreality" if they conceive high expectations from nonpreparation.

"If they have not prepared themselves all along, they are in trouble and have an impending crisis," he said.

"We're not in a situation to perform miracles," he said of the counselors at the Testing and Counseling Center.

"We don't have a magic pill to give or a magic wand to wave to help those students who are suffering from exam anxiety of the severest form."

However, Dr. Reilly said the Counseling Center can offer help to most students who are concerned about their academic performances.

Reilly said there are two main things he does to help students alleviate much of the anxiety caused by exams.

First, a time inventory is taken to reveal how the student manages the majority of his time. With this outline the student is encouraged to manipulate his schedule in such a way as to incorporate the necessary study habits to meet his needs.

The second area of the counseling consists of training with relaxation tapes. The student is taught how to manage and deal with stress provoking situations.

Although some students may have fallen so far behind in their classes to benefit from the counseling center's suggestions this semester, Reilly said it is not too early to begin thinking about studying strategies for the spring semester.

"Students should not wait until a full blown crisis to seek help," he said.

"Those students that are susceptible to exam anxiety need to come to the counseling center earlier in the semester."

BE TEST WISE

Tracy Meacham
Staff Writer

Next week many UNCW students will be taking final exams and the following clues which come from the UNCW Counseling and Testing Center will help you learn how to be test wise.

These clues sometime help in choosing the correct alternatives on objective tests when you are not completely sure of your answer. The test wise student takes advantage of clues which the instructor may put in when he writes the test.

The first main type of clue concerns the list of alternatives in a multiple choice item. Four factors are frequently associated with the correct alternative.

The correct alternative is sometimes the most general, since the most general alternative includes the most information. You will often find a list of items that have some very technical and specific alternatives and one alternative which is more general. Chances are the most general alternative is the correct one.

The correct alternative is sometimes the longest. Most tests are somewhat consistent about the length of correct answers. If you notice that most of the correct answers have been the shortest, then when you aren't sure, pick the shortest. If, on the other hand, most of the correct answers have been the longest, pick the longest answer when you are unsure. If you have noticed no particular trend for either the longest or the shortest, try the longest.

The correct alternative is sometimes of middle value. If the alternatives range in value - old to new, early to late, big to small - and you are not sure which one is correct, eliminate the extremes and pick from the middle value or values.

The correct alternative is probably not one of a pair of similar statements. If two alternatives mean the same thing, and there is only one correct answer, you can eliminate both of them.

The correct alternative is sometimes one of a pair of direct opposites. If you notice that two alternatives have opposite meanings, one of them is probably correct.

Tips on Studying

Jodi Long
Staff Writer

The end of the semester is finally here; and everyone knows what that means - exams. Along with exams is a lot of studying and hard work.

Many of us sometimes get into the habit of putting off our studying until the last couple of days before the exam. There are many different excuses for this; don't have the time, something else better to do, and it can wait until later.

Mr. Weber, in the PED department, has his own ideas for this; he believes many of his students don't know "how" to study. He says that this is often reflected in their grades.

He suggests the use of a distributive method of studying, versus cramming one or two days before the exam.

The following are a few steps he suggests students to follow, all semester, to distribute learning.

1. Read the book and chapters assigned, and keep up.
2. Go through the book a second time. This time highlight the important material.
3. A third time take notes on the material.
4. After lecture, or while material is still fresh, reread notes and if possible rewrite the notes.
5. Highlight the important material in the notes.
6. If you arrive early at a lecture, instead of talking to everyone; get prepared for the lecture, and reread over the notes for the previous lecture.
7. The night before the exam, if you've followed the other steps, only 1½ to 2 hours of studying will be necessary.

Rise IN DWIs

Leigh Ann Askew
Staff Writer

On October 1, 1983, the DWI law came into effect, accompanied by a vast decrease in drunk driving arrests. But now, two months later, DWI arrests are on the rise.

The Wilmington Police Department attributes the rise in DWI convictions to the slow court results on DWI suits. Sergeant Bill Russell feels, "The novelty of the new law is wearing off. Drinking drivers are becoming more careless."

As the holiday season approaches, Russell believes this carelessness could lead to accidents.

"We urge drivers to think about the drive home before they leave for a party. They should arrange to be transported by a sober driver, or to stay overnight in a motel, before they attempt to get behind the wheel while intoxicated," said Russell.

Partygoers should keep in mind that the DWI team will be out in full force over the holidays.

Says Russell, "We're not out to get people, we're trying to save lives."

Keep your holiday season a joyous occasion - DON'T DRINK AND DRIVE.

Fund Helps Faculty

Peter Mullins
Staff Writer

The faculty at UNCW has at their disposal a Research and Development Fund. This fund enables the faculty to do research of relevant literature or field studies, organization of a pilot project and purchase of specialized equipment or computer time. Or it allows them to do development work. This work entails the improvement of the educators own talents through several means, i.e. work with a noted researcher; participation in courses, seminars or workshops; organizing a seminar at UNCW for faculty or participation in programs that strengthen teaching effectiveness in specifically identifiable ways.

Dr. James K. McGowan, the Acting Director of Admissions, chairs a committee, in an ex officio capacity, which is made up of 8 faculty members and the current Chairman of the Faculty Research Committee. The Committee disposes of $12,000.00 annually by determining which of the proposed projects merit funding.

The Fund, which was established in 1977 from the Kenan Endowment Fund by an action of the Board of Trustees of the University of North Carolina at Wilmington, has aided various projects by UNCW faculty. These projects and funds range from a maximum of $1,000.00 to Ms. Sue Hiatt for participation in the 1983 Archives Institute, to a maximum of $392.00 to Dr. David B. Royce for the project Analysis of Antennular Behavior in the Blue Crab.

UNCW's concern for Nuclear Shelter

Karen Waddell
Editor

What would happen to the people of this community if Wilmington was the target of nuclear missiles?

With the growing concern over nuclear weapons and ABC's recent showing of "The Day After," many people are becoming disturbed over the possibility of a nuclear war.

Growing up in the nuclear age, most college students realize the horror that would result from a nuclear holocaust. And many UNCW students are wondering what shelter would be available to them if such an event should occur.

According to Bob Swart of the Civil Management Corp, Trask Coliseum is designated as a hurricane shelter but is probably not suitable as a fallout shelter.

"If there was a threat, where would we go?" asked Denise Caddell. "There would be no time to seek shelter elsewhere."

Another UNCW student voiced her concern over the lack of fallout shelters on this campus. "This is a concentrated area with a large number of people and in the event of a disaster, there needs to be a shelter close by," said Melanie Blythe.

But one student feels that the shelters are not necessary. "I don't think it would do any good," said Debbie Davis. "You can't live your life in a fallout shelter."

Concern over possible nuclear war is not likely to diminish in coming years. And most people would like to see its chances of occurring reduced.

"We face extinction unless agreements are reached to outlaw nuclear weapons," said Al Barry, Safety Director at UNCW. "This agreement would be the first agreement in preserving life."

"Take that junk back to your dog house. You're not moving in with us!"

Swim Team

Mary Jefferies
Staff Writer

The Swim Team of UNCW, coached by Dave Allen and Marc Ellington is looking forward to a busy and productive season.

The women's team, a combination of swimmers and divers, has more than tripled in size this year with new and old members. They are expected to do exceptionally well this year.

The members of the Men's Swim Team are Richard Bell, Matthew Benjamin, Bill Biddix, Mike Bitzenhofer, Ed Burton, Steve Bumgarner, Tim Flaherty, Robert Sealey, Jeff Siggins, and Reid Stephenson. The captains of the team are Chris Moore and Colin Kueny.

Both teams have already started a very busy season opening with a meet on November 19 against the College of Charleston of which they won. After Christmas they will be busy almost every weekend until March when they have the Eastern Intercollegiate Championships for the men, and the NAIA Championships for the women.

The team will also be hosting the Seahawk Invitational which will be held on February 16, 17, and 18.

Groups Aid Sport Scholarships

Jeff Maynard
Staff Writer

The UNCW Athletic Department relies on scholarships to make its teams as successful as possible. The financial aid offered to a student athlete helps him/her decide on their respective future as far as college goes. Without scholarship money, UNCW would have no athletic program to speak of. With 15 varsity sports made up of nearly 150 student athletes who receive financial support from UNCW, where does the money come from to have these individuals at this university? It comes from two organizations called the Seahawk Club and the Alumni Association.

The Seahawk Club, consisting of financial contributors who wish to improve our athletic department here at UNCW, contributed $30,000 this year to the athletic department. The members fall into four different clubs depending on the amount of money they contribute. The clubs are: the Seahawk Club with a $25 minimum contribution, the Golden Hawk Club with a $200 minimum contribution, the Green and Gold Club with a $500 minimum contribution, and finally the Chancellor's Club with a $1000 minimum contribution.

These funds are in the care of Coach Brooks who allots the money to the respective needs of the athletic department. According to Jay Parker who is the Club's Treasurer, "The club was relatively inactive until UNCW's acceptance as a Division I university." The club is very active now and will continue to be a major factor in the future of the UNCW sports program.

The Alumni Association aids our athletic department by contributing to the Scholarship Fund. According to Executive Director Frank Bowen, the Alumni association contributed close to $2700 in scholarship money to be equally divided into athletic and academic scholarships. The Association is responsible for the new air conditioning system in Trask Coliseum. That $5000 purchase enables those who visit Trask Coliseum to be comfortable at any event.

The Association sponsors pre-game socials for Alumni members and Seahawk Club members before basketball games. These socials promote fellowship between alumni and builds enthusiasm about the athletic program here at UNCW. In order to be an Alumni Association member, one must be a graduate of UNCW or Wilmington College or students who have attended classes and completed resident credit. There are also different clubs within the Association complying with contribution amounts. The clubs include: the 1947 club in which a member contributes $19.47 which happens to be UNCW's founding date, the Green and Gold club where contributions fall between $50 and $99.99, and finally the Chancellor's club which requires a $1000 contribution.

UNCW Splits

Jeff Maynard
Staff Writer

The UNCW men's basketball team went to Fayetteville this weekend optimistic about their chances of coming away with 2 road game victories. The Seahawks lost their opener in the Olde Fayetteville Classic to Towson State of Maryland by a score of 62-59. The 'Hawks rebounded in the second game to beat Monmouth College by a score of 46-41.

Against Towson State, Tony Anderson hit for 12 points while freshmen Ronnie Bellamy and George Durham contributed 11 apiece. The new rule which automatically assesses two free throws to any foul in the final two minutes hurt UNCW's chances to defeat Towson State. Trailing by four with 44 seconds remaining, UNCW fouled Towson State's Rica Page on three separate occasions. Each time, he mis-ed his first attempt and made his second. Under the old one and one ruling, UNCW would have had a chance to fight for the rebound and a possible victory. On the following Mel Gibson Show on WWAY-TV 3, Coach Gibson said that although the new rule hurt the Seahawks in this particular game, he was in favor of the rule because it takes the pressure off the referees to determine legitimate calls (one an one or a two shot intentional foul).

In Saturday's contest, UNCW gained their first victory of the season by defeating Monmouth College 46-41. The 'Hawks relied on the strong play of forward Terry Shiver who poured in 17 points and hauled in 10 rebounds before re-injuring his ankle and having to leave the game with 6½ minutes remaining.

What do the mens' basketball team, the womens' basketball team, the swim team, the soccer team, and several physical educational classes have in common? Terry Middleswarth.

Terry, to anyone who knows him, is perhaps the busiest man at UNCW. He is the athletic trainer, which requires his attendance at most UNCW sporting events and practices, and he is a physical education teacher, which entails teaching 4 classes each week.

His experience includes an undergraduate degree from the University of Oklahoma; actual experience as a trainer at East Central University in Oklahoma, for 8 years; at UNC-Chapel Hill, for 5 years; and at UNCW, for the last 7 years.

"Everyday is a new experience and enjoyable"

INTRAMURALS

Woodrow Willie
Staff Writer

Last Tuesday night, November 29, a preseason seeding tournament was held by the intramural department to determine this season's intramural basketball schedule.

The teams were divided into two groups who then played against each other in a game lasting ten minutes. After the tournament, the teams were seeded for the upcoming season according to whether the team won or lost its respective game.

Middleswarth Enjoys Busy Life

said Middleswarth about his job. He often has to arrive at school at 5:30 am, for swim practice, and leaves late at night after a basketball game.

If Middleswarth could change anything at UNCW, he would increase the budget of the entire Athletic Department, from which the training budget comes from. But he added, "due to high costs we have tried to build slowly, and now have much of what we need."

Piedmont Offers Low Fares

Peter Mullins
Staff Writer

"Hey John, what are you going to do for Christmas break?" I asked.

"Well, me and a friend decided to go the New York for a week." John said.

"New York, didn't you go there at fall break? You must be pretty rich."

"Not at all. I just know how to get there real cheap."

Ever wonder how come some people go to New York or Florida over breaks, and you end up just going home? Well, Piedmont Airlines has several plans that can change the boredom of those long days at home.

Piedmont, the only airline that flies out of Wilmington, has several plans that will save the traveler a considerable amount of money. There is the Super-Saver, which is a ticket purchased 7 days in advance of one's flight. The Excursion fare, which is a special fare to cities at a discount price. And the Carolina fare, which is a $29.00 one-way ticket to any city in North or South Carolina that Piedmont serves.

Several cities across the country have special discounts, especially on weekends: New York $118.00 round trip, Boston $129.00 round trip, Philadelphia $110.00 round trip, Atlanta $146.00 round trip, Washington $78.00 round trip, and Miami or Tampa Florida $214.00 round trip. The Atlanta, Washington, and Florida trips have some restrictions.

Mr. John Johnson, at Piedmont, said the best way to get a discount is to call several weeks in advance and to be flexible on the day and time of departure.

Review

Independence Day poignantly illustrates what it's like to grow up in a small town with nothing to do. David Keith (Firestarter) and Kathleen Quinlan star in a tale of young lovers with conflicting perspectives of their little cowtown, Mercury, Texas.

Full of touching vignettes that emphasize the tender dignity of the passing of life, regardless of where it is lived, Director Robert Mandel wisely adopts a narrative style that gives plenty of room for his characters to develop.

David Keith, as Jack Parker, shines as the roughneck who lives hard yet plays the tender, soft-spoken brother. Francis Sternhagen as the sister is the victim losing her grip in the face of her humiliating wife-beating husband (Cliff de Young). Truly the gem of this movie, Sternhagen's riveting role deserves an Academy Award nomination for her incredible ability to project pain without the need of dialogue. Quinlan is Jack's girlfriend with the big dream to leave. Possessed with a rare smile that melts into her face and glows through the eyes her only pitfall is her liking for cigarettes. The touching scene with her mother on the porch... "Let's close our eyes. I can already see you there" is deeply moving.

For those who enjoyed the characteristics of The Big Chill, Independence Day may prove equally rewarding.

Also discussed was the issue of alcohol on campus. There is a proposal that there should be a tavern on campuses in the university system. It is hoped that this will teach the students how to drink more responsibly and deter students from having to risk driving off campus for alcoholic beverages.

When first enforced, the DWI rate dropped but now has increased, which suggests that the law involving the drinking age has not been effective.

Internships

Available

Twenty-three students will be selected by an advisory committee to participate in a living-learning internship in North Carolina state government directed by the Institute of Government. Institute interns will work from May 31 through August 10, 40 hours each week in a responsible position in a state department and participate in evening educational seminars. They will be paid approximately $150 per week.

Sophomores, juniors, and seniors currently enrolled in a North Carolina college, or North Carolina residents attending an out-of-state college are eligible for the Institute of Government Summer Internship Program in state government.

Students interested in the program should secure a brochure announcing the program and a State of North Carolina application form from their college or university placement office or local Job Service office. A brief description of possible internships is available in college placement offices.

Students interested in the Institute of Government program should mail an application to Mrs. Carolyn White, Institute of Government, Knapp Building 059A, The University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, Chapel Hill, North Carolina, 27514, by February 10, 1984.

Applicants will be accepted without respect to race, sex, color, national origin, religion, or handicap.

Nursing Department Receives Grant

Courtesy UNCW News Bureau

The nursing program at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington has received a grant of $144,221 from Kate B. Reynolds Health Care Trust. The grant, to be disbursed by the Reynolds Trust over three years beginning in 1983, will be used for the transition of the nursing program from the current two year program to a four year baccalaureate degree granting program. Money from the grant will be used primarily for faculty salaries, support staff and consultation services.

The nursing program will receive $51,800 this year, $71,368 in 1984, and $21,053 in 1985.

The Kate B. Reynolds Health Care Trust, a private foundation located in Winston-Salem, was created in 1946 through provisions in the will of Mrs. William N. Reynolds for the purpose of improving health care to the people of North Carolina. Approximately $2 million is awarded annually in grants to non-profit organizations throughout the state. The trust's current areas of interest are programs which promote access to primary health care, alternative health delivery programs which are cost-effective, and illness prevention/health promotion programs.

Dr. Marlene Rosenkoetter, chairman of the Nursing Department said, 'We're extremely pleased that the Kate B. Reynolds foundation has chosen to assist the university in the development of the baccalaureate program in nursing. We're especially delighted that this will give us an even better opportunity to develop a program designed specifically for the registered nurse.'

UNCW's nursing program was given a boost in March, 1982, when Babie's Hospital, Inc. pledged a $200,000 grant. Along with another $10,000 from Babie's Hospital, $10,000 from Area Health Education Center (AHEC), and $5,000 from a private source, the nursing program has received nearly $370,000 for the development of its baccalaureate program.

The first students will be admitted to the upper division nursing major in 1985. The last class in the current two-year associate degree program will begin in the fall of 1984. This staggered timing means that the university will not be without a nursing program at any time, according to Rosenkoetter.

Areas of emphasis in UNCW's four-year nursing program will include medical/surgical nursing; parent/child nursing; community mental health nursing; and community health (formerly called public health) nursing. The program also will emphasize research skills, broader and more in-depth knowledge of nursing issues, and an ability to approach a family or client in a more holistic manner, according to Rosenkoetter.

There is no bachelor's program in nursing east of Chapel Hill or south of Greenville. The nursing program at UNCW has been a major contributor to southeastern North Carolina. With the development of the baccalaureate degree, the nursing program will be able to help the region even more.

Board of Trustees Meets

Cost Increase in Student Housing

La Vera Parker Jeffreys
Editor

Students will see an increase in room and board in next fall's semester.

The Board of Trustees met on January 11 in the Student Union and passed this motion. Dr. Jairy Hunter II, Vice-Chancellor of Business Affairs, presented a motion that reflected a 10% increase in housing and dining.

According to Hunter fees were not increased last year although costs did go up in these areas. The fee increase is $195, going from $1,945 to $2,140 per year.

Student Government President, Eric Squires, presented his semi-annual president's report. Other motions were presented which do not directly affect students at this time.

Forensics Team Hosts Tournament

Leigh Ann Askew
Features Editor

UNCW has a championship team--the Forensics Team. With a record of five state championships in individual public speaking and debating events, the UNCW Forensics is setting a fine example for Eastern Collegiate Forensics. Team member Gary McManus stated, 'We have lost several key members of our team, but we more than make up for this loss with new members.'

Fifteen members strong, the Forensics Team is coached by Frank Trimble, the Division of Speech Communications' newest lecturer. Trimble has a vast background in forensic communication, with seven years experience as a team member in high school, and at Southern Illinois University, where he helped in coaching while also competing. But Forensics is not only for Communications majors. According to Trimble, 'Public speaking is crucial in the business world now, and jobs in all majors are requiring knowledge in public speaking.'

UNCW will host a Forensics tournament on January 20 through January 22. All students and faculty are encouraged to attend.

Letters

Dear Editor,

I've had it. I am tired of fighting the traffic everyday before class for a parking space, only to be rewarded by a parking ticket when I am forced to park somewhere within walking distance of my class when there is only five minutes to go before class starts.

"Ah," you reply, "the problem seems to be that. You should come to class early to find a parking space!" Sorry. No such luck. You try it. I have come twenty minutes before class only to find parking spaces filled everywhere. And I mean everywhere.

If I'm lucky, I can find a parking place at Trask while my class meets at Morton.

Oh, let's not forget our faithful friend and companion, the loyal UNCW security person. He or she is there all right, ready to give a ticket whenever any violations are made. I wouldn't mind that, except for their; let's say tenacity. I think vultures have made that into an art.

Oh, it's not all that bad. They only give 500 tickets a week. Hmmm. Only 500? Seems to be something wrong there. I thought security was supposed to aid and assist? Well, I guess I'm wrong.

Well, that wouldn't bother me except that, well, nothing seems to be improving. Instead of building more parking spaces to counter the thousands of new students that will be flooding this fine wonderful campus in the next few years, they're talking of tearing a few "down." Hmmm. Something seems to be a bit sticky here.

But, don't worry. This letter won't get published, no one will complain, and everyone will hear rosy tales of why we need to pay $40 dollars for parking stickers when thousands of parking tickets start to accumulate on windshield wipers. . .

Thank you,
Jean Jones

Stillpoint

By Bob Haywood, Campus Minister

Life passes by so swiftly. 1984! And January is half over already! Events that a few years ago kept me totally preoccupied have now become vague memories; conflicts that a few months ago seemed so crucial in my life now seem futile and hardly worth the energy; inner turmoil that robbed me of my sleep only a few weeks ago has become a strange emotion of the past; thoughts that kept my mind active just last night have lost their power and have been replaced by others.

If January invites reflection, perhaps it would be worthy to reflect on our rapidly shifting sense of priorities and how what seemed so very crucial and significant quickly fades into obscurity and forgetfulness. Why is it that we are trapped by such a sense of urgency and emergency so that every activity, every encounter, and every task gets stamped with emotionally controlling labels like "crucial", "important", "must not fail". And with such labels comes anxiety, fear, worry.

I need, I believe we all need to develop a sense of perspective. We are cursed with and driven by a sense of immediacy on the one hand and, on the other, worry about our worth which forces us to always be proving our value by doing, doing, doing. Let me invite you to reflect on your deeper values and goals as you move further into 1984 and become intentional about what you label as urgent and important. For me, my spiritual journey toward God yields, among many things a sense of timeless and eternal love of God, is slowly helping me break free of some of the daily urgencies that leave me so highly scheduled and exhausted. My hope is that both you and I can free ourselves from some of the shoulds, ought to's, and musts of daily life in favor of some deeper connection and commitment that will nourish in us the wellspring of peace.

Editorial

Sunday, January 15th, Sixty Minutes aired a segment about a new drug that lowers the abnormally high sex drives of rapists. Some people in San Antonio, Texas were upset because a convicted rapist was placed on probation with the stipulation that he take this new drug.

Other rapists in prison who are also taking this drug feel this man should be in prison, as do his victim, her neighbors, and even the judge!! The rapist's lawyer feels that rapists are abnormal, and that this abnormality should be scientifically treated. Prison could serve no purpose.

Fine.

What ticked me off is that this lawyer had the gall to say on national television, "As rapes go, this one was mild. It could have been worse."

Oh, she was ONLY raped!!!!

She had no serious broken bones or cuts. The rapist broke into her house THREE times to rape her. He succeeded twice. The third time, her neighbors caught him.

Imagine going to sleep each night wondering if he was going to break in again. Imagine being raped in your own house!!!

(We're supposed to be safe in our houses. It's why we have locks on the doors and windows.)

I can't help wanting this lawyer to experience that sense of panic and terror the victim felt as she woke up to find the rapist in her room. I don't think that if a homosexual with a rampant sex drive broke into his home and raped him (however mildly), he'd hold the same view of the violation.

Being raped is a serious violation of a person's civil rights, and leaves emotional scars that take years to erase, if ever!!!!

UNCW will mourn the tragic loss of Lauchlin Alexander Bethune III. He was a native of Kinston, NC, and died at the young age of 23. Alex was the only son of Mr. and Mrs. Lauchlin Bethune II, who reside in San Ramon, CA. Also surviving of his immediate family are three sisters. Alex died in an untimely car accident on Friday, January 13th. Joseph [Rufus] Marx, the driver of the vehicle was killed also, who was from Lake Waccamaw, and was a transfer student from UNC-CH. Their car slid on the icy road, crossed into the oncoming lane and collided with a tractor trailer on highway 421, six miles south of Clinton, according to the highway patrol report.

The funeral services for Alex Bethune were held at Grave Memorial Presbyterian Church, Monday afternoon. Many were present for the burial. A memorial ceremony was held Tuesday, January 17, at the Student Union. Rev. Haywood conducted the ceremony with the help of Chi Phi Fraternity of which Alex was an active brother. Bart Proctor read a fraternal prayer. Ronnie Kelly, a friend of Alex's of seventeen years and a fraternity brother, gave a moving remembrance speech.

Alex will always be remembered for his ambling walk and his big smile. He had a carefree attitude and a refreshing sense of cynical humor. Those of us that knew him truly loved him because he was so good-hearted. We will all miss him greatly and will remember Alex for the many happy memories he left us. Whenever there is a Neil Young or James Taylor song playing, or laughter, there Alex will be with all of us. Good-bye friend.

EYE ON THE WORLD

Pete Mullins

North Carolina: Governor Jim Hunt, whose political ambitions have no bounds, though currently he is content running for the Senate, received a belated Christmas gift. The gift came from Jesse Helms, his Republican opponent, no less. Helms, the incumbent Senator, was in North Carolina recently with a special guest, Jim Hunt's gift.

Accompanying Helms was his good friend and ideological equal, the former Secretary of the Interior, James Watt. What more could Hunt want in an opponent than a man who openly calls James Watt a friend and who went on to say that history will see Watt in a positive light? Is he really serious? This is the same James Watt who spent half his political life with his foot in his mouth, "the Beach Boys attract a bad element," and the other half giving away Federal lands to private corporations.

Watt while in NC insinuated that Hunt lacked integrity. Well, who would know better than James Watt about lack of integrity? After all didn't he show vast amounts on integrity (heavy sarcasm) while in office? Wasn't it he who had "a black, a woman, two Jews, and a cripple" on one of his committees?

Keep it up Jesse, you're all Jim Hunt needs to win the election.

Washington: Did Ronald Reagan get religion and give political recognition to the Vatican? Not on your life. Reagan realizes that things are out of hand in Central America.

The Kissinger Report, on Central America, came out this past week calling for major additions to the military aid programs, more money in a time when money for the military is getting hard to find. The Report also tied the additional military aid to human rights reform. In the wake of the Report, Reagan realizes the Pope can help do two things: first, the Pope can help influence and speed up human rights reform; second, the Pope can help push for peace between the warring factions, making additional military aid less necessary. The Pope has resources that neither Reagan nor any other political group can claim.

America: Is there hunger in America? No, according to Reagan aide Edward Meese. Not much according to a Reagan task force on hunger.

Where have these people been? Let them go to any major city; there are people living in the streets eating out of garbage cans. (Maybe these people are getting enough out of the cans so they're not hungry!) Are they serious that no one is hungry in America? Well, gentlemen, I'd like to introduce you to the real world, obviously you haven't met before.

Florida: Prediction. Redskins by seven, the reason being Theisman is much better than Plunkett. Final score Skins 17, Raiders 10.

On Tuesday, January 24, 1984, the Student North Carolina Association of Educators will sponsor a talk by "First-Year Teachers" at 3:45 pm in room 104 of King Hall. These teachers will discuss the problems and conflicts they have faced during their first year as teachers.

A note from the Office of Special Programs: All full-time students with a valid ID may enroll in courses sponsored by Special Programs at half the regular price listed in the spring brochure. Call extension 2195 if you did not receive a copy of the brochure in your student mailbox.

Student North Carolina Association of Educators members will also sponsor an "Educational Day Care Center" on Friday, January 27, 1984, and Monday, January 30, 1984, from 7:30 am to 3:00 pm. Everyone is invited to bring children grades k-3. Cost is $1.50/hr. or $9.00 a day. UNCW education students will be teaching lessons in various subjects throughout the day. ## Fields Heads Job Location Program

UNCW News Bureau

Students at UNCW who need a job and employers in the Wilmington area who need employees will have an easier time getting together due to a program in the UNCW Career Planning and Placement Center.

Called the Job Location and Development Program, the program is under the direction of Tom Fields, assistant professor of sociology at UNCW.

"There are plenty of jobs out there. We find that students don't know where to go or how to find them," Fields said. "My job is to canvass potential employers to know where the jobs are, interview the students, then match the listings with students who are interested and available by providing introductions." He also follows up on placement.

The Job Location and Development Program is an adjunct to the College Work-Study Program. Only students registered at UNCW, either full-time or part-time, are eligible to register for this job placement program. Registration is available in the Career Planning and Placement Center, Room 106, University Union, between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m. Monday through Friday, and students may call 791-4330, ext. 2174 for more information.

Roller New Director

Donna Holden
Managing Editor

A new face and positive addition here to the Athletic Department this semester is the new Sports Information Director, Bob Roller, former Assistant Sports Director at East Carolina.

After finishing a degree in Journalism at Virginia Tech, Roller went to ECU to organize and edit the programs distributed at football games. Although he did work with all sports, his primary duties were affiliated with football.

Roller's official title is Sports Information Director, yet his work entails much more than that. He is also the Director of Promotions for the Athletic Department, and during the summer and fall he serves as the executive secretary for the Seahawk Club.

Roller promotes Seahawk sports for each event. He sends information to the opposing school preceding each event. There are about 170 outlets on his mailing list extending as far as Ohio and Florida.

Roller said, "I would like to see increased media coverage, and more mention in the Charlotte and Raleigh papers" especially with the controversy over entering into the new East Coast Athletic Conference [ECAC].

If UNCW enters the ECAC, opponents would include such schools as ECU, William and Mary, James Madison, Richmond, Navy, and George Madison. Although all sports would be included, basketball would be the most emphasized. Roller and his wife, Julie, like Wilmington, especially since the beach is so close, and are excited about the move.

SCHOOL KIDS RECORD REVIEW

Rolling Stones--Undercover

***1/2

Mick 'Slick' and Keith 'Transfusion' of the Glimmer Twins have been music punks for 25 years. The Stones have always gone below the belt, beginning with 'Satisfaction.' Convinced that rock is primal; basically an emotional and physical path to sensual pleasure, Undercover illustrates this fact with a passion and fire that is surprising. (Undercover is destined for the local record burning churchyard.)

Though Undercover remains dance-oriented from the opening bars of 'Undercover of the Night,' images of pain, sex, and violence don't seem to suit spiffy dance couples on a shiny floor. Propelled thru the night, like a pack of snarling mangy dogs, at the crack of a whip, Undercover explores the alleyways of 1984--fear, violence, and paranoia.

The guitar duels of a cleaned up Ronnie Wood and Keith Richard make this LP the hardest hitting Stones album since the raveups on Exile on Main Street. "She was hot! She knew her way around," Mick screams to make sure all his fans know where he still is at after all this time. "If you were in my shoes, you would be excused," complains the rocker who rose from a fish pond lips intact.

The logic of the Stones has never been very spiritual. In the blues-breaker 'Tie You Up (The Pain of Love)' Jagger mistakenly substitutes love for sex... "looking back, got the clap, was it worth the rap?" 'Feel On Baby' is a slow Jamaican blues shuffle that becomes a dreamsicle of painful desire... "wanderlust and love disease, take me over, strangle me."

'Too Much Blood' is the most unusual tune of gore on Undercover. It starts off in midtown Manhattan as a joyride in a taxi for the sights and sounds and turns into a pseudo disco rap by Mick about our preoccupation with blood. "Have you ever seen the Texas Chainsaw Massacre?"

'Too Tough' and 'All the Way Down' harken back to mid period Stones and mark the intensity of drive and pain which characterizes this macabre somewhat futile record for those who prefer these blokes sleazy and behind closed doors your gonna love this mix. I'm glad to see the Stones wailing away but this gruesome fascination without any decent thread of humanity brings this bleak vision down in the hole. 'It Must Be Hell.' 4 stars for the music.

Terms of Endearment is, perhaps, one of the most touching movies being shown. Shirley MacLaine and Debra Winger play their characters well as a widowed mother and sensitive daughter.

As in most real relationships today, they have their mother/daughter problems. Theirs start at the beginning of the movie with the death of MacLaine's husband. Aurora grows distant from her daughter and friends, causing communications problems and stemming a slightly rebellious nature in Emma as an adolescent.

When Emma decides to get married and Aurora boycotts the wedding (because "he's just not right"), the major problems begin. After three children, moving to two different states for her husband's career, Emma is faced with typical marital: two sons, one daughter, his infidelity, her infidelity, dissension between husband and mother-in-law, a professionally successful best friend who pities her, and a battle with breast cancer.

Winger's character makes a person judge his or her own values and face questions that may have been unasked about the future and a career. Emma does not have a job and seems to have no desire to hold one. Her plight is one many people are afraid of falling into and are carefully striving to avoid.

Aurora is struggling with her own identity. She has no companionship since her daughter moved from their home state, Texas. She refuses to be called "Grandmother." Her facade crumbles when she "discovers" her next-door neighbor, a former astronaut, (played by Jack Nicholson) currently a drunk living on his fame. They begin an affair.

Viewers can appreciate the movie from various angles--a mother rediscovering herself, a daughter fighting death, a husband torn between a career and a family, and a has-been lover finding his own feelings.

But, be prepared to bring tissues, these characters and their portrayals really hit home.

Registration is being conducted in the Housing Office in Belk Hall between 9:00 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., Monday through Friday starting December 1, 1983 through January 19, 1984. The drawing for residence hall and apartment spaces will be held on January 20, 1984.

Robert Claybrook, president of Phi Kappa Phi fraternity donated a portrait of Dr. Martin Luther King to the University Union. The fraternity had originally donated the portrait in 1982 but at Chancellor Wagoner's suggestion, the portrait wasn't presented until this year when the University Student Union had opened. A student who had graduated from UNCW had originally painted the portrait and had given it to the Phi Kappa Phi fraternity. For more information, go to the Minority Affairs office.

Seniors who plan to enter graduate or professional schools in Fall 1984 and who are members of Phi Eta Sigma National Honor Society should get in touch with the faculty adviser, Dr. Lee Johnston in 214-F Behavioral Science Building.

National Phi Eta Sigma Honor society will award eight $1,000 scholarships and twenty-eight $500 scholarships this year on the basis of the student's scholastic record, evidence of creative ability, potential for success in chosen field, and character. Only members of Phi Eta Sigma are eligible for these gift scholarships.

National deadline for submitting applications is March 1. Application forms are available from the faculty advisor to the local chapter. Local deadline for application is Feb. 20, 1984.

Miller Agrees With Good Health

Stephanie Loftus
News Editor

Are you tired of starving yourself as your thighs multiply, while some people eat whatever they want and stay slim? The answer may be in a change of lifestyle, according to Dr. David K. Miller's recently published The Well Being - Good Health Handbook.

Currently assistant to the dean of the college of Arts and Sciences, Miller's background in health, teaching the P.E. 101, Fitness - A Lifetime Commitment prompted him to write the Good Health Handbook for the general public.

Most diet and exercise books have a gimmick to entice you. Jane Fonda's Workout Book, The Bever- ly Hills Diet, Thin Thighs in Thirty Days and The Body Principal, to name a few, all expect you to faithfully perform certain exercises or eat particular foods in order to lose weight.

Miller doesn't agree. "I don't think everyone should be on the same program Monday, eat this and Tuesday, eat that," he emphasized. "I want to encourage people to change their lifestyle and design their own individual program for weight loss."

Research shows that most people who lose weight gain it back because they resume their old eating habits once they reach their ideal weight. The Good Health

Handbook promotes a change in lifestyle that keeps the weight off. "It takes a conscious effort, along with diet and exercise to lose weight and stay healthy," he explained.

As a baseball player on the team from Wilmington College that won the national championship in 1961, and as an athletics teacher and a coach, Miller is in good shape. Yet, in 1969, he took up running for weight management because he felt he was not doing enough for his body. He continues to run today.

The Good Health Handbook costs $9.95 and can be ordered through bookstores in the Wilmington area.

Swim Team Earns Respect

George Walker
Sports Editor

"The race does not always go to the fastest or the strongest person, but to the one who truly believes he can prevail."

In most sports, this saying, if carried out, separates the champions from the also-rans. But in swimming this attitude is a prerequisite just to enter the pool, much less to excel. After months of intense training, the young 1984 Seahawk swim team is hoping to earn dividends on this work.

The highlight of the season to date was a thrilling loss against ECU Saturday. The majority of the races went to the wire, with the Seahawk swimmers claiming most of these. Coach Dave Allen was pleased. "We swam poorly against NC State a few days earlier and need this to get back in the right direction. Freshmen play a big role in our program this year and as they mature we should continue to improve."

Jeff Siggins captured both distance events, each time stubbornly holding off the opposition for split-second wins.

Colin Kueny, Mike Bitzenhofer, and Steve Bumgarner took firsts in the breast stroke, butterfly, and freestyle events. In the ladies meet, Denise Hamilton won both dives, breaking a school record by 20 points in the process. Evelyn Johnson exploded in the last 50 yards to win the Medley event. Janet Johnson took two second places to earn points. Loni Driscoll, Kathleen Flaherty, and Tim Flaherty also performed well for both teams.

The Seahawks trained in Ft. Lauderdale during break, often in 30 degree weather in an outdoor pool. The training regime borders on the line of fanaticism. At 6 a.m., when even most roosters are sleeping, the athletes prepare for practice. This workout includes strength exercises, weightlifting, and swimming laps in the cold morning water. These workouts callouse the athlete mentally and physically for competition. Afternoon workouts stress intervals and distance swimming, which can push the daily total up to 7.5 miles.

Distance runners, who carry much the same workload, train on open and varied terrain and seek solitude. Conversely, swimmers train closely in a small, enclosed area, always together. This has the effect of creating close ties and a team unity that absolutely cannot be found in other team sports. A first-time observer would be amazed at the cult-like chants and whistles teammates psyche each other with, always intent on improvement.

Coach Marc Ellington and Manager Al Monteith and trainer Phil Hardin contribute much time and effort. Also contributing heavily are swimmers Lori Baker, Pam Bell, Chrissy Cecil, Tracy Cloninger, Kathy Harris, Colleen Lawrence, Richard Bell, Matthew Benjamin, Bill Biddix, Ed Burton, Art Hall, Keith Johnston, Greg Magdanz, Chris Moore, Glenn Peterson, Robert Sealy, and Reid Stephenson.

Intramurals

Intramural basketball, one of the largest student activities on campus, began last week with 62 teams, a new weekend format, and a twelve game schedule that will culminate March 1 in the tournament final.

The new weekend format is for those who can't make games on week days and shows the growth Intramural Director Lea Larson has granted to the league. "The only room for expansion in the future will be on weekends. We are going until midnight every weekday." Lyn Ward is the supervisor and makes sure the games are run smoothly.

Shiver Strives for Perfection

By George Walker
Sports Editor

It has been said that it's not how far you go that is important, but where you started from. If so, then forward Terry Shiver of the Seahawk basketball team has travelled on a long journey.

The 6'4" junior has certainly not taken the easy route. In the competitive world of college athletics, the majority of high school "flashes" are reduced to mediocrity or bench-sitting duties. There is little room left for the good or above average prep player. Shiver was neither.

At his high school, Pender Academy, Shiver was a lanky 5'11" student with no organized basketball experience. Upon entering UNCW, Shiver made the team on hustle and enthusiasm. Coach Mel Gibson reflects. "I really did not think he would amount to a game player for us. His hustle and competitiveness made him a good player to have around for tough practices."

And practice he did. After seeing little action his first season, Shiver got his break midway through his second. Consistency and production on the boards have come his way ever since. Logic states that a 6'9" player should rebound a 6'4" player. But Shiver's constant movement and relentless physical play puts the odds in his favor. Even against Louisiana State's mountainous front line Shiver hauled down 12 rebounds.

While watching Shiver run up and down Hanover Hall during a pick-up game on a typical day, a viewer can see that basketball is an all-or-nothing matter to him. Anything less than his best is unacceptable.

Over the last few years he has set a personal standard that cannot be broken. Few people would use the word "star" to describe Shiver. Winner will suffice.

Lady Hawks Leash the Bulldogs

George Walker
Sports Editor

Led by the inside-outside tandem of Jill Amos and Gwen Austin, the Seahawk girls basketball team crushed Gardner-Webb 104-77 Monday night in Boiling Springs.

A spectator at a Seahawk game quickly learns what the players and coaches already know: they like to score points. It is not uncommon for the Seahawks to cross the century mark. A 30 second shot clock and the run-and-gun style employed by Coach Marilyn Christoff allows the players to take advantage of superior team speed.

But one must also look at the swarming team defense. Guards Sonya Pickard and Amos, quick and sly, create many turnovers and often cash these into points. Forwards Austin, Owens, and Patterson dominate the boards for rebounds. Substitutes Edmonson, Ballard, and Carroll contribute heavily off the bench.

The victory over Gardner-Webb raised the Seahawk record to 10-2. With center Sue Dean out for the season with a broken foot, the Seahawks must continue to show depth. The Seahawks faced ECU Wednesday night in a key contest.

George Walker
Sports Editor

The Seahawk basketball team dropped a chance to go above .500 for the first time by losing to Campbell (62-58) Monday night in Fayetteville. The top three scorers for UNCW, Terry Shiver, George Durham, and Brian Rowson, are all underclassmen.

The disappointing loss comes on the heels of a very successful break. Victims included Belmont Abbey, UNCC, and William and Mary.

Coach Mel Gibson is pleased with the progress to date. "Two-thirds of our team are freshmen. We are concentrating more on fundamentals. It is unfortunate that everyone focuses on records. I am pleased with the work our kids have put in."

The Seahawks are playing their toughest schedule ever, with teams like LSU, NC State, Virginia, and Wake Forest as opponents. Gibson commented on the problems of trying to match up with big time schools. "When we stepped on the court against Virginia it was the first time most of our kids had seen an ACC team in person."

UNCW played NC State Wednesday night.

Society Plans Lecture Series

Courtesy UNCW News Bureau

The UNCW chapter of Pi Sigma Alpha, the national political science honor society, has been awarded a $600 grant to help fund a spring lecture series entitled "National Defense: Politicians and Warriors."

The grant, funded by the national Pi Sigma Alpha office headquartered in Washington, D.C., is one of only 13 grants awarded to member colleges and universities across the country. Some 150 colleges and universities are participating members.

Troy Simmons, UNCW student and president of the local chapter, explained that the grant will be used to offset cost of speakers' travel, lodging, and meals when necessary. "It has helped us out in terms of flexibility in what we hope to accomplish," Simmons explained.

He noted that the spring lecture series calls for five or six speakers. U.S. Sen. Jesse Helms has been invited. Other national figures expected to participate include U.S. Rep. Robin Britt, of North Carolina's Sixth Congressional District, who accompanied a congressional delegation to Lebanon; U.S. Rep. Walter Jones, of North Carolina's First Congressional District; and Mike Mottern, chief scientist with the Air Force Chief of Staff's office at the Pentagon.

Times and dates of the lectures will be announced as they are finalized.

Dead Air

UNCW Interferes with TV6's Signal

Stephanie Loftus
News Editor

UNCW's student radio station may interfere with WECT-TV6's signal.

George Bair, assistant to Chancellor William H. Wagoner, said in the Star-News, "We're holding off on further development of an FM radio station until we're absolutely certain that what we put on the air will have no effect on the reception of Channel 6."

Jay Barnes, the president of the radio club, resigned due to personal reasons, but he told the student government association that the administration's lack of support was part of his decision.

Bill Cameron of WECT said that UNCW's proposed wattage interfered "significantly enough that we had to do something." He continued, "Our past experiences with other stations led us to this."

This summer WECT also objected to Friends of the Public Radio's frequency. The organization has lowered its output from 29,500 watts to 1,500 because of possible interference.

A student-run station would provide training for students interested in a broadcasting career as well as entertainment and university announcements.

Until the fall of 1980 UNCW operated a 10-watt student radio station in a trailer on campus. WLOZ was shut down due to technical, managerial, and student problems. Due to new Federal Communications Commission regulations, a 10-watt FM station does not appear possible.

Cameron believes that the FCC eliminated most low-power stations. "I think it was a matter of raise the power or get off the air." But when the stations raised their wattage, they often ran into interference problems.

In the United States, non-commercial stations are assigned frequencies near the frequency used by all TV stations on channel 6. To alleviate interference problems, the FCC may open new frequencies for non-commercial stations as well as issue new rules to deal with signal interference.

According to Bair, if the FCC issues new regulations concerning interference, UNCW will have a student radio station. It all hinges on the government.

King Remembered

On January 16, 1984, Alpha Phi Alpha Fraternity Inc. and the office of minority affairs sponsored a program in remembrance of the late Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. in King Hall Auditorium.

The program featured speakers from various departments of the university. Each gave a brief lecture on Dr. King's contributions to our society. Looking at his struggles from a historical, religious, political, and psychological aspect gave new insight to the man as a person.

After the program, Mr. Robert Claybrook, President of UNCW's chapter of Alpha Phi Alpha, invited the public to the university union for the unveiling of a portrait of their late honored brother.

Both the office of Minority Affairs and Alpha Phi Alpha Fraternity would like to thank all those who participated and who took part in the planning of the program.

Special thanks is extended to Mr. Ronald Dortch who gave a "Dynamic" oratorical presentation of Dr. King's famous speech, I Have A Dream.

Also, thank you to all who came out to witness what turned out to be an exciting program.

Editorial

For exactly 65 seconds Trask Coliseum was delirious. From the time Carlos Kelly banked in a Hail Mary shot (with 10 seconds left) and Stetson took the ball in the feeling was shared that maybe we had finally clutched a big game over a name team.

Then the walls caved in. Stetson scored the winning points on an uncontested layup, disappointing fans who moments earlier had applauded the team. "We were terrible." "That's UNCW for you." "We Suck."

These were words viciously muttered as the crowd of about 1000 filed out the doors, making this crowd, myself included, the largest assembly of hypocrites around.

Why should the last 10 seconds alter our critiques of the first forty minutes? It is simple. We are average American sports fans. Effort does not matter. Getting the big W is what it is all about.

When I think back on the Stetson game, I will remember a group of guys who outclawed a bigger, more experienced team. And I especially will remember Carlos Kelly, sprained ankle and all, limp onto the court to nail a jumper that he believed to be a do-or die shot.

Several units responded to the call made. The man was apprehended later at Belk Hall.

No charges were filed as of publication. Campus security escorted him off campus.

Stillpoint

By Bob Haywood, Campus Minister

Alex Bethune and Rufus Marx, UNCW students, are dead. Once more death confronts us, the living, and this time it is a little closer to home in its impact. When our peers die, it is harder to avoid thinking "what if it happens to me."

Both my faith and life experience have made me an advocate of including the idea of our dying and the intentional dealing with feelings emerging from our many and varied encounters with end times or turning points ("little" deaths) in our reflecting on how we want to live and what brings meaning to our days. Rather than finding intentional thinking about, reflecting upon and dealing with death a morbid experience, I find it useful and uplifting.

How good it is to be reminded of our mortality and the fragility of life. Perhaps such awareness can help us avoid two negative extremes; taking ourselves too seriously or not being reflective and intentional about life's values at all. When you stand near the boundary of life, however briefly, one gains the awareness of life as precious, of life as a gift.

How good it is to stand at death's border and find questions welling up into our consciousness: What really is important? Am I doing, am I being all I really want where I am right now?

How good it is to experience the intimacy that dealing with loss often generates. Grief has a way of breaking through our facades and games so that we deal with each other often in ways more genuine and authentic than usual. And how often do we allow ourselves to be open with our deeper feelings?

How good it is to reflect on all those whom we love and will one day lose, and consider what unfinished business we have with them, unfinished business that we keep putting off. What words need to be said or special times shared with people we love and care for. And why do we keep putting these special words and time off? Oh well, we have time! Wanna bet!

So it is that death, with all its tragedy, is also an incredible teacher about life. It is up to us, the living, to choose to find the opportunities for growth that beckon us into more fulfilling futures around any occasion of grief and loss.

Holtzman To Head Foundation

Stephanie Loftus
News Editor

Dr. Clark Holtzman, lecturer for the English department, was recently elected president of the Cape Fear Foundation. He is succeeding Charles Fort, who stepped down to pursue other projects.

The Cape Fear Foundation is a group of artists dedicated to the experimental in art. Located at 9 South Front Street in downtown Wilmington, the foundation hosts a variety of art shows.

In the past, these shows have included the Mail Art show (artwork mailed in from around the country), the Artifacts show (plastic art, visuals and music), and the Wednesday Night Group show (exhibitions from the life-drawing class).

According to Holtzman, the foundation tries to bring art to Wilmington that Wilmingtonians normally would not experience. Are they successful?

"We get a really good response on opening nights," he commented, "a very enthusiastic opening. However, we have a problem with our staff keeping the gallery open afterwards."

Goals for the foundation this spring include an Exposition of Black Artists and a free film series of foreign and experimental films.

Students interested in volunteer staff positions at the gallery may contact Holtzman at 763-6340 or through the English department or Dennis Wolsak at Modular Graphics.

Career Planning Vital

Counseling and Testing Center
Why are you in college? To be able to get a job with a good salary? To get a job with security so you won't have to worry about being laid off? To get a job with respect? Do you want to be a leader? Do you want to be able to help other people? All these questions are directly related to being able to get a job, but the question is...what job? What do you want to do with the rest of your life?

As many as 95 percent of incoming freshmen have never sat down and thought about what's important to them. They hear about friends getting jobs in a particular field or they see advertisements in the paper. Sometimes they listen to the advice of friends or relatives. How do you go about deciding what to do with your life?

The Counseling and Testing Center has a program for Career Development that can help you in making these decisions. The staff of the Center is trained in helping you learn more about your interests and what you need to be happy in your career. On March 6th at 2:00 p.m. in room 206 of the Union, the Center will offer a workshop on Career Decision Making. This is a good way to begin to find answers because you have ideas from several people in the group to help you make decisions.

Another way the Counseling and Testing Center can be helpful to you in making these decisions is through a computer-based system called SIGI. It is a individualized career program. It helps you make decisions while providing up-to-date occupational information. Easy to use, it uses a text printed on a television screen and you answer the questions on a keyboard. You can receive a printout of information at the touch of a button.

SIGI takes you through a step-by-step process that examines what are the most important values for you in the work world, what occupations fit your values, what activities of a person in those occupations, salaries, educational requirements, and many other questions. The end product of using SIGI is to give you more information about yourself and what careers will match your preferences.

What to do with the rest of your life? Help is available through the Counseling and Testing Office. The rest of your life is a long, long time. Please begin early to get the help you need. Call extension 2280 and get started with your individual career planning process.

EYE ON THE WORLD

Pete Mullins

North Carolina: Have you seen the Jesse Helms commercial asking Jim Hunt whether he would endorse either Walter Mondale or Jesse Jackson as the Democratic nominee for the presidency? Helms says he wouldn't. "Where do you stand, Jim?"

Does this commercial make any sense? When, under any circumstances, would Helms, a Republican, endorse a Democrat-Mondale or Jackson-for the presidency? When would Hunt, a Democrat, not endorse the Democrat's nominee? The obvious answer is never.

So why would Helms make the commercial? Should it have said, "Jim Hunt would you endorse a black as the Democrat's nominee?" What a clumsy and deplorable attempt by Senator Helms to make Mr. Jackson's race an issue in the North Carolina Senate election! And beyond that, doesn't the very fact that Jesse Helms could ask the question say something about him as a person?

It seems old prejudices are hard to lose.

Moscow: Where is Yuri Andropov? The Russian leader has not been seen in public since last August. Well, in an attempt to locate Mr. Andropov I'm starting the first and hopefully annual, 'Where is Yuri Andropov?' contest.

The rules of the contest are very simple: first, locate Mr. Andropov, but in no way let him know that he has been found. This is because since the Russian leader has been missing things have been relatively quiet between the U.S. and the U.S.S.R.; second, don't let anyone else know where Andropov is, not even me. Again, if we keep him, wherever he is, things may remain quiet.

HINT: Andropov was seen last Saturday night in Crazy Zack's parking lot screaming, "Why did they close?"

Lebanon: There was a song in the early 1940's that contained the words "I'll be home for Christmas." It was written in the hopes that the Americans fighting in World War II would be through fighting and home for Christmas with their families. Now if that same song was written today the words more than likely would be, "I'll be home for election time." It would be written by Ronald Reagan in the hopes that he finds a way out of Lebanon by the November election.

Reagan and his aides have finally come to the obvious conclusion that the U.S. presence, in its current role of peacekeeper in Lebanon, is a no-win situation. After all, the axiom, 'the best defense is a good offense' also applies to the military, and since under the role of peacekeeper our offensive activities are non-existent, therefore our defense is severely hindered.

Can Reagan in an election year, allow the Marines to stay in a situation where the death toll can only rise and where at best the gains of our involvement will be modest? Not likely, but what is likely is that in the next few months Reagan will find some way out.

In the 1940's the Marines stayed several Christmases, but in this case Reagan's political livelihood necessitates that they'll be home for election time.

Psychology Enriched

Dr. Michael Perone takes time out from research project.

Sharon Bounds
Staff Writer

Dr. Michael Perone of the psychology department, has recently received a $20,783.00 grant. This enabled the psychology department to purchase more advanced equipment in which to conduct research.

This is a tremendously exciting field to all students taking those numerous psychology courses whether for a major or merely interest. The UNCW psychology department goes much further than just the classroom.

Behind locked doors lies a surprisingly advanced laboratory. About current research Dr. Perone comments, "Psychologists have conducted many studies on the effects of pleasant stimuli on behavior. For example, we know that food or electrical stimulation of certain brain regions can serve as a reward for animals. Such stimuli can be used to reinforce behavior.

A related question concerns the effects of unpleasant or stressful stimuli. Most psychologists believe that the removal or reduction of unpleasant stimuli should serve as a reinforcer. However, relatively few studies have been conducted.

Some of our research is addressing this issue. The experiments are being conducted by a team including Dr. Mark Galizio, and students Barbra Spencer, Richard Loren, Steve Morgart, and Frank Stanley.

The procedure is complex and requires specialized apparatus that has been purchased through a National Science Foundation grant."

Barbra Spencer, who is completing her Honors Thesis this year, replies, "It is a real privilege that UNCW offers this kind of program to undergraduate students."

The Honor Thesis, which is offered to advanced students, is an excellent preparation for graduate school. The theses are aimed for publication.

Richard Loren, who is also involved in the program puts in an average of six hours a week for lab experiments. It is easy to see the opportunity that this very important grant has come to serve.

Barbra Spencer co-authored a paper to be presented at N.C. "Search for the Sources" at the N.C. Alcohol Meeting. The paper is entitled, "The Effects of Alcohol and Naltrexone on Free Operant Avoidance Behavior in Rats."

Record Review

Yes has always held a special power over their fans: and aura of spiritualism derived primarily from the choir-boy harmony of Jon Anderson and bassist Chris Squire. I recall seeing a majestic Yesshow with a giant crab as a prop behind Alan White's drumkit. The coliseum erupted when it started grabbing about, but actually it was completely unnecessary. The musical abilities and stage presence of Yes had blown everybody's mind a couple of hours ago. People were just stammering around, completely drained by the end of the show. They were in the city of Angels looking for the One!

After 5 years or so the band has regrouped minus guitarist Steve Howe of Asia, yet keeping the integral Anderson-Squire axis intact and adding original key-boardist Tony Kaye. Sloughing off the lengthy instrumental soloing of a Howe, or sat Wakeman, Yes has crafted a bunch of powerful instrumental-pop that outdoes the initial intent of poor Asia.

'It Can Happen' best illustrates the new song consciousness with a wonderful sitar riff thrown in for those of us still into "bringing our souls alive." 'Changes' opens into a surprising Police bass run and then takes off into space with some great keyboard playing and sublime vocalizations.

Most of the melodies on 90125 have been around for awhile as Squire had been trying to find a band to play them (XYZ or the ill-fated Cinema) but the real impact of these tunes lay in the arrangements. By paring down the length of the songs, the obvious musical strengths of the band come burning to the front. Without a doubt one of the very best LPs ever associated with Yes and certainly the widest appeal.

"Our Song it gives us a reason," Anderson cries with the kind impact that Genesis would have killed for on their last LP.

'Hearts' begins as a child-like nursery rhyme that teaches "one heart for love, one's for giving, two hearts are better than one..."

By the end of 90125 it's time for 'liftoff' as our eyes become the stars in the sky.

Lady Hawks On Hot Streak

George Walker
Sports Editor

The game became a battle between David and Goliath, only this time Goliath won. After tremendous wins over E.C.U. and Davidson, the lady Seahawk basketball team raised its record to 12-2.

In the Davidson game at Trask Coliseum, the Wildcats never had a chance. During pregame warmups, a bystander could easily see the great physical differences in height and power. With eight minutes left in the first half a Jenny Owens follow shot raised the score to 40-8. The final score of 105-29 was awesome but not unexpected, UNCW won the first meeting 138-44!

Wednesday night's game at E.C.U. was less colorful but much more important and appreciated. "This win is the biggest boost for our program in a long time," said Coach Marilyn Christoff, though no one could remember a bigger one.

The 61-60 win was preserved by three missed E.C.U. shots in the last fifteen seconds. Gwen Austin (17 points), Jill Amos (16 points), Jenny Owens (12 points), Sheila Patterson (11 points), and Sonya Pickard (5 points), scored all of UNCW's points. This statistic shows the balanced, unselfish personality of the team. The Seahawks strength is in its numbers, with all team members possessing good ball-handling and shooting skills.

The win over E.C.U. is UNCW's first over a national name, being that E.C.U. advanced to the final eight of the NCAA's in 1982. More should be on the way.

The next ten days will be busy. Two home Monday night games against Campbell and Belmont Abbey are sandwiched around the Foxy Lady Tournament in Florence, S.C.

Emerging Star Denise Hamilton

George Walker
Sports Editor

Denise Hamilton looked frustrated. For almost two hours she attempted dive after dive in the UNCW natatorium, each time seeking that almost euphoric second when error would be absent from her life.

Waiting for her at pool side after each dive is coach Marc Ellington, the eternal optimist, who claps, smiles and scientifically points out mistakes in the given routine.

"Marc is fun to work with. He has a good attitude. Keeping me mentally fresh and pushing me are his strong points. When he is not around, practice does not go as well," said Hamilton.

A unique bond is found between divers and their coaches, it and gymnastics being one of the few sports where opinionated viewers define your success. Consequently, a diver must have complete trust in the validity of the coach's advice and the knowledge he possesses.

The scoring in diving is done by a cast of judges, who have a ten point scale with which to work. A certain degree of difficulty and the technical mistakes combine to form the score. The ten point scale is like a carrot on the end of a stick, it always leaves the diver frustrated and unsatisfied and also leaves the athlete hopeful for improvement. This system lifts the level of performance. When done right, diving is raised to an art level.

"Good divers are born with the grace. They have a certain body awareness that allows them to make acrobatic movements in the air and then somehow enter straight into the water," said Ellington, his voice raised slightly to insure that the interviewer realized that this was the most important aspect mentioned.

Hamilton's achievements thus far are impressive. When you consider that perhaps three minutes of actual in-flight competition make up a season, then it is undeniable that she has been remarkably consistent. The Dryden, N.Y. Junior qualified last year for the NCAA Division I qualifying meet, and won numerous dual meets during the season. She has not let up this season, breaking a school record by twenty points and setting high goals.

"Hopefully, I can win the Seahawk Invitational and earn All-American status at

Courtesy Sports Information

UNCW will attempt to break its three-game losing streak this Wednesday when the Seahawks travel to East Carolina University for a 7:30 p.m. encounter.

The Seahawks, now 6-9 on the season, lost a heart-breaker Saturday night, 44-43, to one of the nation's top independent teams, Stetson University. UNCW led by as many as 10 points early in the second half, but the experience Hatters upped their record to 13-4

the National Meet in Arkadelphia, Arkansas."

Which is quite a load for a 5'6" 118 pounder to carry. From the many heads that turn when she walks down hallways, the beautiful blond diver with a model-like figure makes quite a scene away from the pool too. It seems that, in the care of divers Hamilton, Pam Bell, Richard Bell, Ed Burton, and Coach Ellington, UNCW diving is in capable hands.

Seahawks Lose Hat Trick

when forward Glynn Myrick scored with two seconds remaining.

"It was really a tough loss for the team because we gave such a tremendous effort," Seahawk coach Mel Gibson said afterward.

UNCW forward Terry Shiver enjoyed an outstanding week, leading the team in scoring in the past three games. The 6-4 junior scored 15 points during a 62-58 loss to Campbell, 13 points in an 81-53 loss to N.C. State, and 14 points in the Stetson game.

"Surprisingly, we've made good progress this week," Gibson said. "When you have eight freshmen on the team, many of these situations are the first time they've ever encountered them. We had one of the biggest upsets in several years on our hands against Stetson, but our inexperience showed at the most critical time."

UNCW lost to N.C. State 81-53 Wednesday night in Raleigh. Lorenzo Charles scored 31 points to pace the Wolfpack.

Swimmers Victorious

George Walker
Sports Editor

Getting strong support from the sprinters and distance swimmers, the UNCW men's swim team dominated William & Mary 65-48 Saturday afternoon in Williamsburg, Va.

Jeff Siggins, always dependable, won the 1000, backstroke, and swam on the winning relay with Steve Bumgarner, Paul Thompson and Glenn Peterson. Mike Bitzenhofer and Colin Kueny completed the trio of individual winners with victories in the Butterfly and the Breast Stroke. Other Seahawks contributing points were Tim Flaherty (1000 and 5000), Art Hall (winning relay, backstroke), Steve Bumgarner (100, 50 freestyle), Glenn Peterson (200, freestyle, butterfly), Paul Thompson (relay), Chris Moore (50 freestyle, winning relay), Robert Sealy (200, 500 freestyle), and Richard Bell (dives).

The team swam under the direction of diving coach Marc Ellington. Coach Dave Allen was in New York due to a death in the family. The men's and women's teams swim at Furman Saturday.

The charred remains of the Chi Phi fraternity house on Wrightsville Avenue await insurance monies to decide its future.

Fire Chars Chi Phi Fraternity House

Donna Holden
Managing Editor

A fire raged through the second floor of the Chi Phi fraternity house on Wrightsville Avenue shortly after midnight Saturday, January 28, causing an estimated $60,000 worth of damage to the residence of nine members.

The electrical fire started in an upstairs bedroom, and after unsuccessful attempts to extinguish the flames, Steve Bowen, Mike O'Madigan, and Frank Rosa who were in the house, fled.

Winter Park and Seagate Volunteer Fire Departments responded to the call made by one of the three members. Three trucks responded, and although the fire was already coming through the roof when volunteers arrived, it was put under control very quickly.

A Wrightsville Beach fireman, Chris Nelson, who was on the scene, said, "The house was gutted throughout. The right side downstairs had no fire damage, but suffered severe smoke and water damage."

University administration is doing as much as possible for the residents. Charlie King, Director of Auxiliary Services said, "We are letting the nine boys eat their meals free in the cafeteria through Saturday. We've offered them housing in the residence halls, and we're allowing them to charge their books in the bookstore on credit until the insurance is settled. We're trying to help make it easier for them."

Fall Break Shortened

Donna Holden
Managing Editor

Students will see fall break shortened next year to three days due to action taken by the Chancellor's Calendar Committee last May.

The Committee revised the 1984 fall schedule, subtracting two days from the previously week-long break. There is the chance that this change may cause class attendance problems when out-of-state students make plans to go home and students travel south for the break.

This month the Committee members, chaired by Mr. Thomas McCall of the English department, will be voting on a proposed recommendation to keep a week-long fall break in 1985 and add one "dead day" between the last day of class and the first day of exams. This is primarily a "breather" for students and a chance to prepare for exams.

However, in the final passing of this resolution, the proposal may be refused, and fall break eliminated altogether. This idea is being considered to help organize the records processing procedure.

Eric Squires, SGA president, said, "The Committee was opposed to shortening fall break [for next fall], as is the SGA, but word has it that it's too late to do anything about it now."

Godfrey Resigns Unprocessed Papers Found

La Vera Parker Jeffreys
Editor

Michael Godfrey resigned as treasurer of the SGA Friday morning, January 27.

Godfrey's resignation came without prior notice. His resignation has resulted in the discovery of a file containing paperwork, some of which had not been processed. Some of these papers date back to the beginning of the fall semester.

The unprocessed papers could result in clubs and organizations coming to a temporary standstill financially.

It is also possible that legal actions could be taken against any chartered club or organization that has unfinished paperwork.

Eric Squires, president of the SGA, acknowledged that Godfrey had resigned.

He further stated that all paperwork would be completed shortly and that there is no threat to any club or organization.

The Deputy Treasurer is now in the process of going through the back-log of work.

Susan Goodrum had no comment except to say that Godfrey's resignation is official.

Michael Godfrey could not be reached for comment Friday or Tuesday.

Letters to the Editor

Editor of The Seahawk:

I would like to bring to your attention the fact that there is an organization on this campus called RLA [Residence Life Association]. This may be old news to a few of you, [and I would like to stress the word FEW] but to a majority it is new. Or at least it seems that way. The purpose of RLA is to coordinate activities that will provide entertainment and learning for those living in on campus housing. But out of the 1400 or so students that this statement represents only a handful are actively participating in RLA. Complaints are constantly voiced about the lack of activities on campus but few are willing to spend the few minutes that could possibly bring about progress. At this point, we are going to leave it up to you, the residents of UNC-W. We are not giving up, but it is a constant struggle. Your input and cooperation are essential if we are to see a marked change in the social atmosphere here at UNC-W.

Meetings are normally scheduled Tuesday nights at 8pm in Galloway Hall lobby.

RLA President

Fraternity Holds State Convention

On February 3-5 the brothers of Alpha Phi Alpha, the Omicron Theta chapter, and the Gamma Kappa Lambda chapter will host the annual convention of all North Carolina chapters. Attending the convention will be brothers from North Carolina State, East Carolina, UNC-Chapel Hill, and others. According to Daryl McNair, the assistant state director of the fraternity in the east, "over 250 brothers will attend the conference along with their families."

The national fraternity, Alpha Phi Alpha, was started in 1906 at Cornell University in Ithica, New York by seven men known as the 'jewels.'

It was the first black fraternity chartered and was the first international Greek letter fraternity of any kind. Today Alpha Phi Alpha has chapters in Korea, Africa, Germany, and many other countries.

"Manly deed, scholarship, and love for all mankind" is the motto of the fraternity, and the local chapter exemplifies this spirit in their community work. Some community service projects include: wood cutting for poor people, a voter registration booth at their Labor Day Jamboree, and a sickle cell anemia fund raiser.

The Convention will span three days with events ranging from a basketball tournament to a stepping contest to a Miss Black and Gold pageant. In addition to the events, awards are given out for exceptional merit. Omicron Theta hopes Avery Tuten will be an academic award winner.

All business sessions and workshops will be conducted at the Hilton Inn, with the majority of social activities taking place around the town, including activities planned for the families of members.

Editorials

Folks have been complaining because The Seahawk doesn't print what everyone wants to read. Sure, it's nice to see your name in print for things your organization has done by way of announcements. Want to be sure to see it? Write a news article and you'll get a byline.

The Seahawk gives top priority to news, features, and sports which means that organizations must, unfortunately, take a back seat.

Although our funding is through the SGA, the revenue from ads in each issue helps make printing possible. We are not budgeted for the total printing and supplies costs, therefore, ads make up the difference. Thus, copy space is limited even more per page.

The staff appreciates the efforts organizations are making to announce their activities, and we encourage you to continue. But please keep in mind that we only have eight pages.

Donna Holden
Managing Editor

As elections near, I would like to encourage students to vote. Voting is the only way your voice can be heard and changes be made.

Candidates should be evaluated for past performance: involvement in student issues and concerns, ideas about what changes need to be made, relations with students are all indications of how responsible a candidate might be.

The school year of 1983-84 has been a year for great accomplishments for the students. Changes have been made, promises have been kept but most of all the voice of the students has been heard.

Stillpoint

By Bob Haywood, Campus Minister

I met a Saint not too long ago. Her name is Mary Curan and she would kill me if she knew I was writing like this about her. Mary works at the Community of Hope, a ministry in the slums of Washington, D.C., whose focus is on a two-block area that houses over 700 people. She doesn't just work there, she lives there in one of the apartments which she helped renovate on Belmont Street. Mary sat with me and some others in her shabby office talking quietly about the people with whom she lives and with whom she has come to love. She's a minister and a social worker and now, the adoptive mother of two of Belmont Street's children. One is the daughter of a prostitute, and another a victim of child abuse. Now they are her children, and she loves them and the people in the neighborhood she talks of as "hers". Located only one block from the heaviest drug traffic district in Washington, she works to bring hope to people who have little or none. Mary's income is only slightly above that of the people on her street, and she has some concern about even that little difference. When food stamps run out for her neighbors, she shares what little she and her children have.

We asked her how she keeps going, and she told us about her life of prayer, spiritual inspiration, and the community's support of the staff at the Community of Hope. A rather plain-looking woman, she spoke, in an unassuming manner, of person after person to whom she reached out to help look for a job find adequate medical care, or just listen and care.

It was the fact that she did not commute to work and go back to her safe, secure and abundant lifestyle, but chose to live with the people of her community that really struck me. Her daily acts of love were small and specific and constant. She could get a job anywhere she chose to be in the midst of people who had become neighbors, to live with the same limitations that they faced. She knew she was different, that she could leave. She talked about how her friends were trapped by their environment. Yet she chose to be there, and to be and do whatever she could. Mary makes loving in a difficult and self-denying context seem very simple, very easy. She doesn't talk about self-denial. She talks about all that she gets from living and working with "her" people.

I met a Saint not too long ago. It's nice to know they still exist.

Hall Society Sponsors Film

Courtesy UNCW News Bureau

The B. Frank Hall Philosophy and Religion Society at UNCW will sponsor a full-length feature film, "The Gospel According to St. Matthew," at 8 p.m., Wednesday, Feb. 8 at King Hall Auditorium on the UNCW campus.

The film is directed by Paolo Pasolini. Dr. Thomas Schmid, assistant professor of philosophy and religion and advisor to the society, commented that the film is of "great religious significance."

Often acclaimed as the finest, most realistic and fulfilling cinematic treatment of the story of Christ, "The Gospel According to St. Matthew" was made as a tribute to Pope John XX-III. The 1964 film uses non-professional actors set against the stark backdrop of poor southern Italian villages and stark landscapes.

Jesus is portrayed as a gentle young man who is at the same time unglamorous and charismatic, yet passionately angry on behalf of the afflicted people around him.

A $1 admission fee will be charged to defray the costs of the film. The university community and the public are invited to attend.

Mr. Charles Fort of UNCW's English Department has recently written five poems that will be published in the spring issue of "Capitol Eye International Poetry Review". This is approximately his fifty-fifth publication.

Fort has also completed his first book of poetry entitled, "The Town Clock Burning". The book includes poems expressing his personal life written in the last 15 years and will be released in the fall.

The five poems are entitled: "A Prayer for Women," "Articles of the

EYE ON THE WORLD

Pete Mullins

The World: Uncle Ron's trying to get the Russians back to the reduction talks in Geneva. Big deal, even if they do come back nothing will be accomplished until both sides stop playing games and get down to serious negotiations.

An idea from an assistant professor in the Political Science department, though greatly amended, might help. The idea is to get the negotiations out of Geneva, where they are surrounded by fine foods, air conditioning (or heat), and leather chairs with 10 inches of padding and put them somewhere, preferably very warm or very cold.

How about sticking the negotiations in an old shack in Mexico during the summer? We could give them hard wood chairs and no air conditioning, but there would be plenty of water. Sorry senor we don't have Kaopectate.

Tell them they can't come home until there is a settlement reached. Then we'll see how long it will take to get serious about the reductions.

The World: We have a winner in the "Where Is Yuri Andropov?" contest. Because they followed the rules the contest we don't know exactly who won; but since Mr. Andropov has still not been seen in public, it is safe to say we all win.

To the gentleman who wrote in saying Andropov was in the audience at President Reagan's State of the Union Address: First of all you didn't follow the rules of the contest. You told where you thought Andropov was, and secondly you were wrong, the man in the glasses with dark hair was David Stockman, the director of the Office of Management and Budget, although he too has not been seen in public very often since he opened his mouth once ten often.

UNC-Wilmington: The Political Science Club is having a round table discussion on nuclear war in February. Now you're probably thinking to yourselves "what good are 25 people at UNCW, 15 of whom know nothing about nuclear war, 5 of whom know very little, and 5 of whom know a little more (guess which group the Professors are in), sitting around discussing nuclear war?" Well the answer is that nothing earth shattering (no pun intended) will come from the discussion but what quite possibly will come is a little knowledge.

How many people, if asked what they thought of nuclear war, would reply something like this: "Nuclear war, oh yeah I heard about that. It's bad, yeah, real bad, um, yeah, bad. Um, if it happened I guess I wouldn't be able to watch the A-Team on Tuesday nights, right. So I guess it's the worst."

Well if you want to be able to answer a question about your opinion on nuclear war intelligently, and more importantly, if you want some knowledge of nuclear war, so you can make an intelligent choice at election time, get off your butts and come to the discussion.

Who knows? You might learn something. And it's free.

Sea-Dog," "Silk Knives," "Mailor and Jack," and "Anchor-City (A Trip Tych poem)."

Along with his writing and teaching, Fort is advisor to UNCW's literary magazine Atlantis. He also founded "Wilmington's Writing Forum" which meets on the second Monday of every month in room 214, Morton Hall.

Fort is in his second year of teaching at UNCW. He is pleased with the English department's improvements. These improvements consist of a reconstruction of the English curriculum, specifically freshman composition and developmental courses, and the expansion of a number of English courses.

Fort's book will be available in the UNCW library next year. He is currently working on his second book of poetry

Amos Surpasses

George Walker
Sports Editor

Jill Amos has earned a rest. If she can only wait just two more months. . .

Of immediate concern to the 5'8" senior guard is contributing to a Seahawk basketball team which, off to a 14-2 start, is the university's most successful.

"Everyone has a role on this team. We must play together to win," said Amos, alluding to the team's four double-digit scorers. "Having teammates like Gwen Austin and Sheila Patterson makes it easier to do what I do best."

What Amos does best is shoot the jumper. Playing on the wing and the baseline, the agile, thick-shouldered Health major relies on a quick release and an instinctive shooting sense of unknown origin to pile up points.

"Shooting is a skill I have always had. It is not a learned behavior that I picked up somewhere," said Amos, who has a reputation as the "Fred Brown" of the NAIA.

Since fourth grade, when Amos began organized basketball and frequented playgrounds a primal, animalistic intensity has followed her.

"She comes to play. Whether it's a big game or practice you can always count on 100 percent effort from her," said Head Coach Marilyn Christoff, who is in her 5th year at UNCW.

On defense, Amos springs and bounces constantly, waiting to pounce on an errant pass. On offense, she confidently takes risks, intent on finding an open teammate or somehow find a free lane to the basket. Collisions are common.

Success is an expected phenomenon to Amos, who is No. 1 seed on the tennis team, a graduate applicant at U.S.C. and Appalachian St., and a pretty good guitar player. Her credentials don't stop here.

"I made all-state at Davie County High School and played in the East-West All-Star game," said Amos, who, despite this potential for arrogance, repeatedly praises her teammates and would only consent to this interview in private.

Viewing Amos in a see-saw game in Trask Coliseum, these type confrontations meaning the most to her, one is apt to wonder what substitute she will eventually find for her love of the game. Her ever-present wolfish grin and gleaming eyes alert everyone to the emphasis she has placed on sport.

And the complementing teammates and escalating stat sheets have proved her worthiness as a person and a player.

The Seahawks basketball team, losing for the fourth consecutive time, dropped a heartbreaker 44-43 to E.C.U. in Greenville last Wednesday night.

UNCW, now 6-10, must be getting used to disappointments, having dropped last-second games to Stetson and Campbell in the week prior to the loss to the Pirates.

"Turnovers hurt us badly," said Coach Mel Gibson, referring to the 17-5 lead UNCW held in this category.

Down by as many as eight points in the second half, UNCW battled to lead with :58 seconds remaining. But two turnovers and a subsequent foul doomed the Seahawks, who played at Akron last night.

George Durham, a freshman, and Carlos Kelly chipped in with 16 and 13 points to lead UNCW. Durham missed only one shot.

George Walker
Sports Editor

A riddle.

What's green and gold, runs like the wind, has an immovable tree, and is seen by few?

The women's basketball team, the university's best, remains in obscurity while playing some of the fastest basketball this side of Las Vegas.

The Seahawks, now 15-2, won three times last week culminating in a hard-fought 68-61 win over Belmont Abbey.

6'2" Gwen Austin, alias "Tree", topped the 20 point mark in wins over NC Central and Campbell in earlier games this week, but saved her best play for the Belmont Abbey game.

"Gwen had a good inside game (22 points, 12 rebounds). We were a little flat, everyone is pointing for us," said assistant coach Drema Greer, who is in her first year at UNCW. Head coach Marilyn Christoph was more to the point. "Gwen kept us in the game. It was not one of our better games but we will take it. Abbey always plays us strong."

If Austin kept UNCW in the game, then Sheila Patterson and Sonya Pickard won it. Scoring 11 second-half points, the lightning-quick senior forward scored on numerous fast-break layups. Pickard, a junior with a great deal of court sense, tallied 14 points.

Jenny Owens, a junior forward with little foot speed, used sure hands and hustle to snare seven rebounds and added eight points. Jill Amos scored eight points.

The Seahawks, who played Wesleyan last night, are fighting for recognition while playing in front of sparse crowds. Greer comments.

"We play a good brand of ball. People would be surprised that we have girls who can touch the rim."

The next home game is February 6 against Atlantic Christian. A revenge match is set against Pembroke on February 20. Pembroke defeated UNCW earlier this season.

Intramural Standings

Swimmers

George Walker

The Seahawk swim team dropped a close meet to Furman Saturday in Greenville, South Carolina.

The final scores of 59-54 (men) and 62-41 (women) do not reflect the numerous split-second losses to the Paladins, who are one of the pre-meet favorites at the Seahawk Invitational. Any combination of turn-arounds could have won the meet.

In the women's meet, Denise Hamilton continued her dominance in the dives, winning both the 1 and 3 meter events. Evelyn Johnson and Lani Driscoll, both freshmen, came through with victories.

Colin Kueny paced the men, winning his third straight breaststroke. Steve Bumgarner, Jeff Siggins, and the relay team of Paul Thompson, Glenn Peterson, Keith Johnston, and Robert Sealey completed the first place finishes for the Seahawks.

The Seahawks compete against Richmond at 2 pm Friday and travel to Old Dominion Saturday.

UNCW Radio Set for Cable Broadcast

Stephanie Loftus
News Editor

Is a UNCW radio station really possible? Yes, due to cable television.

Since the Federal Communications Commission has outlawed low-power FM stations and a higher-power station may cause signal interference with TV6's signal, the possibilities of broadcasting on the university cable system were to be discussed at a meeting of the radio club on Tuesday, January 31.

"If we broadcast on cable," SGA president Eric Squires explained, "then there would be no interference since we would not be actually on the air."

To receive the UNCW station, students would have to purchase an FM cable hookup from the local cable operator. "It would cost about $1.50," Squires said.

Although the FCC may issue new regulations dealing with low-power stations and signal interference, the National Association of Broadcasters (NAB) recently warned the FCC about dealing with stations in anticipation of the new regulations.

For UNCW radio, it seems cable is the only way to go.

Although this will mean an increase in taxes, the outcome will be profitable for the state. The improved education of students will boost the economy in the long run.

Hunt is all in favor of campus growth, with mention of Randall Library as a prime example. He hopes to ignite student enthusiasm and support for expansion.

It happened in an instant.
The televisions went blank,
the radios-silent.
Plans were forgotten.
Arguments no longer mattered.
The cities were gone,
the future abandoned.
And the only thing
they have left to hold onto,

TESTAMENT

PARAMOUNT PICTURES PRESENTS AN ENTERTAINMENT EVENTS
PRODUCTION IN ASSOCIATION WITH AMERICAN PLAYHOUSE
A LYNN LITTMAN FILM JANE ALEXANDER WILLIAM DEVANE

Like the heavily publicized TV movie The Day After, Testament dares to explore the unthinkable—the aftermath of a domestic nuclear catastrophe. But because it confines its scope to a small California town on the periphery of the explosion, Lynn Littman's film (starring Jane Alexander, John Cazale, and Ross Harris) may have the greatest emotional impact of the two. Without expert, special effects, it conveys a subtle and quietly mounting sense of irreverent horror.

This extraordinary tale is unforgettably moving rather than simply unbearable. Due to the program, human love has been running through the streets of Los Angeles. Young's screenplay based on a story by Carol Amant. As a girl, Jane Alexander gives a beautiful performance that may have the greatest emotional impact of the two. Without expert, special effects, it conveys a subtle and quietly mounting sense of irreverent horror.

What sexual intimacy feels like to her teenage daughter, or dealing with her little boy's illness, Alexander brings just the right measure of emotion to this remarkable tale. William Devane, veteran actor Leon Ames, and three fine child actors—Ross Harris, Rutana Zia, and John Cazale—all lend excellent support. Testament is an excellent film for these times, and one you won't easily shake off.

Godfrey Must Repay Scholarship

Mona Franklin
Features Editor
La Vera Parker Jeffreys
Editor

Michael Godfrey, SGA Treasurer who resigned suddenly Jan. 27 amidst allegations of misconduct, has said that he will not repay his scholarship.

Godfrey was granted the scholarship for the fulfillment of the duties of Treasurer from January through April 1984. (Godfrey had previously served from May until December 1983 and received a scholarship for that term.)

The senate, in a decision by roll call vote, requested that Godfrey return the spring semester scholarship since he would not be completing his term of office. If Godfrey does not return the scholarship by Feb. 28, Eric Squires was encharged to take formal actions.

As a result of his resignation, the SGA has been confronted with papers that were not signed by the Treasurer. Books for many of the 50 clubs and organizations were not balanced for the entire fall semester, nor were updates made in Dec. or Jan. Godfrey also failed to give any written reports to the senate during the fall semester and during the beginning of spring semester prior to his resignation.

Godfrey has remained unavailable for comment.

Radio May Broadcast On Cable

Stephanie Loftus
News Editor

The UNCW Radio Club, formed to establish a radio station on campus, met for the first time this semester on Tuesday, Jan. 31.

During this meeting Eric Squires, president of the SGA, presented various methods of broadcasting as well as their limitations and advantages to the 22 students who attended.

Due to FCC regulations, and WECT's claim that UNCW radio would interfere with TV6's signal, broadcasting on the air is not possible at this time. Although interference has not been proven, it is common practice for a channel 6 station to file against any type of public service station because the bands are so close. UNCW would have to go to court to prove disturbance.

"Even though we probably would not interfere," Squires commented, "we don't have $1,500 to go to court."

An alternative to airwaves is carrier current, broadcasting through electrical lines. To receive this sort of transmission, students would simply plug their stereos into a wall socket. However, carrier current does not cross transformers without special equipment. To get to the residence halls it would have to cross approximately four, at $400 each.

The most feasible means of putting UNCW "on the air" is cable TV. Currently many radio stations are broadcasting on cable as well as through the air. Through cable, the UNCW station could reach most of New Hanover County.

To receive the UNCW station, students would rent a cable hookup, the same type used to receive MTV in stereo, for about $1.50 a month. There is cable laid in all the residence halls except Galloway. For students in Galloway to get the station, a combination of cable TV and carrier current is under discussion.

"UNCW is not the suitcase college it once was," explained Squires. "It is an institution and needs this media to show the public what it is like."

The radio station was planned to be operational by last semester, however the WECT confusion temporarily halted progress. "If we don't act now," Squires continued, "we can't be sure that there will ever be a radio station at UNCW."

The Radio Club meets Tuesdays at 4:30 in Room 206 of the Student Union. All students are urged to attend.

Letters to the Editor

Editor:

On January 30, I quite by mistake discovered that I share a post-office box in the Union. It angered me. I found out accidentally. I was not informed. I entrust my mail, my personal, private property to postal workers alone. I've never shared a box at home with life-time neighbors and certainly don't intend to begin such a practice with a stranger.

Married couples have been denied the right to conveniently share. It's stupid.

Can I be assured of receiving ALL general mail? (Junk addressed to my number)

I was informed that there are over two hundred in my situation, but I don't consider myself unreasonable in complaining, even if they choose not to. Perhaps they too do not know.

What does the University do with the tens of thousands saved in postage? I suggest the bundle be spent on additional boxes. If funds are not available, and a private box cannot be secured for each student, then we should not be forced to hold a box at all. My privacy invaded, my rights have been invaded. I question legality. To me, it's wrong.

Matt Doyle

Editor:

If you're like me, most mornings you drive around campus wondering if you'll be lucky enough to find a parking place. Sometimes, after I circle a parking lot four or five times, I find one. But usually I end up driving all the way across campus, and after a long hike back, end up being late for class.

I would not mind the hike, but I pay $40, and I feel entitled to a parking place that is not half a mile from destination. I am not alone in my feelings. Everyone complains about parking every day.

I have a proposal that may help eliminate congested parking areas. Despite the crowding elsewhere, the parking area beside the tennis courts is seldom used. In this lot are 357 spaces for student parking. In addition to the current $40 sticker, I suggest a lower priced decal ($20) which would be valid for this lot alone.

By pricing this lot at a lower rate, several parking problems would be eliminated: (1) Students who cannot afford $40 would have lower priced parking available. (2) The students who use that lot would free up to 357 spaces in the other lots for the rest of students.

If this plan were to become effective, we could save ourselves frustration, money--and perhaps--a parking place.

Stillpoint

By Bob Haywood, Campus Minister

How often it is that I make and hear comments about Time. "I don't have enough time to get everything done." "There's nothing to do around here. I have too much time and I'm bored." "Time really flies, doesn't it!" Whether time is too short to cram everything into or too long and needs filling up or too brief and feels like it's slipped away, time still exerts an incredible control on our lives. Our life's energy is poured out to the measured cadence of a clock. Space, science, and microelectronic engineering have taught us the benefits derived from dividing time into ever smaller units. Where once our life was lived according to the cycle of the seasons, now significant events are cataloged in seconds and in milliseconds. We live in a society that has lifted up besides the value of searching for truth, the value of transmitting truth and its attendant information faster and faster and faster.

I want to raise questions about our elevation of time from its role as a tool to its role as a master. Time as master leads to lives filled with stress and most of us know exactly what that feels like. The only way out of this situation that I know is to clearly and self-consciously choose another master to control the use of our days. You are the one who chooses all the elements and tasks with which to fill your day. You may think that you are a helpless victim of your responsibilities. You are not. If you have not chosen all the things you must do, you have acquiesced to expectations placed on you either out of guilt, a need to please or some other motive. To acquiesce is still your choice.

Your university years provide you more emotional space than you will probably ever experience agains until you reach retirement. All the pressures of a time-conscious, ticktock, society are here, to be sure. But so is openness for reflection and time for examination of values.

Look at your schedule, list your activities; what do they say about your values? Who is in charge of you? Your digital watch? Your calendar? Or could it possibly be some deeper, internal clear sense of who you are and what you need and want in each gifted day of your life?

In Memory

George Walker
Sports Editor

"He died in a car accident."

Two weeks ago, after a particularly tough day, I was rocked with this news over the telephone. The victim, my dad's best friend and an uncle figure to me, was dead at early middle-age, with many joyous, productive times now lost to him forever.

Over the years, the real concept of death had been sheltered from me. Two of my grandparents had died when I was in early grade school, and three not-so-close friends from high school had lost their lives, also in accidents. But this was altogether different. This was someone I had spent a lot of time with, who I greatly respected and imitated, someone that was good, someone that I loved. Out of this seclusion from death, myths had materialized in my thoughts. Fantasies of close ones dying would occasionally cloud my mind, and the cold, hard consequences of it would soon follow. In these thoughts, God would assume the brunt of the blame, with screams of hatred and vows of departure promised towards him for these deaths. Also visualized were days, weeks, months of mourning, most if not all in seclusion. This would be the price the living would pay for the dead. Death was bad. Death was punishment. Death was darkness.

Because of these past thoughts, my reaction to my friend's death came as a big surprise. After hanging up the phone, I sat on my bed, the words "He died in a car accident" ringing in my ears, loud and hard, as if I was trying to keep them out. When I began to sob, instead of hatred consuming me, positive feelings appeared.

What happened was simply that a realization that the long hard struggle for life's rewards, Heaven and Paradise, were now his. The work was over and he had lived the type of life I in 500 do. After this, it still wasn't easy to take, but the worst was over.

In the days that followed, visions of times spent with him engulfed me, whether in class, out running or walking to assorted destinations. They were good times, and the memories will always be with me. He lived a good life, and death will be a means, not an end for him. And for me, my attitude of death, now light instead of dark, is changed forever.

EYE ON THE WORLD

Pete Mullins

Washington: Two women are sitting drinking tea.

Woman 1: "Did you hear what Ronnie said about Fritz?"

Woman 2: "No, but I did hear what John said about him."

Woman 1: "Why can't those boys get along?"

Woman 2: "Oh I don't know. It's got something to do with a game, I think it's called 'King of the Mountain' or something like that."

Woman 1: "And those three aren't the only ones calling each other names. I heard Allan and Rubin and George and Gary all say bad things about Ronnie and they even said some bad things about their cousin Fritz too."

Woman 2: "I wouldn't be surprised if that Hollins boy and the new kid, Jesse, were involved also."

Woman 1: "I bet you're right."

Woman 2: "At least my boy Teddy isn't involved."

Woman 1: "Well I hope if the boys don't start to behave that their mothers will wash out their mouths with soap and put them to bed without their supper."

Woman 2: "That's what they deserve. To think they're behaving like children, and its only a game. Imagine if something important comes up."

Uncle Ronnie is going to run for the Presidency again. I was surprised, weren't you? After all, just because they formed a Reagan-Bush Committee, that didn't lead me to believe he would run.

Now that he has officially announced, let's take a look at the who the possible opponents for Reagan will be, from the bottom to the top.

Tied for the bottom of the list are Rubin Askew, Ernest Hollins, George McGovern, and Gary Hart. Why don't these men realize that if you're going to come out of the pack and be taken seriously, you have to be dynamic and make yourself visible. (I know it's a bad pun, but couldn't you say Rubin Ask Who? --sorry.)

Slightly above those gentlemen are Jesse Jackson and Allan Cranston. Now Cranston hasn't done anything dynamic, but he's been around so long in the Senate that he does have some credibility. As for Jackson, he is, if nothing else, somewhat dynamic. Although if you read in "the current" edition of the National Review an article by Eldridge Cleaver you may question his choice of where to be dynamic. But let's face facts, that although it is a giant step in the right direction to have a black as a viable candidate, Mr. Jackson does not have the broad base of support that is needed.

Then there are the two front runners, John Glenn and Walter (Fritz) Mondale. How close are these two? According to several polls, Mondale is gaining and Glenn is slipping. Listen to Mr. Glenn speak and you'll know why. Boring!!

So if it comes down to Uncle Ronnie or Fritz, who's going to be the next President of the United States? This election will not be won by Mondale, although Uncle Ron may lose. Confused? It's simple, Fritz can't win the election without Uncle Ron's help, and so if Mondale becomes President, Reagan would have won it for him by doing something dumb; i.e. leaving the Marines in Beirut or alienating another large group of voters.

Non-Trads Hold Weekly Meeting

Caroline Butts
Journalism Contributor

"When is a University not a University?" a Nontraditional student asked another.

"When?"

"When it's an obstacle course," the Non-trad replied.

Pat Leonard, Associate Dean of Students, hopes to eliminate many of these obstacles with a condensed student handbook aimed at the needs of the Non-trads. Incoming Non-trads will receive one at registration to ease their return to student life.

Non-trads do not live in the residence halls, plan to go through hazing, or tryout for cheerleading. Because of this, they tend to dismiss the current handbook as not applicable to them. Yet many questions still exist and are voiced at the weekly meetings of the Non-trads which meet every Wednesday at 12 noon in the Union SnackBar.

"Can we use the cafeteria if we are not resident students? Are our families allowed to use any of the campus facilities? What about getting Medical care? Who do we talk to if we have problems adjusting?" All these questions and more will be answered in the new handbook.

For example, and incoming

Non-trad would not think to look under Career Planning and Placement to find a babysitter. Yet that is where they could find one. Another Non-trad found out in her senior year that she could have been given her allergy shots in the student medical facility rather than paying $9 in town.

With the new Non-trad handbook, Leonard, with the help of the present Non-trads, hopes to make it an easier transition from non-student to student. If there are any obstacles which you can think of that should be included please contact the Dean of Students Office or come to a meeting.

Friday, January 27, the "drama club" held its first formal meeting. One of the first orders of business was to discuss the title of "drama club" and adopt a new official name, "UP (University Players)."

One of the major topics discussed by UP was membership and student involvement. One member remarked that UP wanted to "overcome the stigma of a drama club being just for drama majors." This became an important focus of the meeting.

Students usually assume a "drama club" is just for drama majors or drama students. This club wants and encourages participation from all students with all sorts of majors.

The club elected officers. Hunter Thompson was chosen as President, Doug Surridge was chosen as Manager, Stacey Hammond was chosen as Public Relations Officer and Larry Call was chosen as Treasurer. Advisors were also selected, bylaws were adopted and a tentative meeting schedule was set for Wednesdays at 5 pm. Anyone interested in joining this club should contact the drama department at 791-4330, ext. 2440 or talk with any of the officers or members of UP.

Spanish Center Opens

Stephanie Loftus
News Editor

Need a little help with your Spanish? La Casa de Socorro, established towards the end of last semester, is a volunteer tutorial service for Spanish students.

Dr. Terry Mount, advisor for the service, explained how La Casa began: "We've been concerned that students don't have any resource like they do in English or in Math, but we didn't have the money to start a lab." So the Spanish Club formed a service that would be available to all students.

Since La Casa de Socorro is a free service, not sponsored by a department, its tutors are volunteers. Barabara Blanco, a former tutor, commented, "I think it's easier for the students to have another student tutor them because it's almost like having a friend instead of a teacher."

"We've had a good response from the volunteers," Dr. Mount said. "They've been very responsible and helpful, especially because they're not paid." Since La Casa de Socorro is a new program, many students are unaware of its existence. "I hope the response from the students

Movie Review

subject, battles for his place in the sun.

A major flaw in the movie is the robot like supporting characters. Sure, a villain like Montana wouldn't be caught having close relationships with people. But even his enemies lack any hard-nosed characteristics typical of their kind.

Another flaw, even more troublesome, is the inconsistency in Montana's personality. One minute he is blowing away a friend and the next he bravely saves a mother and two kids. Thus, Montana is made to look recleansed.

The 3-hour movie does have positive factors. The theme, that ambition, when misdirected is poisonous, was well developed and is really the heart of the movie. Al Pacino shows again that he is a master of playing neurotic characters.

Note: Highly intense violence (for about 20 minutes). Originally became the only movie in history to rate X solely on violence, after it was edited, became R.

"I'll do what it takes. I want the world."

A quick passing line in Scarface, this thought captures the essence of the movie and leads us to the far reaching meaning of ambition and its some times degenerating consequences.

Scarface, more than any other movie in recent memory, is a one-man show. Al Pacino, as Antonio Montana, plays the defensive, ornery Cuban refugee who climbs the drug-ring ladder and, after disposing of his rivals, finds himself at the top.

The 1930's remake of the Al Capone movie is, if nothing else, uncomplicated. Pacino is always at center stage and has only one expression--stone face. He is unwavering and brings an endless rechargeable source of energy to the movie. In three violent scenes in the movie, Pacino, through toughness and in-

Wilmington welcomes STEPS.

Schoolboy Shows Promise

Donna Holden
Managing Editor

One of the hottest bands to be heard and seen today is STEPS from Chapel Hill.

Playing high power, high energy pop music, the five man band, along with two managers tours NC, SC, GA, and VA.

Members of STEPS are Tony Bowman--keyboard/vocals; Jeff Campbell--guitar/vocals; Greg Darden--bass/vocals; Carter Minor--lead vocals/harmonica; and Dan Sherrill--drums/percussion. The band, along with manager Tim Hildebrandt and road manager Tom Merkel, has been playing together since junior high school.

STEPS was formed in May of 1980 to perform their own original music. After a three year separation when everyone attended college, they returned home. The music sounded good so nobody went back to school.

More of concert band, STEPS is not a jukebox-style band. They try to maintain a high level of energy when playing and try to encourage audience involvement.

The band also plays current popular music. "We choose others' music that fits our image and that fits the format of our concept of music," Campbell said. "If there is a song we like to play, we play it."

"We try to be as viable as anyone. We try to please as many as we can," added Bowman.

Focusing on the college crowd, STEPS plays for campus parties and fraternity house parties as well as local clubs.

Their first album, entitled "Steps" will be released in March. Their single, "Schoolboy" is currently available at the Record Bar. Both records are on their own label.

The band's major goal is to achieve the status of a major recording act. If Wilmington's response to this group is any indication, they are already on their way.

'Hawks Fall Hard

George Walker Sports Editor

...And the song remains the same.

Ten minutes remained in the UNCW-George Mason basketball game Monday night. Score: UNCW 60-George Mason 40. Final score: George Mason 78-UNCW 73.

An incredible rash of errors stockpiled to form what has to be the most unbelievable comeback ever witnessed by the crowd of 1850 at Trask Coliseum.

Seven missed one-and-ones and numerous turnovers explains the comeback. It didn't help that, at the same time, George Mason caught fire.

A major weakness on the Seahawk team is faulty ball control. Point guard Tony Anderson is capable enough. But George Durham, Carlos Kelly, and Terry Shiver, all tremendous penetrators around the lane, tend to make mistakes in the open court. These turnovers are cashed in to points for the opposition.

For all the physical goofs, it is certain that a general lack of confidence dealt UNCW the worst blow. The Seahawks played scared and were just holding on. It is unfortunate that the maturity so badly needed by the young team has to come in such frustrating circumstances.

Terry Shiver(20), George Durham (14), Carlos Kelly(11), and Brian Rowsom(11) paced the Seahawks.

...UNCW defeated Akron earlier in the week. Tony Anderson(14) and Shiver(10) led the Seahawks. The next night Youngstown St. rushed past UNCW 79-67. Carlos Kelly(19) and Terry Shiver(18)

Making Waves

George Walker
Sports Editor

UNCW distance swimmer Jeff Siggins sat in the midst of an overlooking crowd at a party, sipping on a beer, quietly recalling a pair of narrow, bone-tingling races against a gallant E.C.U. foe earlier that day.

"I took it out hard and fast," said Siggins, an earring sparkling in his left ear. "When he pulled even at the midway point, I knew it would go down to the wire."

That afternoon, probably the calmest person in the frenzied natatorium was Coach Dave Allen, who has never had a losing record at Wilmington.

"He has come through so many times. The tougher the race the tougher Jeff gets. He inspires everyone on the team and is never intimidated by the opposition," Coach Allen commented.

Adds Siggins, "Nobody remembers second place finishers," thus expanding on the universal theme of the sometimes unfair fine line that winning and losing can border. "It is all or nothing."

Siggins won by a hair.

A 5'11" junior from Jonesboro, Ga., Siggins' racing success is possible because of his tremendous, relentless training regimen. Eight mile days are common (480 laps), with weight work and intervals sprinkled in for strength and speed. In a sport where early burnout is more the norm than the exception, and world record holders are often teenagers, Siggins is still going strong.

"Siggins always keeps up with times of his opponents. He knows what kind of effort will be needed. Since he always finishes first or second, we count on him to swim both distance races and the backstroke," said trainer Al Monteith, who along with Phil Harden is brother, mother, and father to the swimmers. "Most people complain when asked to carry this load, not Siggins."

When asked about personal interests, Siggins, who began training in kindergarten, mentioned such pursuits as waterskiing and listening to music. But he was even quicker to point out that, during the season, the pool is the main focus of his life.

"Much of my free time is spent sleeping because of the 6 a.m. and 3 p.m. practices. Moving up and down the black line of the pool, I constantly talk to myself." This statement conveys the personal commitment and narrowness marked by great athletes. "Having close ties with teammates is one of the attractions of swimming, but once in the water, you're all alone."

During his three years at UNCW, the lean business major has earned a social reputation that conflicts with his usual behavior.

Monteith explains, "When Siggie gets going, watch out. He sprained an ankle once while stealing a pepsi sign at the Seaside Jam. Last water polo season J.J. Davis, a sports caster from channel six, entered the pool and we were supposed to let him score uncontested for the film crew. Before we knew it, Siggie had blocked him and sent him almost unconscious to the side of the pool."

Chris Moore, a close friend of Siggins, continues, laughing, "Last year before the Seahawk Invitational, Siggie shaved his head bare and left only hair in the shape of an arrow above his ear."

In this world we all need a release. Crazy as not withstanding, Siggins has his mind on more important matters. In exactly one week, he will mount the starter's stand for the biggest races of his season, the Seahawk Invitational. If past tendencies repeat themselves, and they usually do, Siggins will again compete hard and well for his team.

Swim Team Splits

George Walker Sports Editor

UNCW completed a busy week, including a pair of splits for both the men's and women's teams. The Seahawks, who travel Saturday to UNCC, followed wins over Richmond Friday with losses to Old Dominion Saturday.

In Friday's meet, Chrissy Cecil, Lani Driscoll, Colleen Lawrence, Denise Hamilton, Kathleen Flaherty, and Tricia Baker picked up victories in a 57-56 win. The final race, a relay, clinched the win. Colleen Lawrence and Denise Hamilton scored wins in losses to Old Dominion and James Madison.

The men's team dominated Richmond 67-46 Friday. Tim Flaherty, Jeff Siggins, Steve Bumgarner, Glenn Peterson, Mike Bitzenhofer, Colin Kueny, Paul Thompson, and Art Hall scored firsts. A new freshman relay record was achieved by Bill Biddix, Matthew Benjamin, Keith Johnston, and Robert Sealey.

UNCW lost narrowly Saturday to O.D.U. Jeff Siggins, Steve Bumgarner, Mike Bitzenhofer, and Al Monteith collected wins.

Other scorers: Tracy Cloninger, Janet Johnson,

Kathy Harris, Evelyn Johnson, and Ric Bell.

Amos-n-Austin Show

George Walker
Sports Editor

One dose of poison can leave you groggy. Two can put you under.

Jill Amos (28) and Owen Austin (21) teamed for 49 points to pace UNCW to an 81-66 victory over Atlantic Christian College Monday night. The Seahawks raised their record to 17-2 and Coach Marilyn Christoph was pleased.

"Our subs (Wanda Carol, Kim Edmonson) played well when Owen got into foul trouble. It is not something we have faced a lot of this year."

Shooting 14 of 20 from the floor, Jill Amos drilled bomb after bomb, few of which drew iron. Atlantic Christian employed an array of defenses to shake her, but nothing worked.

Assistant Coach Drema Greer explains, "We stress to our players to get the ball to the hot hand. And so we did. But when Atlantic Christian came out in a diamond and one to start the second half, everyone took up the slack."

Sonya Pickard and Jenny Owens were particularly effective in the second half. Pickard, a junior, pumped in 15 points and Owens, also a junior, added 10 more. Both pulled down 10 rebounds.

Earlier in the week, Gwen Austin, Sheila Patterson, and Jill Amos combined for 50 points in a 75-64 win over N.C. Wesleyan.

The Seahawks face a tough road trip with games against St. Augustine, UNC-Asheville, Mars Hill, and Campbell.

Do you enjoy drinking but responsibly? Or are you tired of people telling you that drinking is not good for you? Well now there is a new organization on campus that believes drinking is fine if done responsibly. It is called BAACHUS and it stands for Boost Alcohol Consciousness Concerning The Health of University Students. It is present on one hundred college and university campuses across the United States and Canada.

It was started at the University of Florida at Gainesville and it is run by students. If you would like to know more, come to the first meeting Wednesday, February 15 at 7 pm in the Student Union. Get involved with a club on the move!

The February pages in the Channel Marker activities calendar were printed incorrectly. To obtain the correct pages, stop by the Information Center in the Union (room 101) or call ext. 2841.

ATLANTIS, the UNCW student literary-art magazine, wishes to remind students that the deadline for submissions for the Spring '84 issue is Tuesday, February 14 at 5 pm.

All UNCW students are encouraged to submit poetry (limit-5 poems); short stories, essays, and prose works (limit-2 manuscripts); art in any medium, and black and white photography (no limit). Submissions are to be deposited in the ATLANTIS office, room 205 of the Student Union. Submission forms must be attached to each entry.

For more information about submission procedure, working with ATLANTIS staffs, etc., please call Sue Vance (762-3002), Alan Johnson (762-5364), or Charles Fort (English Dept., ext 2329).

Cold Sets In

Maryellen Chin
Journalism Contributor

It appears more than obvious that the cold winter weather has finally reached us, and will probably remain for another two months. During the cold winter months lifestyles alter. Many of us tend to stay indoors rather than bundle up to venture out into the cold. We try to avoid the coldness by directing our attention indoors where it is warm and comfortable.

Could it be that the arrival of this cold weather not only affects what we do, but also has a psychological affect?

"Attitudes seem to vary according to what kind of day it is", says Ginga Colclough, FNP at the UNCW campus infirmary. "Studies have shown that the sun causes an increase of certain chemicals in the body and causes you to feel better. Therefore, waking up to a sunny day at 70 degrees leaves us with a certain kind of attitude as opposed to waking up to a cold, rainy 35 degree day".

Linda W. Smith, Medical Assistant at the infirmary states, "Since the cold weather, we've seen 50-60 students per day, with the majority complaining of colds and sore throats. Other commonly seen cases are chronic sniffles and allergies due to the dramatic change in temperature".

"This time of year, especially during exams, we have seen some cases of depression. Seniors also are affected with the contemplation of graduation. During these times things can be very frightening as they are now on their own, says Ms. Colclough.

Have you noticed that your roommates may be just a little bit edgy? Sometimes things don't always go smoothly for us as college students and a cold rainy day is one more thing to bring us down a notch or two.

Ms. Colclough admits, "The erratic change of temperature, which our bodies are not used to, attributes to sickness".

During this winter season we are either trying to keep healthy or trying to restore it. "Psychologically, many of us take note of feeling badly more when the winter is here. During the warmer season we tend to be more occupied with the warm weather and the beach and don't readily note our "under the weather" symptoms as we do in the winter because our focus is different," states Ms. Colclough.

Appeal For Resignation

Donna Holden
Managing Editor

At the Senate meeting on Thursday, February 9, George Spirakis, Senior Class President made a motion that La Vera Parker Jeffreys resign her position as Editor of The Seahawk.

Spirakis felt that Jeffreys' position as Editor and her seat as a Senator caused a conflict of interest. He cited the Godfrey article in the February 9 issue of The Seahawk as evidence of this.

He felt that the "Editor was going after [Godfrey] the Treasurer" and he "could not see how she could write an unbiased article."

The article stated that Michael Godfrey must repay the scholarship which was honored him upon his acceptance of his duties as SGA Treasurer.

According to Gary Juhan, Dean of Students, Godfrey was under no legal obligation to repay the scholarship.

"The Seahawk has at no time said that Godfrey legally had to repay his scholarship," said Jeffreys. "The Seahawk is responsible for printing the truth; I feel that at no time has the Seahawk printed an article concerning Godfrey that was not true, and I stand behind the information printed. However, Mr. Godfrey has the freedom to tell his side of the story in a letter to the Editor."

Spirakis feels that an objective reporter and/or photographer should be present at senate meetings, thus not relying on Seahawk staff members (who serve as senators) to report on the senate meetings. This conflict would apparently cause unobjective journalism in future issues.

The motion failed because of lack of support. Spirakis, saying he "will not make it seem like a witch hunt," said that he would not present the motion again this Thursday though he would vote for it should another senator make such a motion.

Another motion passed by the Student Senate February 9, advocated that if an official resigns before a term of office is up, he/she is obligated to pay compensation for the time not fulfilled.

Pied Piper Presents "Cinderella!"

In 1953, the Junior League of Wilmington began producing, financing, writing, directing, performing and touring the Children's Theatre productions to school children in New Hanover County, reaching as many as 10,000 students each year. Some of the plays that were presented were: "Box of Smiles," "Snow White and Rose Red," "Dr. Cappelius," "Beauty and the Beast," "The Emperor's New Clothes," "Jack and the Beanstalk," "Magic Flute," "The Chinese Nightingale," "Hansel and Gretel," and "Rumpelstiltskin."

After sixteen years, the Children's Theatre took on the new name of Pied Piper Theatre, and became a joint project of the Junior League, UNC-W, New Hanover County Board of Education and the Beggar's Theatre. The Junior League coordinated the finances and helps with the stage production; UNC-W furnishes the auditorium and facilities; the city-county school administration finances and arranges the transportation for the students to and from Kenan Auditorium; and the Beggar's Theatre group is charged with supplying scenery and costumes for the play.

The plot of "Cinderella!" basically follows the traditional story line of the classic "Cinderella!" with a few variations by the playwright David Stone.

In Search Of Excellence

Mona Franklin
Features Editor

On February 8th, state officials met on campus to discuss ways to improve state government.

Entitled "Excellence," the business-like round table discussion was chaired by Rhone Sasser, President of UCB. The meeting was held to stimulate ideas concerning organization and structure, adaption of technique, and management of human resources. The premise of this meeting, and those to follow, being the idea that state government should work at efficiency just as businesses do.

"Excellence" was the first of seven such meetings to be held throughout the state, and the only one of these meetings held on a university campus.

When the meeting ended, results were said to have been better than expected.

Editors:

The idea of going to cable or carrier current is a poor solution for UNCW's radio problem for several reasons. Limited audience, isolation of non-resident students, and increased labor costs are some of them.

In my home town, the local college radio station was somewhat popular off campus because it was commercial free and less repetitive in song selection and news breaks. It had a greater emphasis on "backside" rock, jazz, and even local groups as well as local goings-on that didn't qualify as "news." The use of cable would severely limit this potential audience and, consequently, the "reality" of the station—it would be a toy or token. In addition, an outside audience would bring greater publicity to the increasing number of UNCW events. (Perhaps the Administration, et al, could justify the expense in that light?) Furthermore, does the University really expect students to pay? This is ridiculous, it's like paying for air, whatever the cost.

Secondly, without outside range, non-resident students would face isolation and less knowledge of events, hence less involvement. Financially, if the University provides hook-up for non-residents the cost increases dramatically and permanently. An even bigger limitation is that car radios as well as "walk-mans"—the two primary sources for potential output would be eliminated.

Yet another fault is the increased labor cost—more parts is more trouble; defective hook-ups causing discouraging policy as to when a unit is defective vs broken. The worst aspect is the cost of expansion, supposedly this campus is expanding, physically and in impact around the town.

On another note, this whole fight of frequencies shouldn't be a radio club or SGA against WEST-TV. Rather it should be UNCW, an up and coming university (brochures don't lie) against a hyper-sensitive local t.v. station. Whatever happened to trying to set a precedent instead of appeasement through tokens?

Finally, I realize the radio club is on the brink of a decision and at the moment anything seems better than nothing but, the negative aspects, not all of which are mentioned here, make it clear that haste could be regrettable in the future. Time, money, and effort would be better invested in air waves rather than cables or wires.

Richard Olsen

Editor:

As we are all aware every situation has two sides. The reasons for my resignation, from the position of SGA Treasurer, has another side. In order to fulfill my responsibility to the students I represent, not only as SGA Treasurer, but through several other organizations, I will use this letter to explain the cause of my resignation as well as to clarify some points of information.

I submitted my letter of resignation to the President of Student Government on the morning of January 27, 1984. At that time I cited personal and professional differences. In addition, I offered to assist with the training and transition of a new treasurer as well as to recommend the Deputy Treasurer for the position. Furthermore, I expressed my willingness to continue to work with SGA through the budget hearing process.

I will now proceed to clarify some previously stated information. There were questions about a file containing unprocessed paperwork. The file in question was a file I kept containing requests from organizations which had been rejected for reasons of improper expenditures or depleted line item accounts. In addition, it was stated that unprocessed paperwork could result in clubs and organizations coming to a temporary financial standstill. It was further stated that paperwork would be completed shortly and that there was no threat to any club or organization. These statements are true at all times, however, they are not germane to the situation and never were. There never existed at any time a threat to any club or organization up to and including the period covering my resignation.

It was stated in the February 9 edition of the Seahawk that books for many of the 50 clubs and organizations were not balanced for the entire semester nor were updates made in December or January. There were essentially two sets of books. There are the official SGA books which are up to date and balanced and which are utilized to make the financial decisions for the clubs and organization. There were also my personal books which I was not required to keep, nor were these books used for financial decisions for clubs and organizations. My personal books were for my own reference and these books were not balanced.

It was stated that I would not pay back the tuition scholarship. I am refunding the unearned portion of my scholarship because, quite frankly, I have not earned it and it is my responsibility as well as my commitment to this University to do so.

The paper further stated I could not be reached for comment Friday, January 27 or Tuesday, January 31. On Friday, January 27, I had an engagement out of town and was unavailable through Sunday, January 29. However, I received no messages that the Seahawk has in any way tried to contact me. I have been available since that time and twice, since the article's publication, I have been in the presence of the Seahawk's Editor, a reporter, and staff

WILL GODFREY REPAY SCHOLARSHIP?

The headline on an article appearing on the first page of The Seahawk, February 9, 1984, seemed to be more of concern to some Senators than the article which listed the sum total of the newspaper's information on the alleged actions of Mr. Godfrey.

"Must" in the February 9th edition of The Seahawk in reference to the headline on Godfrey's article was used in the context of "in reply to a question or suggestion." This meaning can be found on page 865 of The American Heritage Dictionary of English Language, New College Edition of 1980.

Editor:

In my opinion, which is shared by others, Mr. Spirakis' attacks stemmed from personal differences and problems arising from a recent resignation of an SGA official. The actions of senators are not to make personal attacks based on differences but to act as a representative of the students they serve and this is where Mr. Spirakis was out of line.

At this time, I would like to go on public record as a strong supporter of Ms. Jeffreys overall actions as editor and against any type of action that would take away or endanger FREEDOM OF THE PRESS which Mr. Spirakis' motion would have done.

On February 9, 1984, a great injustice was inflicted upon La Vera Parker Jeffreys by Senior Class President, George Spirakis. At the Student Government meeting, Mr. Spirakis presented a motion to the senate that condemned Ms. Jeffreys' actions as editor of the Seahawk and requested her resignation from the position.

This motion was totally uncalled for and fortunately defeated because of lack of support. As a student, senator, and President of the Campus Radio Organization, I feel that it is my duty to come out in support of Ms. Jeffreys' position and the basic issue that was at stake, Freedom of the Press.

The Seahawk/February 16, 1984
Hooray! I've solved the parking problem!

Since convenient campus parking spaces are nonexistent and even dorm parking is tight, it seems logical that a group of cars will have to be banished.

Let's do it to the freshmen.

I don't want to take away their driving privileges, that would be too unfair. Why don't we let them drive, and not let them park?!

It might be fun to watch the freshmen cruising the campus late at night when the upperclassmen are asleep and their cars tucked neatly between two white lines. There'd be plenty of space then!!

Hey! An extra added bonus would be that many freshmen would flunk out since they'd be cruising so late. And maybe we could add a lottery for extra parking spaces in late April so that lucky freshmen could park during final exams!!

I think this idea makes about as much sense as the University's plan to do away with strategic parking lots and adding more farther away. The way it sounds, someone's going to get stuck not driving.

I bet it's the freshmen.

By Bob Haywood, Campus Minister

Someone has taught us and we have bought into the concept that one of the most important things in the world to be attained is success and an element that is to be absolutely avoided is failure. As far back as I can reflect in history, people have sought for success. Success is good, one of the greater goods. Failure is bad. I don't care whether you're talking about human relationships, basketball games, business, or even the search for God, these values hold true.

Last week someone dropped a little jewel of truth into my mind that started me thinking on the above. It went, "Success isn't final; failure isn't fatal." Think about it. For those who seek success, the drive never seems to be satisfied. Success seems to breed an insatiable desire for more success until life becomes dominated by the force of "more and more" and "bigger and better". Success is rarely final. No particular success seems to have much staying power. It gets old and we find we have to move on.

On the other hand, failure has an incredibly significant and positive role to play in our life. Whatever strengths we have in our self, whatever hopes and dreams, whatever image of self we hold dear, are brought into focus, or sometimes even discovered for the first time as much by our failures as by our successes. We can talk about divorce, we can talk about a failed course, we can talk about an attempt to climb a mountain; all hold the seeds of self-discovery and rebirth.

Some failures feel awfully final. They feel like THE END! They are not. Given some basic inner strengths and some outside support, these barriers can open before us into new (and, oh yes, scary) vistas of self-discovery and influence.

No significant personal growth comes without taking risks. Genuine risk means a real possibility for failure. And since failure is not fatal, the only course we can take that is certain of doing nothing, of hiding out, of avoiding anything that wants to change our life.

But catching a vision of the possible, grabbing hold of a dream and following it, striving for something to which you are deeply committed is a no lose proposition. You learn and grow and become more of yourself whether through success or failure. Go for it!

ROTC Change Noted

Have you noticed a change in ROTC this semester? If you live in the dorms we are sure you have. The pounding of feet and thunder of voices have not been heard on Thursday morning. ROTC has stopped running through the dorm area to wake you up for eight o'clock classes.

Although we appear to be quiet, we are actually louder than ever. ROTC is being heard by people from Washington, D.C. to Key Largo, Florida. A cadet can be found on a mountain rappelling off the cliffs, or fifty feet below water rubbing eyeballs with the fish!

A major part of our program consists of activities outside of the classroom. To create a more whole and complete person, ROTC provides experiences like; scuba diving, deep sea fishing, snow skiing, white water rafting, and a wide variety of other activities.

Our program is attracting more dynamic people than ever before. We are expecting a tremendous growth and would like to talk with everyone about ROTC. If you are interested come by the ROTC office Hoggard Hall or call Captain Macrae at 791-1133...P.S. ROTC would like to apologize to the faculty for the decline in attendance at Thursday morning classes.

Classics Being Shown In Wilmington

Stewart and Everett Theaters are now showing some of the best movies ever made. These are the classics which are currently at Cinema 6 on Oleander Drive.

New York, New York, starring Liza Minnelli, is a classic love story.

The Testament proves to be more effective than "The Day After" T.V. version of doomsday.

Doctor Zhivago an all time great of the great classics has lost none of its impact.

Today, February 16th, is the last showing of Zhivago and for anyone that's missed it so far, today is a chance you won't want to miss.

February 24 through March 1, Casablanca will be shown and this love story must be seen by all.

Gone With The Wind is showing March 2 through 8 and is worth seeing again and again. It proves to be one of the most magnificent works ever.

Ingmar Bergman stars in Fanny and Alexander March 9 through 15 and is sure to make a lasting impression.

Unfaithfully Yours Performs Well

Angie Latta
Woodrow Willis
Movie Critics

Dramatically comic and romantically inclined until the very end when the credits rise, Unfaithfully Yours is well worth the time and effort to see.

Taken from a screenplay by Preston Sturges, produced by Martin Worth and Joe Wisan, and directed by Howard Zieff, Unfaithfully Yours is another fine example of the talents of the ever-witty Dudley Moore and the always charming Nastassia Kinski.

Moore, who plays Claude Eastman, a jealous, middle aged orchestra conductor, is inadvertently led to believe that his new bride, Daniela, played by Kinski, has had an affair while he was away on business.

After formulating an elaborate scheme to kill his wife, Claude feels confident that his plan should work. But when he begins to set his brainchild into motion, he finds that his plan has several short-comings which lead to some hilarious situations.

In the end--well, you'll have to see the movie. It is both enjoyable and entertaining and well worth the time to see.

Museum Presents Memorial

The Museum of World Cultures at The University of North Carolina at Wilmington will present the first Dr. Bernard Boyd Memorial Lecture at 8 p.m., Thursday, February 16, in Bryan Auditorium of Morton Hall. Giving the slide lecture will be Biblical archaeologist Dr. Joseph G. Walser who will speak on "The Northern Negev in Recent Archaeological and Biblical Investigations."

Walser, assistant provost and professor of religion at Alma College, Alma, Michigan participated in archaeological expeditions to Israel in 1963, 71, 74, 76, 78, 80, and 82. He heads the Alma Colleges Program in Israel which yearly sends students, staff, and alumni to pursue archaeology and Biblical studies in the Near East.

Preceding the Dr. Bernard Boyd Memorial Lecture will be the dedication and opening of the Museum of World Culture's Dr. Bernard Boyd Middle Eastern Archaeological Collection at 7 p.m. in the second floor lobby of Randall Library. The collection will be on exhibit in the library display cases as well as those in the Social and Behavioral Sciences Building, February 1 through March 12.

The public is invited to attend the dedication and the lecture. There is no charge.

Funding for the lecture is provided by a grant from the North Carolina Humanities Committee to the Museum of World Cultures. Dr. Gerald H. Shinn, professor of philosophy and religion at UNCW, organized the tribute to the late Bernard Boyd. Former Kenan Professor of Religion at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, Boyd led several archaeological expeditions to Israel.

"Dr. Boyd was a master teacher and genuine friend to the students who flocked to his lectures, seminars and fireside chats," Shinn explained. "We honor Dr. Boyd because we need to remember our models of excellence who have led us to participate in the humanities tradition by life and precept."

As part of the observation of Black History Month at The University of North Carolina at Wilmington, the Minority Arts Program Committee of the University Program Board is presenting in concert folk singer Josh White Jr. The concert begins at 8 p.m., February 23, at Kenan Auditorium.

The public is invited to attend. Admission is $3.50 for the public, $1.50 for UNCW students. Tickets will be available at the Information Center at the UNCW University Union after February 14.

Jazz Group Gives Mini-Concert

The UNCW Jazz Ensemble, directed by Frank J. Bongiorno, assistant professor and assistant director of music at the university, will present a Mini-Concert of Big Band Jazz at 8 p.m., February, 29, in Kenan Auditorium. Admission is $1.00.

The concert will feature several compositions performed by the late Stan Kenton's big band. Kenton, whose 62nd birthday would have been February 19, was a pianist and a big band leader from the 1940's to the time of his death, in the 70's. His bands incorporated "classical" as well as jazz idioms in their music and were therefore labeled as a progressive jazz band. During the 70's, Kenton was also a major force in the development of jazz education in this country. Other compositions to be performed by the big band will be arrangements of standards such as Tangerine, Sweet Georgia Brown, and A Child is Born.

In addition to the UNCW Jazz Ensemble, the jazz group Eclipse will perform featuring Frank Bongiorno, alto sax; Duke Ladd, piano; Greg Eavey, drums; and Bill Dribben, bass.

For additional information call 791-4330, ext. 2390.

Jean-Michael Cousteau will present slides of Calypso's last voyage on March 13. Tickets will go on sale in two weeks.

Theatre To Hold Auditions

The University Theatre of the Creative Arts Department will hold tryouts for its last major production of the current school year. The play is John Osborne's "Look Back in Anger" and there roles for three men and two women. The tryouts will be held in the S.R.O. Theatre on Monday and Tuesday, February 20th and 21st at 7:00 p.m. "Look Back in Anger" was produced on the London stage in 1956 and began a movement in English theater that placed emphasis on life in the industrial cities dealing with the problems of working class people. The material seemed fresh and robust to a London audience used to genteel plays about the upper classes.

This play is in most aspects a naturalistic piece. Jimmy Porter is caught in an environment he hates, but he is not inarticulate. He spits back with a fiery anger that gave a name to a generation in Britain-its angry young men. The welfare state is a boring fact that leaves him still frustrated. The old establishment is still intact and he is still outside the regular social order. Jimmy is not fighting for any social cause; his problem is spiritual, as shown in his changing relationship with his wife, Alison. He torments her and drives her out, and he can accept her only when she too is humiliated and crushed by intense suffering.

Rugby Club Season Opens

In 1823, William Webb Ellis, who with a fine disregard for the rules of soccer, as played in his time, first took the ball in his arms and ran with it, thus originating the distinctive features of the Rugby Game. The game of Rugby has recently seen a spectacular revival across the United States and Canada. This renewed interest has sparked the formation of the UNC-Wilmington Rugby Football Club. The club was actually begun last fall by two Juniors here at UNCW-Scott Walton and Eduardo Alcala. The team played a few "B" games for the Cape Fear R.F.C., but this semester enough interest was shown to initiate the forming of a separate UNCW club.

But what exactly is Rugby? It is a very physically demanding sport requiring equal skill in kicking, passing, and running. The Rugby player must also have endurance and stamina because the game is played in two 40-minute halves with only a five minute halftime in between. It is played on a large rectangular field with H-shaped goals to each end of the field situated on the goal line. The main object for each fifteen man team is to kick or carry the ball over the goal line. A team can also score by kicking the ball through the upright and over the crossbar. While one team is trying to score, their opponents are trying to defend against it and/or gain possession of the ball for their own scoring attempts.

The UNCW R.F.C. has been practicing for three weeks. Their first match is a scrimmage against the Cape Fear R.F.C. on Sunday, February 19 out on Brooks Field. The first game will be with Camp Lejeune, also here at UNCW.

Approximately sixty UNC-Wilmington students enrolled in Dr. Lee Sherman's Production/Operation Management classes recently toured the Fuel Manufacturing Operation at WMD.

Steve Dale, Program Manager for MT & EO, coordinated the tour with the help of Tom Brechtlein, Mike Laska, Mike Henderson and Jan Boney.

The students were presented with a slide overview of the plant, taken on the standard window tour of FMO and participated in a question and answer session following the tour.

Dr. Sherman, associate professor at UNC-W's School of Business Administration, frequently schedules tours of area businesses to present his students with the opportunity to observe production management in an industrial environment.

Swimmers Prepare

Sports Editor George Walker
The Answer.

Evelyn Johnson lays on her bed, absorbing sounds from cassettes, not The Beatles or Stones, but positive thinking talks. Colin Kueny and Greg Magdanz are planning Mohawk and lightning bolt haircuts, and everyone is getting excited.

The Question.

How is UNCW's swim team preparing for their most important competition, the Seahawk Invitational?

Seventeen teams representing five states will compete for top honors, with the South Florida men's team and the Tampa women's team back to defend titles.

UNCW, as Coach Dave Allen notes, is using special methods to get ready for this meet.

"We are tapering (resting) our swimmers for the first time this season. The Invitational is the 'final exam' of our season."

Diving Coach Marc Ellington agrees. "We have been planning for this meet all year. All we want to do now is calm everyone and maintain our sharpness."

To improve performance, all team members will shave their entire bodies. Manager Al Monteith explains:

"Shaving the hair off the arms, legs, and head lessens the resistance of the body to the water. We have found that a considerable drop in time follows."

Schedule of Events:

Preliminaries: 11:30
Thurs., 11:30 Fri., 10:00
Sat., Finals: 7:30 p.m.
Thurs., 7:30 p.m. Fri., 4:00
Sat.

...The Seahawk swim teams dominated in competition against UNCC and Milligan Saturday. The men defeated UNCC (70-33) and Milligan (76-27). The women swept UNCC (72-31) and Milligan (80-23). The men are now 5-5 and the ladies 4-6.

Earlier in the week, UNCW suffered 14 point losses to William and Mary and Wake Forest. George Durham (21), Shiver (11) and Clarence Thompson (10) paced the Seahawks against William and Mary. Rowson (14), Shiver (12) and Durham (10) led the Seahawks Saturday night in a 54-40 loss to Wake Forest.

Sports

George Walker Sports Editor

Driving past Brooks Field on a February day, two happenings are almost sure to be seen. Joggers are struggling around the fence trying to melt off pounds and baseball coach Bobby Guthrie is out readying his squad for another season.

Guthrie, who begins his first season as head coach, replaces athletic director Bill Brooks, who was UNCW's first and only coach and set high standards to follow.

"UNCW won two National Junior College Championships in the 60's and had many other fine seasons," said Guthrie, whose blond hair and slim build likens him to one of the players. "But we still have a long way to go. Playing on an equal basis with the ACC powers and becoming a regional contender are goals I want to eventually reach."

In hope of attaining these marks, Guthrie has become a classic workaholic. Once his day begins, only lecturing in the P.E. Department and a daily mid-afternoon run interrupt preparations. Mark Scalf, an assistant coach with Guthrie last season and now coach at Laney High School, explains.

"Bobby is totally committed. To spend 12 or 14 hours in a day on baseball is not unusual for him. Many days he will be manicuring the field at 7:30 a.m. and then not go home until late that night."

A native of Eli Whitney, N.C., Guthrie twice made all-conference at Chapel Hill (1973-74) and then moved to Scotland High School in Laurinburg for his head coaching debut. Three seasons later, Scotland captured the State 4-A championship. After returning to UNC for his Master's Degree, "I proved I could coach high school, I wanted to see if I could coach collegiately," Guthrie arrived in Wilmington as assistant under Brooks.

Baseball, more than any other sport, is a game of statistics. During the four and one-half hour practice sessions, Guthrie stands in the third base box and constantly records data on a pad, looking for weaknesses, trends, and strengths, in short, for ways to win. He has reduced baseball to a science and doesn't leave anything to chance.

"He's always planning and is an exceptionally organized person. Every little detail is thought out," said Dr. John Scalf, a Sociology professor here who has made Seahawk baseball his hobby. "The players know in advance what is expected of them. Not many faculty members are as dedicated in their field as Bobby is in his."

Watching Guthrie in his relationships with the players, one senses that he is first and foremost a teacher. When a mistake occurs, he expertly and patiently explains it to the offender and, if necessary, acts out the proper method. An enthusiastic applause of encouragement always follows. This mode of behavior, as senior catcher Buddy Walters comments, applies off the field too.

"Coach will help you out any way he can. He is concerned about us academically and as people."

"I think the intimidation type of coaching is outdated and unwarranted," adds Guthrie, who has a wife and two daughters.

UNCW opens its season February 25 against 19th ranked Old Dominion and fourth ranked UNC. With only five seniors and five juniors out of 30 players, a few lumps will be taken.

Hanging on Guthrie's office wall are three philosophies that he adheres to:

"Lord grant me the courage to change the things I can, the serenity to accept the things I cannot change, and the wisdom to know the difference."

"Jogging clears the mind and prepares you to face a new day refreshed and renewed."

The third, a cross-stitch presumably made by his wife states: "All American No. 1 Husband, except during Baseball season."

It may take a year or two to get there, but under Guthrie, UNCW baseball is headed in the right direction.

Hawks Stumble

George Walker
Sports Editor

Leaving many questions unanswered, the UNCW women's basketball team played to three contrasting shades of performance this week.

The Seahawks, now 18-4, opened with an overtime loss to St. Augustine; Wednesday, then followed up with a runaway loss to UNC-Asheville and a rout of Mars Hill last weekend.

Gwen Austin poured in 63 points in the three games, followed closely by Jill Amos with 58. Sonya Pickard and Sheila Patterson chipped in with three consecutive double-figure games, Jenny Owens added 17 during the week.

The road loss to St. Augustine's was especially devastating, being that the NAIA uses a ratings system dependent on schedule toughness and a heavy emphasis on away wins. The game, as Marilyn Christoph explains, went back and forth.

"We played a good team and responded well. The game could have gone either way."

The Seahawks, who beat Mars Hill by 16 and lost to UNC-Asheville by 17, are seeking a playoff spot in the NAIA tournament. An away game at Campbell and a home contest with Pembroke State should answer the questions left untended this week.

Rowson Shines

George Walker
Sports Editor

A challenge to Brian Rowson. Sprint up hills, pump iron, work on your game and become the best player UNCW has ever had.

The long-armed 6'8" freshman from Columbia, NC, a graduate of a 1A school and the team's most improved player, scored twenty points and snatched six rebounds as UNCW downed Baptist College (61-58) in Trask Coliseum Monday night.

Following the same pattern as other games played the last month, the Seahawks, now 8-14, lost a second-half lead due to turnovers. But this time, fate was on our side.

A foul, whistled against UNCW as the buzzer sounded, was ruled late and gave the Seahawks a reprieve. Rowson then scored the first six points of overtime to insure the victory, only the second in ten games for UNCW.

Tony Anderson and Terry Shiver chipped in 14 and 10 points for UNCW. Carlos Kelly added 8 rebounds and 6 assists.

Students Attend Forum On Monday

Donna Holden
Managing Editor

Approximately 400 students gathered in front of Alderman at noon Monday, February 20, for a student awareness forum conducted by the SGA.

As stated in the agenda, the purpose of the forum was "to protect our individual rights as adults allowing us the rights as adults to have equal input in decision-making, enforcement of those decisions, and control in regards to all student issues and concerns."

After the pledge of allegiance by Chris Cole, the invocation by Stuart Milton, and the welcome by George Spirakis, Eric Squires, SGA President, presented student issues and concerns to the group.

Squires cited figures concerning the expansion of Randall Library, the shortening of fall break, and the on-campus alcohol issue as major concerns of students. "These are controversial issues and they really need some student input before they're decided," he stressed.

Squires also feels that this campus needs a radio station and that the recreation area in the Residence life complex needs to be renovated. Lights around the basketball court and new tennis courts are also needed.

The SGA wanted to make students aware of issues that have been discussed with Administrators this year. Squires said that students were "the reason for this institution to begin with" and should stand up for their individual rights.

Senator Wendy Crowson presented student responsibilities to the crowd. She feels that it is the students' responsibility to have rights and that to "make things work, you have to work for what you want."

Crowson said that this campus needs a bar on campus, but also would have to work in order for it to succeed. She feels that UNCW students would stay on campus over the weekends if there was something to do. "I'm tired of making road trips," she said, "Let's make Chapel Hill and State come see our beach."

Sophomore president, Edward Troublefield spoke about alcohol advertisers on campus. Distributors are no longer allowed to distribute free t-shirts, posters, and/or lights to students. Troublefield feels that students need to get involved in order to protect their rights and privileges.

He feels that this campus also needs to sponsor a football team. The university has the spirit to do so, therefore, this idea should be acted upon, according to Troublefield.

Although no Administrators were asked to speak the rally, several were present. Dean of Students, Gary Juhan said he was "surprised at the number" of students who attended. He felt that "the SGA did a good job organizing" the forum.

Juhan also said that the proposal concerning beer distributors "may or may not come about. The University response was predicated around the drinking age, and [the Administration] has a moral and legal obligation to respond."

Pat Leonard, Associate Dean of Students was also at the forum. She feels that "students should respond to the SGA." Leonard hopes that students will be "thorough in exploration of the issues. [They should] ask all questions and hear both sides of the situation." She is glad the SGA is "stressing responsibility and [is] glad to see it."

The student response was very impressive. All who attended were very peaceful and in favor of getting involved in these issues.

Swimmer Injured at Invitational

George Walker Sports Editor

Robbie Burke and a friend were perched in the upper level of the UNCW natatorium, parallel with the high dive, watching Denise Hamilton attempt her first dive of the Seahawk Invitational.

Hamilton gracefully stepped forward and sprung off the board, reached good heights, then, in a tuck position, started downward. The dive, a 2½ reverse, involves tumbling outward from the board and, at the peak, revolving the body into a ball position two-and-a-half times before smoothly entering the water.

As Hamilton passed by the end of the board, the first revolution now complete, her forehead passed inches from the board. "That was close," gasped Burke, who is a distance runner and not an authority on diving. The casual chit-chat between the more knowledgeable spectators seemed to infer that the dive, in fact, wasn't that close. —A prophesy.

Dear Editor:

Last Thursday night, I attended a meeting at the Student Union which was held by the College Republicans. The club has been formed for only two weeks and last week's meeting was attended by several prominent political figures including State Senators, Chip Wright and Tommy Rhodes (candidate for U.S. House of Representatives), Chairman of the New Hanover Republican Party, William Shell, and several other distinguished guests who are running for local public offices. The meeting was very interesting and was a great beginning for the club.

This club promises to be active on campus with events such as a voter's registration drive, frequent guests at club meetings and various social functions. The club encourages any and all conservative views and welcomes new members to join. Announcements for the next meeting date will be appearing around campus. It's good to see that there is finally a conservative group here on campus.

Sincerely,
Doris Meyer

Student Visits Caswell Center

Donna Holden

What is it like to stay in a state institution for the mentally retarded? A Special Education student, Sharon Wiley, participated in Project Inside/Out in late January to find out what it was like.

For the ninth consecutive year, Caswell Center in Kinston, North Carolina, has offered students and faculty the unique opportunity to experience a State institution for the mentally retarded from the inside looking out.

During the five day program, participants were to gain knowledge and awareness of the retarded through direct contact, observe the practical application of various methods employed with the retarded, and develop a realistic view of institutional life.

"The main thing that I remember is that residents were up at 5:00 a.m. We weren't supposed to be up for breakfast until 7:00, but they were up walking around, so we got up too," said Wiley.

Every day was planned, with sessions lasting until 10:00 each night. The main purpose of the visit is to be institutionalized and not to break schedules.

Wiley was impressed with Caswell itself. Residents are well cared for and the administration is using innovative behavior techniques and methods.

A Special Education major with certification in Mental Retardation and Learning Disabled children, Wiley feels all her studying is paying off.

"It's one thing to learn in books and another to actually see it," said Wiley. "Our observation in the classroom was good. It's good to actually see what you study in textbooks, and see that it works."

Why are the walls so thin in Dorm '79?

When I came to school here in the fall I figured that since the walls were solid cinderblock, the rooms would be relatively sound-proof.

Wrong!!!

To have a semi-private conversation with my roommate I have to close the bathroom door so that the echo doesn't disturb the people across the bathroom and shut the door to my room so it doesn't echo in the suite. Then I have to turn on my radio REAL loud and WHISPER into my roommate's ear so we won't be overheard.

And it doesn't always work!

Why couldn't they have filled up the holes in the walls so they wouldn't be so hollow? I can hear a phone ring from the other end of the hall, the walls are so thin!!

Maybe I can learn sign language!!

Stillpoint

By Bob Haywood, Campus Minister

Two weeks ago, I wrote about "time", that digitally-measured commodity that we allow to master rather than serve us. This week, I want to reflect on a different kind of time that even has a different word for it in Greek. It is "event time". "When its time had come, the baby was born." That's event time. "The time has come for us to get married." That's event time.

If you were to think of two or three events in your life that have shaped you (Stop! Do it! Think of two life shaping events.), I bet none of their significance has any relationship to a particular day or time, i.e. tick-tock time. They are significant because they were events that connected with your internal life process and values and needs. Some students and I went to Washington over fall break to experience some inner-city ministries and play a little. It was the same trip where I met my "saint", Mary Curan. She touched my life because it was the right "time" for me. Others had significant things happen also, and they happened because it was the right "time" for them. In the whole process of our personal growth and development, each of our deeper selves was ready to let different external events impact us.

The reason I am trying to make "event" time a clear concept for you is that we so often get caught up in the rush and hurry of our scheduled lives that we either do not allow any space where we can listen to our internal voice that may be saying "it is time for..." or we are moving so fast and feel so hectic that we wouldn't recognize or allow time for an event to become too significant, even if it had the potential to be significant.

Draw a line of a piece of paper; think back over your life and mark the events that shaped you. Discover how much happened, happened because it was the "right time". We can enrich our growth by learning to listen to our internal voice and learn to live in harmony with our own unique developmental process and our own sense of timing as we make decisions about living through this day or living through this season of our life.

I just had a birthday, a kind of "shrug-your-shoulders—so what" birthday. I am much more excited by the surprises that might be lying in store for me in this year's Bahamas trip or this spring's continuing education event or by these events and the events I don't even know are coming (but I'm looking for them!) than by any birthday!

How about you? What time of your life is it?

Iowa: I was going to write about the Democratic Caucus Election of Monday, February 20, but the results weren't going to be official until after 11:00 p.m. and I was tired so I went to bed.

So, with zero percent of the votes counted, I'm predicting Walter Mondale as the winner, and through my source in Iowa, NBC, a surprising Gary Hart as second. You may be asking yourself who's after Hart? Sorry I can't help you, NBC didn't say and like I said, I went to bed.

Washington: On the news of February 20, there was a report on the amount of money going to Central America in foreign aid. Sorry I can't give any exact figures—I couldn't find a pen to write with. But the figures are in the multi-multi-millions.

Now, I believe that foreign aid, military and especially non-military, is vital to the area and vital to achieving our goals in this same area, but the report went on to say that there is so much waste and corruption by the so-called legitimate governments we are backing, that our money is not achieving any substantial goals.

Think about what was said in the report, (by the way the guy who wrote the report looked very intelligent; a bow tie, grey suit, and round wire glasses), in a time where social programs are being cut or severely reduced, the U.S., Uncle Ronnie, is wasting money in foreign aid. Now as I said, the concept of foreign aid is certainly worthwhile, but wouldn't it make sense to make certain that money going to these foreign countries is spent toward achieving our goals?

Uncle Ronnie cut funds from social programs saying they were inefficient and wasteful. I wonder what would happen to the foreign aid program if it was put under scrutiny? At their worst, the social programs aided the American people. Can the same be said about the current foreign aid program?

North Carolina: All's quiet on the Jesse Helms front, except maybe that commercial by the group, Teachers for Jesse Helms. To both of you I ask, Why?

Vandalism Rampant on Campus

Suzanne Parker
Journalism Contributor

Residents of second floor Belk Hall got an early morning lesson in housekeeping on Saturday, February 11, when their floor was flooded by vandals tampering with a fire hose.

According to two witnesses, four males entered the building around 1 a.m. and talked to some of the residents. Just before 2 a.m. they returned. After dragging a fire hose halfway down the second floor hall, one of them turned on the water, flooding the hall and several sitting rooms. Two residents came out into the hall in time to see water running down the hall, and the four vandals running out the back door.

The residents of the hall, the resident director, and two resident assistants began mopping up the water and carrying out damaged property. This task, which was not completed until approximately 3 a.m., was a major undertaking because of the large amounts of water that were pumped into the building.

Incidents of vandalism like the one above are common on college campuses everywhere. Vandalism comes in many different forms and levels of severity, and is dealt with in different ways here at UNCW.

According to Jeff Steinmiller, resident director of Galloway Hall, there are two overall types of vandalism: vandalism and malicious vandalism. The less severe forms of vandalism are incidents that occur by accident, such as accidentally knocking out window stops or an incident that occurs while people are playing inside. Malicious vandalism, a severe form, occurs when something has been done intentionally, such as when someone kicked in a dormitory lobby door causing $200 worth of damage.

Whenever someone is caught vandalizing something, they are charged for the monetary value of whatever they damaged. And, depending on the circumstances, can be charged more or less than the actual value.

According to Steinmiller, vandalism has decreased drastically this year because the resident assistants are more aware of what is going on and are doing more to find out who is vandalizing.

Steinmiller says that in the long run, the people who are really hurt are average students who don't commit malicious vandalism. Every student pays a certain amount on their tuition for vandalism whether they commit a crime or not.

Movie Reviews

Blame It On Rio

Angie Latta
Woody Willis
Movie Critics

Blame what on Rio? Blame promiscuity, love affairs, or anything that wouldn't be okay somewhere else. Whatever you decide to blame on Rio, "it" happens in this film.

Blame It On Rio stars Michael Caine who does an excellent job as the leading character. He plays the role of Matthew, a 43 year old man whose marriage is on the brink of disaster. Matthew and his best friend, Victor, who is the process of getting a divorce, decide to go to Rio for a month-long vacation with both their daughters. Matthew's wife was supposed to come along when, at the last possible moment, she tells of her plans for a separate vacation.

Matthew, Victor, and their daughters all end up in a gorgeous house high atop a mountain overlooking the beautiful city of Rio de Janeiro. Believe me, from the moment the foursome touches ground in Rio, life begins to look up.

The main line of the entire movie is a crush that Jennifer, Victor's daughter, has on Matthew, and the subsequent affair.

The entire movie is filled with beautiful scenes of Brazilian countryside, beaches, and of course, the city of Rio.

Produced and directed by Stanley Doren, Blame It On Rio has breathtaking scenery and astonishing realism in details of the language, customs, and beliefs of the Brazilians and their country.

The movie begins slow but picks up speed quickly. It is tinged with black magic, filled with Brazilian flavor, and overflowing with love and lust in paradise. The movie's plot lacks depth and sincerity, but it is still worth seeing.

Reckless

Donna Holden

Obviously a "B" movie, this flick lacks depth. Although the scene is centered around a high school, the characters are too mature looking to be 17 years old. (There aren't too many teens who can shave in the morning and end the day with a five o'clock shadow.)

The entire plot is superficial. It has a good idea, but it's hidden by graphic sex, obscene language, and teens disguised as punks.

The ideal that viewers are looking for in this flick is "strive for your goals in life."

Although common, this is great, but it can be better achieved than by burning down houses and riding motorcycles through school corridors.

Supposedly, new-comers to the film industry must start out slowly, but bless their hearts, Aidan Quinn (Roark) and Daryl Hannah (Tracy) might have done a little better.

The title, although quite obvious, was fitting. We wouldn't want to call it Johnny and Tracy would we? The only "true thing keeping the movie entertaining was Roark's beautiful blue eyes." (But that's strictly a female point of view.)

Reckless, Rated R, is now playing at Cinema 6.

Police ON tour

Stephanie Loftus
Editorial Editor

"With one breath/ With one hope/ You will know/ Synchronicity"...the crowd roared as the red, yellow and blue synchronicity trademark spotlights presented The Police in Greensboro Coliseum, February 10 and 11.

The sell-out crowd was rowdy throughout Reflex's opening set. Most noted for their current single, "The Politics of Dance", Reflex provided entertainment, but no real excitement.

Now on the third leg of their North American Tour, The Police could obviously use a rest. They've been touring so long that much of their show appeared mechanical. Still, the crowd loved them, the music was great, and the light show was sensational. The Police tradition continues, even though the band may not.

Classics Being Shown

February 24 through March 1, Casablanca will be shown and this love story must be seen by all.

Gone With The Wind is showing March 2 through 8 and is worth seeing again and again. It proves to be one of the most magnificent works ever.

Ingmar Bergman stars in Fanny and Alexander March 9 through 15 and is sure to make a lasting impression.

Sporre Publishes With Prentice-Hall

Sophia Jeffries
Staff Writer

Mr. Dennis Sporre, associate professor and chairman of the creative arts department has written a textbook, The Arts, which gives a unique view of the visual arts.

Sporre's book will be published this winter by Prentice-Hall, Inc. The Arts provides a brief history of the visual arts, tracing sculpture, architecture, music, theater, dance, and film from the 5th century in Athens to the present day.

"What I've tried to do is give an overview of artistic activity and examine it in a cultural and historical context," Sporre said.

Each chapter begins with a brief summary of the history outside the arts that characterized that particular period. A special feature of The Arts is that the visual arts can be studied in their entirety or in "historical blocks", making it easier for the students to comprehend.

Sporre wrote one chapter and a table of contents, submitted them to Prentice-Hall in-house reviewers, received good reviews, and was immediately issued a contract for the full manuscript. The book then took about two years to complete.

Research involved in writing the book consisted of reading and visiting museums. The bibliography contains 56 items, although this is not an adequate reflection of the background involved.

"There was a constant battle of how much detail is enough," Sporre said.

He had to work within the constraints of the publisher who limited the book between 300 to 400 pages, in order to keep costs reasonable.

"A major challenge was finding illustrations, and then getting permission to reprint them. This involved tracing down the person who has a photo of the artwork if it was not in the museum," Sporre said.

His book has 201 illustrations, ranging from full page to quarter page.

Sporre said he is very positive about his book.

"Every book is a process and production of time. Writing is a risk—when you send your book out for the world to see, you have done the best job you can, given the moment. If you wait for it to be perfect, it will never be printed."

Sporre has one other book still in print Perceiving the Arts which provides an explanation of the basic components of the visual, performing, and environmental arts, and an examination of perception—what you can look and listen for in works of art.

Sporre received his B.A. from Central Michigan University and his M.A. from the University of Iowa.

Nations Lend Students

Jane Knight
Journalism Contributor

Beginning in 1966 UNCW started taking an international perspective when the first student from Germany enrolled at the University. Since then, more foreign students have been filling these seats.

The UNCW campus consists of some 5,400 students, and out of this population there are only 20 international students representing 10 different countries. Two students are in the graduate program of Marine Biology. The 10 different countries include Canada, Columbia, Greece, Iran, Japan, Kuwait, Panama, Spain, Taiwan, and Venezuela.

There is a complicated process these students have to complete before they travel from their home country to UNCW campus. First academic evaluation is approved by Admissions, and then all records are turned over to Pat Leonard, Associate Dean of Students. She makes certain that finances are taken care of by either family funds or government monies.

Students also have to take an English test and score at least 550. Transcripts have to be approved by the Department of Immigration and Naturalization in Charlotte. Then a student is issued an I-20, (ticket of eligibility) and an FI, (student visa).

In addition to the complicated transfer procedures, these international students also experience a change in culture. International students from three different countries share their personal feelings about UNCW.

Enio Napolitano, a student majoring in social work representing Ottawa, Canada, lists his reasons for why he chose UNCW to continue his education. "I like UNCW because it is a small university, and you get more attention from professors. I also came to get away from the cold weather and to enjoy the beach."

Tahereh Neda Asgarian, a senior majoring in Biology found out about UNCW from relatives from this area. When asked what she likes about UNCW, she replied smiling, "I like it because of the educational program and the friendly people."

Another student from Kuwait, Khalil Ebramin Al-Haddad, who is majoring in Computer Science chose UNCW for several reasons. "My cousins and my friends are here, and they told me it was a nice city with friendly people. It has one important asset—the beach."

Pat Leonard expresses her own feelings about this issue, "I feel that there is a need for more international students at UNCW for the educational experience and exchange of cultural ideas, which can be a learning experience within itself."

Anyone who sees me can tell that I am a Lifter in the Diet Prison. Years ago, I subsisted on donuts, Twinkies, and peanutbutter cups. Back then, my braces were the heaviest thing on my body.

Ah, but the pudgy future has arrived. Yesterday, I ate an olive and watched as it travelled through my body to settle on my hips. A shred of lettuce made my thighs swell to alarming proportions and a single carrot gave me a puffy tummy. I was stunned.

Why me? I was weaned on Sugar Babies and grew gaunt on Cracker Jacks. Why did my body betray me? And betrayal it was—one night I could hang teacups on my hipbones. The next morning I couldn't see my feet. Overnight, my metabolism deserted me. I am prepared to swear to this on a stack of Mr. Goodbars.

I went to my mother, as I always do in a state of emergency. She listened carefully, munching from a dish full of Hershey's kisses and swigging root beer. "I don't know where you got your eating habits from," she complained around a mouthful of chocolate. "I served you kids a vegetable with every meal. Where did I go wrong?"

I waddled after her as she went to the icebox. My thighs began to quiver as she pulled out a carton of ice cream. My stomach whimpered, growled, and finally snarled when she opened the jar of fudge topping. My body was battling against me! I tore myself away from the danger zone and yelled at Mom from the den.

"Mom, I've got to lose weight!" I shouted desperately; my stomach was starting to sound like a chain saw.

"Exercise!" she shouted back cheerfully. "I'm burning ten calories right now, just scooping this ice cream!" I swallowed hard. "And every time I set the table I can feel the cardiovascular benefits right away," she called. And always use a manual can-opener instead of an electric one - this increases your manual dexterity, so it's much easier to open those tricky Little Debbie wrappers!

By this time I was beginning to hyperventilate. Spots (not to mention Almond Joys) were dancing in front of my eyes.

My tongue was some where around my dimpled knees.

Don't get me wrong—I love my mother and she has an amused tolerance for me. We are very close: I am certain she didn't know what she was doing to me that day. After all, she is the one who gave me the "Magic Sauna Suit" last Christmas! (It didn't melt the pounds away, but I did scare the family dog.)

I was slumped over the candy dish when Mom, sailed out of the kitchen bearing a magnificent banana split. She eyed the chocolate stains on my face and shook her head in sorrow.

"You know," she said thoughtfully munching happily, "you could do what I did to stop feeling guilty. Stay pregnant all the time. No one expects a pregnant woman to be thin." She smiled down at her banana split and then beamed at the pictures of her four children on the wall. I began to gag uncontrollably and had to leave.

Of course, I know Mom was just kidding; she'd never want me to DO THAT - but just for a second I had a fleeting thought of nine-month smorgasboard....besides, I'd even eat the jars of baby food!

The Lady Is Not For Burning

Standing Room Only

Katrina Busby
Staff Writer

The University Theatre opened their presentation of The Lady Is Not For Burning, Thursday night with a standing room only crowd.

Set in the 15th century of the Elizabethan period, the play tells the story of two ill-fated misfits that finally find each other.

Jennet Jourdemayne, daughter of an alchemist and believer in things scientific is sentenced to burn at the stake, the charge being witchcraft. When the local vagabond disappears the villagers immediately declare that she turned him into a dog.

Thomas Mendip is the mercenary, weary of life, and with no little amount of cynicism and wit is determined to die by the rope. He suddenly finds himself cast in the role of Jennet's savior, and amazingly to him he falls in love with her.

Matters are complicated by Nicholas (Paul Sebastian) and Humphrey (Hunter Thompson) Devise, the endlessly bickering brothers both smitten by Jennet's beauty.

In the middle of mayh m Humphrey's discarded fiancée Alizon Elliot (played by Rebbecca Dodd) manages to fall in love with Richard (Larry Evans), the mayor's lonely clerk.

A notable performance is given by Kiri Ringrose.

In Christopher Fry's style of writing the humor comes fast and furiously and the cast handles the dialogue extremely well with only an occasional blunder.

Humorous and excellently performed, the University presentation of The Lady Is Not For Burning was a comedy well worth seeing.

UNCW to Play ECU

George Walker
Sports Editor

Senior point guard Tony Anderson scored 19 points, mostly on long-range bombs, as UNCW defeated Campbell 65-58 Monday night in Trask Coliseum.

The Seahawks, 9-15, pulled away from the Camels late in the second half on baskets by George Durham and Brian Rowson, and set up a big showdown with ECU Saturday night. Carlos Kelly (10), Brian Rowson (9), Durham (11), along with Anderson, led UNCW. Larry Canady (22) and Andrea McGee (18) led Campbell....UNCW lost to George Mason 91-77 last Thursday in Va. Durham, Shiver, Rowson, and Kelly all scored in double figures.

Two nights later, on a Saturday, John Noell of VMI attempted a 2½ reverse on the high dive. Noell, a senior, desperately needed a superior score to advance his standing in the meet, which he knew would be his last.

As he thrust himself skyward, Noell could not find the necessary clearance from the board.

"He should have bailed out," Hamilton said, "It wasn't close. He should not have tried to complete the dive."

As Noell descended, his head caromed violently off the board, sending it vibrating upward, and he fell limply to the water.

Sporadic screams and groans leapt from the crowd of 250, and instantly eight or ten people, some in streetclothes, dove in to rescue Noell, who sank steadily to the bottom. Al Monteith, UNCW team manager, reached Noell first and pulled him to the deck.

"At first, I thought he was dead. When we dragged him to the side, though, he was conscious. The next thought was paralysis. We checked on his feet, and he did have feeling in it."

It took twenty minutes before Noell was taken to New Hanover Memorial Hospital, where he was released later that night. He now has a lump on his head and some stiffness in his neck as manifestations of his whereabouts that night.

At the 1983 World University games a Russian diver, Sergei Shalibashvili, wasn't as fortunate. Attempting a reverse, he struck his head and died after seven days in a coma. Many rival coaches insinuated that he had been close many times before and wasn't skilled enough to properly execute the dive.

Diving, like boxing and car racing, has inherent dangers which participants must recognize and then accept. Quite possibly, it is the potential for danger that adds drama and mystique to it, hence the appeal.

Three VMI teammates of Noell explain.

"You live with the risk all the time," said Blair Shelton.

"A diver has to think positive, always," adds Tom Roltsch.

"It is a chance you have to take," observed a shaken Jack Rose, who is Noell's half-brother and nervously performed the reverse dive minutes after Noell was taken away. "My legs were shaking but I had to do it." Hamilton, who attempted the first dive after the accident, in dead silence, added, "I felt bad for him. But we still had to go on."

As a spectator and athlete, I understand and agree with this discerning of danger. But that does not mean I like it. My uneasiness at the dives following Noell's could not be calmed. In the future, if I can bring myself to view diving, and if I can somehow relax, it will be because I have forgotten a prophesy and a near tragedy that I know might happen again.

Rugby Competes

George Walker
Sports Editor

It began with about 100 spectators, mostly girlfriends, buddies, dogs, and substitutes.

It began with about 30 players, 15 social members, and gorgeous blue skies.

And it began with a lot of hard knocks, a few lost tempers, and pair of bullish losses.

Begun last fall, the UNCW Rugby club opened its schedule Saturday with losses to Cape Fear and Camp LeJeune. The games were mirror images, as UNCW had its back to the goal most of the afternoon.

The Seahawks were physically equal to their opponents, but lacked the know how to form effective offensive thrusts.

"Most of our players are new to the sport. Many had never played before," said Eduardo Alcala, who has competed about 10 years.

Rugby is similar to football in two respects. The object is to move the ball forward into a scoring zone and a lot of fierce tackling, on top of and inside the pile, goes on.

The comparisons end there. No forward passes are allowed, and no protective gear is worn, which allows for many scraped elbows and knees. The offense is in a V-formation, with constant laterals to teammates just before the tackle is made. Skills needed in Rugby also differ from football.

"Fitness is very important. Unlike football, the game never stops. Experience and quickness are essential," said Alcala, who is from Malaga, Spain. "Rugby is very popular outside the U.S. and even with all the roughness, sportsmanship is a large part of the game."

...Most of the time.

The team travels to Chapel Hill Saturday. All guys and girls are welcome to join the club.

Hawks Reach High

An improbable last second shot by Sonya Pickard lifted UNCW to a 61-59 victory over Pembroke State Monday night in Trask coliseum.

Pickard, a junior point guard, rebounded a Wanda Carrol jumper on the left side and promptly banked in the winning points.

"When I saw the shot go up I crashed the boards," said Pickard, the smallest player on the court. "It's the first time I have won a game like that. It feels great."

The game avenges an earlier loss to the Braves (22-2), who are seventh ranked Nationally. The Seahawks, 20-4, received fine performances from Gwen Austin (18 pts. 12 rebs), Jill Amos (14 pts.), Sheila Patterson (9 pts 6 rebs) and Jenny Owen (10 pts.).

UNCW, which trailed 34-30 at halftime, has now qualified for the NAIA Tournament.

....Earlier in the week the Seahawks romped over Campbell 72-59 in Buies Creek. Jill Amos (20 pts.), Jenny Owens (14 pts.) Gwen Austin (13 pts.), and Sheila Patterson (10 pts.) paced UNCW. The Seahawks entertained Gardner-Webb Friday night in Trask, then host an unnamed opponent Tuesday night in the first round of the NAIA Tournament in Trask.

Invitational

George Walker Sports Editor

Sometimes the anticipation is better than the real thing. For the UNCW swim teams, last weekends Seahawk Invitational proved that next year is looking good.

"We swam well," commented Coach Dave Allen. "With almost everyone back next season, we should place higher."

The men ended the season with a 5-5 regular season record and a 4th place finish Saturday. The women finished at 3-5 and a 7th place.

Mark Metz of Furman and Alicia Mchugh of South Florida led a string of fast finishers, as 16 records were bested. Furman won the men's competition, followed by South Florida, VCU, and UNCW. Furman also won the ladies meet, with Tampa U. second. Eighteen teams representing five states competed.

Mike Bitzenhofer, a sophomore, broke the old pool record in the 200 Butterfly. Denise Hamilton captured UNCW's only win, in the 3 Meter Dive. Steve Bumgarner, not a hard-nosed trainer, showed his potential in the 50 and 100 freestyles. Jeff Siggins, Art Hall, and Glenn Peterson picked up a second and two, third place finishes. Colin Kueny and Matt Benjamin scored high.

Janet Johnson, Evelyn Johnson, Chrissy Cecil, Colleen Lawrence, Tricia Baker, Lani Driscoll, and Denise Hamilton qualified for next week's National NAIA meet in Arkansas. The men go to ECU Saturday for the NCAA Division I Regionals.

Diet Takes Self-Control

George Walker
Sports Editor

There's more to good health than meets the eye, according to Dr. David Miller and Dr. Thomas Allen. They ought to know. Both earned PhDs at Florida State University and have years of research and field study to rely on.

"It is hard to convince an 18 year old that maintaining one's fitness is crucial," said Dr. Miller, who has trained for a marathon. "Even in a sedentary person, deterioration doesn't usually show up until the mid 30's."

Out of this deterioration comes one of the most mullied over problems of our age, obesity. Since the onset of Playboy centerfolds, bikinis, carob clusters, and remote control TV, cellulite has left an unfair stigma those who are overweight. The struggle for weight-loss has resulted in the consumption of countless articles, magic diet books, and other assorted materials; few of which give a physiological basis for obesity.

"When an increase in weight occurs, the person's fat cells are enlarged," said Dr. Allen, who co-authored the P.E. 101 text with Dr. Miller. "Conversely, the cells shrink in size with a reduction."

Many people, particularly the most frustrated and defensive, tend to blame their physical stature on glands. Try again.

"Countless studies have shown that a very small percentage of over weight people have gland disruptions," adds Dr. Allen, who regularly administers fat percentages and treadmill tests, always in a white jacket. "The problem is really simple. The calories taken in outnumber the ones burned up by the body."

Simple? Not really. Picture, say, Miss House. Miss House possesses an abnormally high IQ, a wonderful personality, and a great sense of judgement. All she lacks is admittance to our society's "thin is in club" and the willpower to say "no" to Mama's Tall House Cookies.

At school, Miss House is gazed over steadily by the girls, who, she comes to learn, use her as a reminder of what overindulgence can do. The guys, most of whom she could flatten if need be, look over, under, and around her to get a peek at the slimmer population. After repeated chastisement at home and silent discrimination everywhere else, Miss House decides to resolve the situation by going on a diet. It really doesn't matter which one to her, they all sound sooo good. Wrong.

"The reason you see so many diets on the market is that they don't work," said Dr. Miller. "Any diet that eliminates food groups should be questioned." Dr. Allen agrees. "There is a mountain of material on the subject. Some have good intentions, some may not. What you have to watch out for is unscientific, unsubstantiated data."

Both agreed that the Weight Watcher's diet is safe, proven, and probably the best. This diet is systematic, long term (the key), and stresses to the individual not to skip meals. The random, unstructured approach to diet is the basis for most failures.

So, you've picked a sensible diet and are now partaking in 3 balanced meals a day, well, most of the time. Are your problems over? "Probably not, 80 to 90 percent of the people who just diet gain it back quickly," says Dr. Miller. "The problem with losing and gaining weight this way is that you melt off fat and muscle tissue but gain back only fat," thus resulting in a flabbier body.

Dr. Allen continues, "With exercise, a minimum of 30 minutes 3 times a week, the metabolic rate climbs. A person might burn up 100 calories per mile of jogging, but he or she is chewing up calories at rest too."

Dr. Scarsdale, whose claim to fame was authorship of yet another diet book and a victim of a mysterious murder, wrote that exercise was useless, "one piece of pie will wipe out a four mile run," and advocated an array of food combinations.

Using myself as a guinea pig, I will disprove Scarsdale. During my participation in cross-country in the fall, I ran up to 90 miles a week, and consumed at least 7000 calories a day to recharge myself. At 6 feet and 140 pounds, my build was exceedingly scrawny. After incurring a debilitating injury, my physical outlet was gone and a quick 10 pounds came in its place, even at the reduction of half the calorie intake. Metabolism, say goodbye.

So if you want to lose weight and keep it off, do three things. Eat moderate and balanced meals, exercise often and hard, and do a lot of long term planning.

Bomb Threat on Campus

Pete Mullins
Staff Writer

For approximately one hour all of those involved searched nervously for a potentially dangerous device. Randall Library, from 1:40 p.m. until 3:00 Monday afternoon, was the scene of an extensive search for a reported bomb.

The report came from a phone call which stated that a ticking noise was heard in one of the bathrooms in the library. The UNCW police, with the help of the library staff, immediately led an orderly evacuation.

"The main thing was to get everyone out of the building," said Mr. E.W. Huguelet, Director.

After some 400 students were evacuated, members of the Wilmington Police, New Hanover Sheriff's Department, UNCW Police, and the library staff searched not only the bathrooms, but the entire library, including above the ceiling tiles.

It was from above one of these ceiling tiles, in a bathroom, that the police believe may have led to someone believing a bomb was present. The combination of a hard rain and a malfunctioning valve created a strange noise, hence a person may have mistaken this noise for that of a ticking bomb. At least that is one of the theories the police are investigating.

According to Mr. Joseph Johnson, UNCW Chief of Police, a phone call was made directly to the police station via the emergency

Biology Department Ranked Eighth

Pam Herring
Journalism Contributor

UNCW's Marine Biology Department was recently rated in the top 10 of all Marine Science Departments in the nation.

The Gourman Report, a national ranking service started by Dr. Jack Gorman to rate undergraduate programs, evaluated and ranked 115 institutions that grant a degree in Marine Biology. UNCW was ranked eighth nationally in the current report, falling only slightly behind MIT (ranked first), California-Berkley (ranked third), Texas A&M (ranked fourth), and South Carolina-Columbia (ranked fifth).

We are very pleased to find that we are listed at that level in comparison of such good company," said Dr. James F. Merritt, head of the Biology Department. Merritt also says that many people want to attend UNCW because we are rated. With the help of Dr. Ronald K. Sizemore, a Biology professor, and the librarians, we were able to come across the Gourman Report.

"We are proud," said Merritt. "We have worked hard to assemble a good group of faculty. We are glad to know that we are among the best."

The purpose of the Gourman Report is to evaluate the total structure, direction and performance of each academic department and non-departmental areas of colleges and universities. The report also promotes and advances all phases of higher education, it identifies sound institutions, aids administrators and faculty members in their efforts to upgrade undergraduate, graduate, and professional programs,

Excellence in Teaching Sought

Currently circulating through campus mail and among departments are announcements that, once again, it is time to reward teaching excellence at UNCW.

If you think about it, few opportunities exist for students to send a message to the faculty as to what they, the students, think constitutes excellent teaching. This is one of the best chances you will ever have to make that statement.

All students know good teaching when they encounter it. Why else would there be such an underground conduit of pre-registration advice to friends considering certain professors and courses?

By exercising your right to recommend the faculty member you think best exemplifies the qualities that should be found in all educators, you also remind, however subtly the other teachers that they still have goals to reach.

So, pick up one of the Excellence in Teaching forms. Fill it out. Encourage your friends who have had this professor to do the same, and do your part for pedagogy.

and non-departmental levels, to provide guidance.

The Gourman Report also contains not only the above purposes, but an additional list of purposes, policies, and method of evaluation and criteria.

There are 225 undergraduates and 34 graduate students in the Marine Biology program.

"It is a great accomplishment," said Sizemore of being listed in the top 10. "It is something that we're proud of."

Stillpoint

By Bob Haywood, Campus Minister

Supreme Court Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes had the reputation of being absentminded. One day on a train out of Washington, Holmes was studying a pending case when the conductor asked for his ticket. The Justice searched each pocket nervously, but to no avail. "Don't be concerned, Mr. Justice Holmes," the conductor said. "We know who you are. When you return to Washington, you can send us the ticket at your convenience." Holmes lowered his eyes and shook his head sadly. "Thank you, my good man, but you don't seem to understand the problem. It's not a question of whether I'll pay the fare, the problem is 'where am I going?'"

Whether on a train or on the journey of life, people are often confused and unhappy because they really don't know where they are going. They don't know where life is taking them. On any journey there are twists and turns, surprises, disappointments, fatigue and excitement. Your ticket, which is the key to your destination in life, lies in learning who you are and how you can become your best self. Developing a stable sense of self is not easy, and if it's going to happen at all, it must begin with a significant personal decision. That decision is to take charge of your own life and destiny and to give up the attitude which sees yourself as a helpless victim of forces outside of you.

You are on a unique journey. You are the only one of you that has ever or will ever exist in the whole history of the universe. You are special and one of a kind. It is true that you live in a world filled with issues that hang over your life like impending hurricanes, with people whose major attitude towards their life and yours is "you can't!" or "you shouldn't!". It is true that you live in a society where everyone else seems to have so much power to determine your future. It is true that you live in a world where it is easy to feel helpless, victimized.

Regardless of all of these outside forces working on you, the real significant truth is that you still remain a unique and precious person, fraught with potential for a life that is filled with meaningfulness and a sense of worth.

The possibility for fulfilling a potential life lies not so much in our view of the world around us but in our view of ourself. Your self-image is the key to your life journey. If you see yourself as a worthless person, you can certainly anticipate many painful and persistent emotions---discouragement, depression, sadness, etc.---but if you can come to the realization that you are a decent and loveable person of considerable worth, your whole pattern of emotional reaction to events around you will be radically changed. You will discover that you have the power to determine your response to any situation or circumstance that life brings your way. Your unique life journey can become an increasingly exciting and joy-filled adventure. The possibility is there; but the possibility begins with the discovery of your own self-worth.

Probably more important than all of the education you can receive here at the university is the chance to look into your deeper self, to begin the journey of self-discovery. Too many people take on the values and attitudes of those around them and never discover that special, unique being that is your deeper self, a self so rich with all-kinds of potential.

Drug Abuse Incurs Punishment

Wood
Journalism Contributor

Many college students do not realize what can eventually happen in the event of being caught in the act of illegal drug use. Being a student does not protect you from the laws.

The policy on campus dealing with a student that is caught in the act of illegal drug use is to first check the student's record to see if this is a first offense. The seriousness of the drug and the amount found further determine what actions may be taken to deal with the problem.

A student that is caught by security or police for a drug offense is treated as an ordinary citizen and would face the usual punishment.

copying supplies totaling $1367 without going through standard S.G.A. policy. The policy states that any equipment purchase, in excess of $100, must be approved by the S.G.A. treasurer.

When asked about this, S.G.A. treasurer Brad Bruestle stated that, "she has failed to communicate her financial dealings with me and the previous treasurer had the same trouble." Bruestle said he simply followed S.G.A. procedure and issued a reprimand to her. "Just a slap on the wrist to inform her that she had violated procedure."

Charges were not raised against Jeffreys until she issued a counter reprimand against Bruestle.

Bruestle also said that the S.G.A. has been accused of trying to govern the paper in the past, but that this is not currently the case. "We are just monitoring how they spend their money. As a student you have a right to know where your money is going."

He continued, "I can't say she has mishandled Seahawk funds, or embezzled, but she has violated S.G.A. policy on three occasions prior to purchasing this equipment. As far as we know, they have no systematic account record."

EYE ON THE WORLD

Pete Mullins

North Carolina:

There once was a man named Jesse, who ran an election campaign. He called Jim Hunt, his opponent, all kinds of nasty names.

He had an organization that raised money year round. They ignored all the regulations by which they were bound.

He spent six million dollars in 1978.

He'll spend twice that in '84, ain't politics great.

So listen to old Jesse, he's such an orator.

But listen to his words and you'll know who to vote for.

Washington: If you watched Uncle Ronnie's news conference, last week, you heard that the Marines have been redeployed in Lebanon. Now, what does redeployed mean? Have the Marines been withdrawn from Lebanon?

No, I think Uncle Ronnie would raise his voice if he heard that I said we withdrew. He would say that we haven't given into the pressures of backing a government that has lost any resemblance to a functioning, legitimate government. We've simply strategically repositioned our men.

Well, whether we've redeployed, withdrew, or whatever, Uncle Ronnie made a good decision in taking the Marines out of a no-win Lebanon.

Washington: I think the time has come for Uncle Ronnie to stop blaming the Democrats for the budget deficit.

No, Uncle Ronnie didn't create deficit spending and no he isn't responsible for the entire current deficit. But let's face facts. The combination of reducing taxes, while at the same time, spending a greater amount of money on defense has helped to increase the national deficit and not to reduce it.

Most people understood, in 1980, that it was impossible to reduce the budget by spending more on the military, while also reducing the amount of money coming into the government, e.g. tax reductions. Uncle Ronnie said he could do it, and all hoped he would, but he didn't.

Wilmington: I was watching television the other night when a commercial for Wendy's came on. In the commercial an old lady kept saying, "Where's the beef?" I'd love to pay this same woman to go to the next Democratic debate and ask the same question, "WHERE'S THE BEEF?"

BACCHUS Awareness

Caroline Butts
Journalism Contributor

BACCHUS flyers have been appearing on campus bulletin boards for the last two weeks. What is BACCHUS and what purpose does it serve are just some of the questions students ask.

BACCHUS is an acronym for Boost Alcohol Consciousness Concerning the Health of University Students.

The stated purpose of BACCHUS according to the brochure is to: "encourage responsible drinking behavior within the campus community; work to alleviate problems of alcohol abuse and to educate and inform students, faculty and administration on alcohol use and abuse; facilitate alcohol related research; increase awareness of healthy alternatives to alcohol abuse, and enhance communication within the campus community regarding alcohol related matters."

BACCHUS does not discourage the use of alcohol or drinking. Instead, its aim is to educate students to the effects of alcohol. The knowledge of what alcohol can do to a person if abused leads to more responsible drinking.

The idea of forming a BACCHUS chapter at UNCW was introduced by Pat Leonard, Asst. Dean of Students. Seeing it in action in Ohio, Leonard was impressed. With the awareness BACCHUS inspired, students were able to make intelligent choices on their own concerning alcohol, according to Leonard.

Helpful ideas in the BACCHUS brochure include: serving fresh vegetables rather than salty nuts at parties to cut down on thirst or making sure to supply both alcoholic and nonalcoholic beverages at a party. Recipes are included as well as suggestions on when to stop serving alcohol at a party so everyone has a chance to have a soda or coffee an hour before going home.

BACCHUS has over 100 student organized chapters in the US. Already UNCG, UNCA and W. Carolina are part of the BACCHUS national network. Leonard hopes by the end of 1984 to see UNCW added to the network.

For further information you can contact either the Asst. Dean's office or Student Chairperson Wendy Crowson.

Residence Life Representatives Attend Conference

Courtesy Residence Life

On February 17-19 UNC-Charlotte hosted the North Carolina Association for Residence Halls Conference for 1984. The theme for this year's conference was "Let the Good Times Roll," and that is exactly what the fourteen colleges and universities attending did!

The eight delegates representing UNCW, with UNCW's Area Coordinator for Residence Life, Margaret Taylor, were David Bundy, Michelle Simons, Susan Smith, Kristi Cox, Beth Harling, Paul Harris, Joel Henry, and Troy Richards.

The weekend's activities began Friday night with a Roll Call at UNCC's Cone Center auditorium. Each school was encouraged to present some type of skit for the roll call that emphasized the conference's theme.

A choice of either Casino Night or Movie Madness was offered after the roll call. Most delegates chose to attend the Casino Night held in UNC-C's Activity Building. Prizes were given out and games were played and enjoyed by all.

Saturday began with breakfast at UNCC's cafeteria. Delegates separated afterward to attend a number of educational sessions that were designed to prepare and improve skills of Residence Life Staffs. The sessions began at 9 a.m. and continued until 4:30 p.m. Following the sessions a tour of UNC-Charlotte's campus was offered to the delegates.

After the semi-formal dinner banquet, Dr. E.K. Fretwell, Chancellor of UNC-Charlotte delivered a brief welcome. He emphasized the importance of realizing that Residence Halls are much more than a place to live and advised students "not to let classes get in the way of all their college education."

The banquet was concluded with a presentation of awards, with UNCW earning the coveted Spirit Award. This award incorporates all around performance and enthusiasm and is considered the most elite of the honors.

A theme dance followed the banquet and delegates were urged to "dress-up" and express their school in some way. UNCW's delegates, naturally, were Beach Bums.

Sunday morning after a continental breakfast, goodbyes were exchanged, and each delegate left with new ideas concerning Residence Life and greater anticipation for their positions.

Try Volunteer Work

Around UNCW, free time is a luxury. Students are either working, partying, studying, going to class, or maybe every once in a while skipping class. Volunteer work is the farthest thing from a student's mind.

But if you're in a child psychology class, recreation class, or education class, volunteer work is a very real part of your weekly routine. Working in classrooms, preschools or various local organizations provides class credit for these students.

Some students choose to work with teachers in a tutoring capacity or as a teacher's aide. Others choose to work with smaller children in preschools-helping small hands color, cut or paste. Still others help out in various organizations such as the YWCA or YMCA, playing with the children who are waiting for their parents to pick them up.

Volunteer work sounds self-righteous and very time consuming, but it doesn't have to be. Schools or organizations like the YWCA or YMCA would certainly try to work around a student's schedule.

Even if you can only volunteer for one day a week, or just a couple hours, that's better than nothing. Volunteer work can be very rewarding-it is surprising how good it will make you feel about yourself, and sometimes that is worth more than money.

Tour of Near East

Available

The museum of World Cultures at The University of North Carolina at Wilmington will offer an in-depth view of the Near East by means of a tour of Israel and Egypt, May 12 - 26.

Organizing and leading the tour will be Dr. Gerald Shinn, professor of philosophy and religion at UNCW and acting director and curator of the museum. Shinn has traveled extensively in the Middle East and was director of the Bernard Boyd Archaeological Expeditions I and II to Israel during the summers of 1976 and 1978.

Shinn said the purpose of the tour is to introduce people to the historical and architectural sites of the Near East. "This is not a flea market buying trip," Shinn said, with reference to some tours which are less educational.

The tour has been designed to give balanced coverage of Israel and Egypt. The itinerary includes the traditional and historical places of Jerusalem, Bethlehem, Masada, and Qumran, where the Dead Sea Scrolls were discovered. Continuing to Egypt, travelers will cross the Sinai Desert and the Suez Canal and travel along the Nile Delta to Cairo.

Other highlights include a visit to the Egyptian Antiquities Museum where artifacts from King Tut-Ankh-Amun's Tomb are displayed, and a visit to the Valley of Kings where the tomb was discovered by Howard Carter in 1922. The magnificent reliefs and stunning architecture of the Temples at Karnak will also be carefully scrutinized.

The tour is $1971 from New York to New York, and includes three meals a day, first class accommodations, and all transportation and tips. Participation in the tour is first come, first serve, and reservations must be made by April 2, 1984.

Hawks Demolish Pirates

George Walker
Sports Editor

Playing confidently before a Saturday Homecoming crowd of 3620, UNCW handed ECU its 21st loss of the season, 70-47.

The win avenges a 44-43 loss in Greenville in which UNCW squandered a lead in the closing minutes. The Seahawks, now 10-15, lost its last hope for victory in that game when Brian Rowson committed a turnover and George Durham fumbled the ball off a last second steal.

But Durham and Rowson are not the same players they were a month ago. Durham, who set a new freshman scoring record of 312, has cut down on turnovers and has raised his assists output. Likewise Rowson, a freshman from Columbia, NC, is more comfortable around the lane and has improved his rebounding for the Seahawks.

After consecutive home wins over Baptist, Campbell, and now ECU, the Seahawks are finally showing the composure to protect leads which they work so hard to get. A decline in turnovers (8 vs. ECU) and a tighter zone defense have helped UNCW avoid embarrassing comebacks like that suffered against Stetson and George Mason.

UNCW, which held ECU to 31% shooting for the game, raced out to an 8-0 lead and went into halftime with a 28-21 gap. The win was clinched midway through the second half on baskets by Clarence Thompson, Hank Harris, Terry Shiver, and Tony Anderson. The Seahawks who traveled to Florida Monday for a rematch with Stetson, were led by Rowson (13 pts.), Durham (10 pts.), Anderson (10 pts.), Kelly (8 rebs.), Harris (8 pts.), Thompson (8 pts.), and Bellamy (7 pts.). William Grady and Jack Turnbull, a New Hanover graduate, paced the Pirates. UNCW plays tonight against Youngstown State in its home final.

Tennis Begins

George Walker
Sports Editor

Coming off a fine 14-9 season, the Seahawk men's tennis team received something old, something new, something borrowed, and something blue in its initial match of the 1984 season.

Beginning his 12th year as Head Coach, Larry Honeycutt has an almost entirely new squad heading into the 22-match season.

"We have only 3 starters out of 8 back from last season," said Honeycutt, referring to Nelson Hughes, Scott Brooks, and Clayton Pressley (something old). Into the No. 1 seed spot steps Nelson Hughes (something new), who replaces the graduated John Shakelford. Terry Gratz, Scott Brooks, and John Felton are nestled in the seeded positions. Also providing support in the lineup are 3 Mount Olive transfers, David McGee, Kermit Nixon, and Mike Bowen (something borrowed).

Center Gwen Austin poured in 44 points and forward Sheila Patterson added 40 in a weekend split with Gardner-Webb and Duke.

The Seahawks, now 21-5, played Tuesday night at home in an NAIA playoff game.

The scene and the setting were different, but the results were the same in Friday night's 100-70 conquest of Gardner-Webb. Earlier this year UNCW had

In Saturday's windblown match against UNC-Asheville, ranked 18th Nationally, the Seahawks ran into a blue wave. Scott Adams, a drop-shot artist, earned UNCW's only victory in nine contests.

This season's schedule is similar to last year's, with particular emphasis on the Azalea Festival Tournament. With only a month of practice behind them, the young team should prosper late in April.

"We have so many players that are on the same level that everyone is going for each other's positions," Honeycutt said, "This is a very hard working group. They respond well."

Because of the seeding format used in Tennis, in-team rivalries tend to be fierce. A challenge system whereby low seeded players battle for the higher positions keeps everyone working hard.

The Seahawks played Mount Olive yesterday in its second match of the season.

defeated the Bulldogs (7-16) by a 104-77 score. Leading 55-39 at intermission, the Seahawks ran away behind the efforts of Austin (27 pts., 18 rebounds) and Patterson (22 pts., 9 rebounds). Sonya Pickard (15 pts., 7 rebounds), Jill Amos (12 pts., 7 assists), Wanda Carroll (8 pts.), Janet Bullard (4 pts.), Jenny Owens (12 pts., 8 rebounds), and Kim Edmondson chipped in as UNCW dominated the boards 53-39.

Baseball Drops Two

Gary Hall's dramatic two-run homer lifted UNCW to a 5-4 victory over Old Dominion and enabled the Seahawks to avoid a three game sweep at Brook's Field last weekend.

The Monarchs, ranked 18th nationally, won the second and third games, 12-2 and 9-4, respectively.

Curtis Hopper gained a complete game victory in the opener. Kenny Jones, Mitch Wells, and Bobby Bryant all batted well for the Seahawks. A demanding two week road trip awaits the Seahawks during Spring Break.

21st birthday before the crowd of 325. She has filled in well for the injured Sue Dean, who broke a foot in December. This is quite a surprise for the former team manager who wasn't expected to contribute this season.

...A well-played second half could not help the Seahawks escape an 87-69 defeat to Duke of the ACC. The Seahawks, who trailed 47-31 at halftime, were paced by Patterson, Austin, Amos, Owens, Pickard, and Carroll.

TOUCHSTONE FILMS

Walt Disney Productions recently announced that it will release some future films under a new banner, "Touchstone Films," while it will also continue to produce and release motion pictures under the "Walt Disney Pictures" title.

"Splash," opening nationally March 9, will be the first film to carry the "Touchstone Films" logo.

Under the Walt Disney Pictures label, the company will continue to produce live-action and animated feature films in the classic Disney tradition. "Never Cry Wolf," directed by Carroll Ballard, is a current "Walt Disney Pictures" release that has received considerable critical acclaim and is doing excellent box office business, the company said.

Richard Berger, president of Walt Disney Pictures, will also head Touchstone Films.

Ron Miller, president and chief executive officer of Walt Disney Productions, said, "With Touchstone we are making a very clear distinction between classical, customary Disney entertainment for the entire family and our diversification into a wider spectrum of films."

"The name Walt Disney Pictures on a production will signal that the film is designed as family entertainment, while the Touchstone name will identify those films appealing to other segments of the audience," Miller continued.

"In effect," he noted, "Disney is now the only studio to have its own self-imposed, in-house rating system to guide parents in the selection of motion picture viewing for their families."

"The same high standards," Miller emphasized, "which have always governed Disney films and have gained us the trust of generations of moviegoers will continue to be maintained as we expand our film-making activities."

Additional Touchstone and Walt Disney Pictures projects will be announced shortly.

In addition to failing to report expenditures, Jeffreys was asked to answer questions concerning the high turn-over rate in her office. Members of the S.G.A. claim to possess a list of at least 30 disgruntled former staff members who have left since Jeffreys took over the Seahawk in May of 1983.

The Seahawk is a student operated publications relying primarily on volunteer employees. It is not unusual for a school the size of UNCW to have 30 staff members working on their school paper. The Seahawk is currently operating with a total of seven.

S.G.A. Senator Daniela Sullivan, who is a member of the Media Publications Board, said that action has been taken primarily because of Jeffrey's inability to keep her duties as an S.G.A. Senator and Editor of The Seahawk separate.

Ms. Sullivan said that, La Vera has a right to face her accusers. But she also stressed that, "if we vote to impeach her, then that will take place Wednesday night."

The S.G.A. has asked Jeffreys to resign voluntarily, but she refused.

The voting members of the Media Publications Board consist of three S.G.A. Senators, Daniela Sullivan, Stuart Milton and Kevin Markham, and three faculty members, Ellen Servetnick, Dr. Marcee Meyers and Mr. David Lewis, with the majority ruling.

It's that time of year once again. The University Program Board is getting plans for Seaside Jam 5 underway. One of the first steps is to find an appropriate logo for this year's event. In order to do so, we are asking that all interested students create an original logo to be used as a promotional trademark throughout the Seaside Jam 5 season. The logo chosen will be used on all t-shirts, posters, tickets, buttons and passes.

Entry requirements:

- 1) Theme should concern saving the whales
- 2) Must include "Seaside Jam 5, 1984. Save the Whales Benefit Concert."
- 3) Entries should be drawn in ink on white 8½"x11" paper.

All entries should be turned in to room 202 in the University Union by March 1. Be part of a tradition - GET INVOLVED!

Sigma Alpha Epsilon will be selling raffle tickets for dinners, t-shirts, gift certificates, fishing trips, and Health Spa passes until the drawing on March 23. All money will go to a local charity and the SAE House fund. Contact an SAE member for info and tickets.

STUDENTS: What parts of The Seahawk do you enjoy the most - which section do you turn to first - what would you like to see in The Seahawk that is not part of the regular newspaper? Please respond in writing or come by the office and express your ideas - thank you for any suggestions.

Delegates Attend Republican Convention

Jay Stoxley
Staff Writer

Eight delegates from UNCW attended the 1984 North Carolina College Republican Spring Convention, hosted by Wake Forest University.

The main purpose of the convention was to select state officers, but the convention included fellowship and training seminars.

During this well attended convention, there were many notable and interesting speakers. Congressman Philip M. Crane and the Honorable Howard Phillips, Chairman of the Conservative Caucus, spoke on the different views of the two major parties and the importance of campus activism.

The guest speaker for the "Youth for Reagan" seminar was Sly Wickerson, Minority Affairs Chairman. He discussed the strengthening of minority involvement in politics and how the College Republicans can encourage this action.

Even though the UNCW College Republican organization is new, they were well represented at the convention, which shows that this group of students are willing to work hard in their efforts to reach their goals.

UNCW College Republicans encourage all interested students to attend their meeting on Thursday at 7:30 in Room 207, Student Union.

Cousteau Speaks in March

Courtesy of UNCW News Bureau

Jean-Michel Cousteau, elder son of ocean explorer Jacques-Yves Cousteau, will discuss the Cousteau Society's recent Amazon expedition in a lecture and slide presentation at The University of North Carolina at Wilmington at 8 p.m., Tuesday, March 13 in Kenan Auditorium.

The presentation is sponsored by the University Program Board Lecture Series Committee. Tickets are $5.00 in advance, $6.00 at the door for the public; $2.50 in advance for UNCW students with I.D., $3.00 at the door. Tickets will be on sale Tuesday

Feb. 28 at the University Union Information Booth, The Record Bar and the Bookery.

Entitled "Journey to a Thousand Rivers," Cousteau's talk will review the work of Cousteau Society teams who spent 18 months exploring the world's largest and least known rain forest and the river that weaves through it. He will also discuss the history and work of the research vessel Calypso.

Cousteau was born in Toulon, France in 1938 and graduated from the Paris School of Architecture. He has spent his life exploring and experimenting in the sea and has used his training as an architect and designer to head the team which converted the ocean liner Queen Mary into the Living Sea Museum in Long Beach, California.

Vice president of communications for The Cousteau Society, Cousteau is responsible for designing and developing education and information centers, exhibits and museums, such as the major facility proposed for Tidewater Virginia. He lives in Norfolk with his wife and two children.

Dr. Terry Theodore, in conjunction with the Sheriff's department, is in the process of finishing a film, staged by students and official officers of the court, that gives a view of drunk drivers being caught and the result of such an arrest.

Marcella Miranda is cast as the female drunk and Ronald Dail plays the male drunk. Both students are in drama 130 which is taught by Dr. Theodore, who has to his credit a graduate degree in Cinema from the University of Southern California.

There was no decided verdict before the film. The verdict was made by hearing the case in a real court room and a decision being made after evidence was heard.

Dr. Theodore responded to all the aspects of the film with a very positive attitude. "Working on this film has been a very enriching experience for me both on a professional level as well as personal. I have gained valuable insights into the law enforcement and fiduciary processes. It has been my privilege to meet and work with dedicated officers who take their responsibilities very seriously. UNCW can be proud of our students too for their participation in the film."

number. The caller, a male, reported he heard a bomb ticking in one of the library bathrooms. He then identified himself and told the police he would meet them in the library lobby.

Upon arrival at the library, the police were not approached by anyone. They are now following up on the name the caller gave.

Police Chief Johnson did not want to speculate on whether the caller was perpetuating a hoax or merely became scared after calling in what he believed to be a real bomb.

UNCW has seen bomb threats in the past, although the last one was several years ago. During the summer of 1977, several campus-wide bomb threats were made. This threat, though, is the first that was directed at a particular building.

Huguciet expressed relief in finding that there was not a bomb in the library, but he as also bewildered that someone would do something so unnecessary and disruptive.

Media Publications Board deliberates on accusations Monday night.

Editor Survives Attack

George Walker Donna Holden
Sports Editor Managing Editor
LaVera Parker Jeffreys
has survived an ouster attempt by several SGA officials and remains editor of The Seahawk.

The Media Publications Board unanimously voted to retain Jeffreys Monday night after hearing two hours of testimony from Jeffreys, her accuser, Brad Bruestle, and other involved parties.

"It is obvious that the editor has broken SGA procedures," said board member Mr. David Lewis of the Business Department. "But we didn't feel there were sufficient grounds for removal."

The meeting was necessitated after SGA treasurer Bruestle reprimanded Jeffreys for ordering supplies totalling $1376 without proper authorization, as well as mishandling her staff, which he claimed had dwindled from 29 to seven.

"We have put out a paper every week this year," explained Jeffreys. "A few machines broke and had to be replaced immediately."

Jeffreys failed to receive permission from SGA office Manager Susan Goodrum. "I admit that I did wrong. I'm sorry," stated Jeffreys.

On the matter of The Seahawk staff problems, yearbook editor Jay Wilen defended Jeffreys by pointing out that most staff personnel are not paid and because of other interests, quit.

"I talked to a lot of people who wanted to work for the yearbook in August," he said. "I haven't seen most of them since."

Editors of The Seahawk are elected to one-year terms every May by the Media Publications Board. The job entails leading a staff responsible for financial as well as literary matters. All money expenditures are cleared by the SGA. Thus, the SGA accounting personnel and the editor of The Seahawk interact often.

This apparently is the heart of the problem. All parties involved agreed that a lack of communication exists between the two organizations.

At the conclusion of the meeting, Bruestle and Jeffreys both said they would meet and clear up all differences.

Blue Law Threatened

George Walker Sports Editor

Now reaching the pinnacle of public awareness after 62 uncontested years, the city blue law is threatened by a pending referendum initiated by University students and faculty.

Dr. John Morgan, an Economics professor at UNCW, his wife Margaret, and two student-storeowners, Adele Cohn and Janet Aquino, are hoping to repeal the Sunday legislation. It has been amended three times since 1967.

"The thing that's not fair," says Cohn, co-owner of The Write Place (Cotton Exchange), "is that some businesses can open while others are forbidden. You can buy flowers in Kroger on Sunday yet a florist can't be open."

On February 29th, the Wilmington City Council hosted a public forum to hear contrasting views on the blue law. The tension-filled audience of 300 included mostly retail workers, church representatives and elderly citizens. A large majority favored the law.

"The Lord gave us one day, only one, to be with our families," proclaimed the Rev. Jim Finney of Pine Valley Baptist Church, "Let's don't give that away." Pete Adams, a Sears employee, warned that "the owners will open for competitive reasons and the 9-to-5 people will have to clock in."

Only 10 of 35 volunteer speakers pleaded for repeal. They mentioned the continued loss of "tourist dollars" and the "inconsistency of the law." "I can purchase beer, tobacco and fish bait," argued GE worker Rick Mundy. "But I can't buy shoes or cooking instruments."

Some were even more outspoken. "I am damn tired of the blue law telling me what to do," fumed Dr. Morgan. "I worship, but if I choose to go fishing then that's my business. The city is losing money to the county. And many of the same hypocrites who talk about Sunday as a rest day go to restaurants. Who do they think is back there washing dishes?"

Afterwards, Mayor Bill Schwartz and the council voted (4-3) to cancel the Sunday restrictions for Azalea and Riverfest weekends only. They also defeated a proposed referendum (4-3).

But it is clear the city-wide vote will happen anyway.

"We easily obtained 2000 signatures (2500 needed for referendum) on a petition in January," recalls Margaret Morgan, "but a technicality in the wording disallowed it." Morgan and others received 100 new signatures in the Student Union before spring break. "We should meet the quota in a few weeks."

And the referendum? "It will be in November," answers Dr. Morgan.

The prospect of a dynamic blue law vote in November, combined with a fierce Helms-Hunt race and the sacred presidential election could make Wilmington a political hot spot. Part one of two parts. More on page 3.

Letters

To the Editor:

The flow of information is stagnant on this campus. I went to Homecoming this Saturday night and stood in line for five minutes or so at the front door of Trask. When I made it up to the booth, the student worker told me I owed $3.00. I told her I was a student and should not be charged that. I offered her my ID. She said I was an adult and owed $3.00.

With only two dollars in my purse, I decided I had to walk to College Manor and get some more money. I came back, paid my three dollars, and got in at the end of the first half.

I am furious about this whole incident. I did not know students had to use the side entrance. I am not the only uninformed one. The student worker who worked the front door was also uninformed. I am sure we are not the only ones. I think something should be done.

There should be a notice in The Seahawk stating that students with ID's have to use the side door. There should also be a poster at the doors that do not honor student ID's, telling them where to go. And finally, the individuals who work a job that require responsibility should be informed of their job obligation.

One of the benefits of sailing in the Bahamas is the utter simplicity of it all. It is a week when my world gets smaller and I am in one place doing only one thing. Such times encourage reflection. In such times, my normal work and family worlds come into perspective and I get to measure what I do against my values. The core question I keep coming to is, "What do I believe is important in my life and am I living in a way consistent with those values?" It is essential, I believe, to keep one's short-term and long-term goals clearly in focus.

What is important for you? What do you prize in your life? For me, I prize a deepening faith, a good marriage, silence, and so on. If you are not sure what is important for you, look at the way you spend your days, how you divide your time, what you do and you will get some image of what you think is important.

One of the reasons I think seeking clarity about your highest values is significant, is that if we do not choose our values for ourselves, the world will set our agenda for us.

All around you are people and systems that would gladly have you buy into their values. They are even convinced it is for your own welfare. Even this university is shaping your values with a bias toward upward mobility, toward success measured in terms of position and wealth, and competition as the only option for getting ahead. For me, other values growing out of my faith journey have seemed to be truer to my personal nature. It really is possible to gain a sense of long-term satisfaction without having to "get ahead." I really believe, and find it affirmed day after day, that living with a sense of integrity brings much more satisfaction than any win/lose competition can bring.

My point is that your values are being shaped by the people to whom you give power, by the systems to which you belong. I hope you will find some reflective time to look at the way you are operating day by day and discover what your values are in order to determine what you want your values to be. We can set our own agenda in this world, but only if we choose to.

Taylor Promoted

Residence Life Coordinator, Margaret Taylor, will see herself in a new role for next fall.

Taylor will hold the position of Coordinator of Auxiliary Services starting on May 7. She is presently working in both the Housing Office as well as the Residence Life Office in order to organize for next year.

Her responsibilities will include Housing, Parking, Vending, and Food Services. Taylor feels that her position will allow her "more responsibility and a difference in supervision." She will also have "plenty to learn and plenty to do."

Originally from Henderson, NC, Taylor has worked in Residence Life here at UNCW for the past two years. She has worked extensively with the Resident Assistants and disciplinary actions for on-campus students.

Although her new job will not allow direct work with Residence Life, Taylor will still be affiliated with this department.

"I'll be able to do programs for them, and I'll have more input into long-range/short-range goals in Residence Life," said Taylor. "I'm excited about the new residence hall. [I want to] see it grow."

Taylor will be involved with students, administration, and community people. "I can interact with people now, too," said Taylor.

It will be a change for Taylor, who has her Master's Degree in Student Personnel. She will be working in the Business Affairs Department, mostly in budgeting, and she feels this move is an excellent opportunity for her. She will be able to incorporate her personnel background with her business skills as well.

Director of Auxiliary Services, Charles King, (with whom Taylor will be working closely) feels that Taylor's Student Personnel background and her experience in the residence halls for the past two years will definitely be an asset.

"She'll be working with student groups and still be involved with the students," said King. "I feel real good about Margaret...she's capable of doing much more."

Taylor will miss the people she has lived with for the past two years, but feels that it is time to move on, as well as off campus.

Petitions For Change

Caroline Butts
Journalism Contributor

Adele Cohn, social science major, and her sister Janet Aquino a 1982 market graduate from UNCW initiated the drive to repeal the city of Wilmington's Sunday blue laws.

During Riverfest 1983, Cohn and Aquino noticed that some of the shops downtown were open on Sunday. They began to ask questions because they had been told that their own store in the Cotton Exchange could not be open.

In answer to their questions, they found that the open stores were in violation of the blue laws. Too, no one was taking action against them although Cohn and Aquino had been told they would be fined.

Consequently, Cohn and Aquino decided to take action uniting others who wanted repeal. They asked the City Council to vote the law out, but to date this has not happened, and probably will not, they feel. Now 25000 signatures of City residents in favor of repeal must be collected in order to have a referendum put on the next ballot so the people may vote on it.

Other members of the UNCW community are also involved. Dr. Morgan of the business school, spoke at the "Chase the Blues Away" rally on television and at the last City Council meeting at Thalian Hall in favor of repeal. Too, student George Walker spoke at Thalian pointing out the inconsistencies in the law and suggesting that the people of Wilmington should vote on it.

A registrar from the City Board of Elections was present in the Student union February 29 registering students to vote. Almost 100 signatures were collected toward putting the referendum on the ballot.

Anyone interested in taking petitions around to the different precincts for signatures, please contact Dr. Morgan in Bear Hall.

EYE ON THE WORLD

Pete Mullins

United States: The Senate is currently tangling with the problem of prayer in schools. Well, I'm somewhat confused. Do we, students, not have the right to pray in school now?

The day before spring break I took a stats test and realized I didn't study enough. So right before the test I said a little prayer, "God is good, God is great, please let me make over a 78." I haven't received the test back yet but I don't think the prayer worked. The fact though remains that I prayed in school.

What the Senate is dealing with is the issue of whether the Federal Government should amend the Constitution allowing for organized prayer in the schools.

As I see it, the problem arises in that the conservative groups in the U.S. want an organized and vocal (though some have asked for silent prayer) prayer to be orchestrated by, I would assume, the teacher. This would not be a mandatory prayer, in that each student would not have to recite it, but let's face facts. There are enough boundaries in our world and a student, especially a young one, who did not recite the prayer would be viewed as different.

There are other problems. Who would write the prayer? Would or could the prayer be to God, not all religions pray to GOD?

I'm going to have three conclusions to this section because I think there's so much that could be said.

Conclusion one: The other night I was playing with the cable box on top of my television when I saw Damon Wilson (Sanford and Son), so I stopped pressing the buttons to listen. It turned out to be the PTL CLUB and they were discussing the very same issue of prayer in the schools. Well this gentleman (not Wilson) kept saying that Jesus wants prayer in the schools. This bothered me. Does this man have a Watts line to heaven and can thus talk to Jesus?

Conclusion two: The Constitution calls for a separation of Church and State and guarantees the individual the right of choice concerning all aspects of one's religion. There is no one trying to restrict our right to pray in school, and I contend no one has ever tried to restrict our right. So why is the Federal Government getting involved with the issue?

Conclusion three: Hey guys (SENATORS), there's a deficit that's killing the American economy. How about dealing with it and let us pray when we want, where we want, and if we want.

United States: I wrote this prior to Super Tuesday so I don't know where the candidates stand now. I would assume by now Glenn, Jackson and McGovern have realized they're never going to be the Democrat's candidate for President. I also assume that Mondale and Hart split in the primaries of Tuesday. So where does that leave the candidates as far as who is really ahead. Knowledgeable people are confused by the race and are giving conflicting opinions, so how the heck should I know?

The "Right" Stuff

Jay Stokley

Why don't they call it Reaganomics anymore?

In 1981, President Reagan proposed a tax cut that was just about identical to the Kennedy policy of the 1960's. These tax cuts promised to generate economic growth and create new jobs. Did it?

Inflation is at its lowest level in 15 years. Today, family incomes are worth $2,500 more now than if the 1980 inflation rate had continued.

Unemployment is down to 7.7% overall. An estimated 103.9 million Americans--the most in history--held jobs last week. Economists are saying that this is the best post-recession recovery in the labor market since the early 1950's and they expect it to even get better.

Interest rates have been cut in half under the Reagan Administration. Home mortgage now costs $350 a month less than a few years ago. Now 10 million Americans are able to afford a home.

Why don't they call it Reaganomics anymore? Why because it's working.

candidates SPEAK

I know many of the students are deeply concerned about many of the policies currently being proposed by the university. If I am elected, I will strive to protect the rights of the students and make sure that their opinions and views are heard.

David Forvendel
Candidate for Senator
Junior Class

My name is Buddy Henderson and I am running for the position for SGA Vice-President. I have been in the senate for four years and know that I am qualified for the position.

As a senator in the SGA, I have done several things for the students. The one thing that most students might know about is the discount movie tickets. I am the senator that made the resolution to buy movie tickets from the local theatres and sell them from the information center at cost. Presently I am working on a resolution to have instructor evaluations published, for the students to review.

If the students want something, then I believe the SGA should provide it. Although sometimes things cannot be obtained by the SGA, there are several things that the SGA could provide for the students. The students must show their interest, for what they want. If the right people are elected to the right positions, then the students will get what they want. I am the right person for SGA Vice-President. So please get involved and vote Buddy Henderson for SGA Vice-President.

Buddy Henderson

Last year I told everyone that a vote for me was a vote for change, and now, that has become a reality. Out of 24 different items proposed last June, 19 have been accomplished. The record speaks for itself, but in all honesty, I must say that this has come about due to the hard work of a lot of dedicated people. It's been a great year and the credit goes to the senators, volunteers, and of course, the Executive Officers (I guess I'm biased). There have been leaps and bounds made in opening up the lines of communication and cooperation between the Administration and the Student Government Association, but now the year is over. The change has come and been made, and now it's up to you. I don't really care about where we've come from, but I am very concerned in where we as students (and need I say a very large part of this institution) are going. This student administration and I have done almost everything we can do and in order to proceed, we all must become more involved. We must create a unity that this campus has never seen before -- and that means involvement in government, institutional policies, clubs, organizations, and most importantly, with each other. LET'S GET INVOLVED...or go home. The choice is ours. The first step, no matter how small it may seem, is to VOTE.

Hi, I am Mickey Gahagan your candidate for SGA president. Presently, I am serving as Attorney General for the SGA. As a member of the executive council, I am in tune with many of the problems encountered in the life of a student. I believe it is important for the SGA president to be accessible to the students. The president should be very visible and vocal.

If elected president, one of my first priorities will be making The Seahawk a better medium to the students. The main problem with our university is communication, and The Seahawk should fill this void. I also believe the president should give a weekly report to the students in The Seahawk. This report should contain information concerning current issues and policies, that affect the students, which the administration is presently considering.

If you elect me president I will represent the students needs first and foremost. I, and my administration, will match solutions with your problems. Let's together make UNCW a university to be proud of.

THE SEAHAWK/March 15, 1984

As incumbent Vice-President, I have learned a great deal about this campus and its needs by working hard for student involvement and for student concerns. If re-elected I hope to continue to support the programs that are vital to student life, such as: Campus Radio Station, Library annex, Conversion of the old bookstore into a pub, more academic buildings (soon, not next decade), and better programming. These and other projects need to have constant support if they are to materialize. College is not just academics! We live, work and play here and I know I want to say how, why, when, IF, and in what form we are to do this at UNCW. If re-elected our chances of achieving these programs are greater due to my three years of experience in the SGA. I am making no promises that these will materialize overnight. I would like the chance to fulfill these goals as YOUR Vice President. Please come out and vote March 20-21. Thank you.

Paul W. Bell

RECORD REVIEW

On the surface Cyndi Lauper appears a bit overblown. The fluff and bounce of the chorus line Girls Just Want to Have Fun, her outrageous fashion by the super plate Screamin' Mimi's, the rakish dance movement that suggests: stop this world I want to get off, the Starry Night paint shoes on the back cover of her LP She's so Unusual: all imply a bad artsy-fartsy attempt at pre-packaged charm. The trend has music becoming something less than the high-powered advertising which fakes to sell it. Is she real? Who knows? (What about Dolly Parton? The ambiguity hasn't hurt her.)

Beneath the grooves Money Changes Everything probably answers the questions. A rock song with beach pumping organ fills and swirling synthesizers, it demonstrates the remarkable voice and surprising range of Ms. Lauper. In fact She's so Unusual is literally a soundtrack of styles that reveals the theatrical projection that Cyndi Lauper was born with. A great dance LP if you like the old girl-group formulas mated to the new sound of Prince (When you were Mine), She's so Unusual also features some great songs sung with emotional power.

Time after time, the next single, is a ballad that contrasts the rest of the LP beautifully. "If you're lost you can look and you will find me--time after time, if you fall I will catch you, I will be waiting...time after time." With directness and passion this song becomes an immediate classic silently destroying any preconceived myths of a pop tart loaded with cool whip.

Far from a brilliant album, She's so Unusual does dip into flaky sentimentality with some simpleton lyrics aimed at the dance floor. However, the bubble bursts more than once. All Through the Night shows a sincerity of voice totally captivating.

A quirky, fun LP that hopefully does not take itself too seriously, She's so Unusual is just that and introduces a new rich voice on the music scene. Perhaps the theatre may be the best format for this visual whirling dervish. She may even have some charm after all.

Staff Directs Birthday Celebration

Sophia Jeffries
Staff Writer

Amidst much excitement, ribbon cutting, and festivities, the University Union had its memorable opening celebration on March 26, 1983.

To commemorate the Union's opening, a University Day was held in which there was an open house for the community. A green and gold ribbon surrounded the building. Everyone was asked to bring their own scissors and take part in the ribbon cutting ceremony. According to Linda Moore, Union Director, the ribbon cutting ceremony was to symbolize that the Union belongs to the entire student, faculty, and staff body.

Wednesday, March 21, UNCW will celebrate the Union's first year anniversary with a huge birthday party. The party will start at noon with the unveiling of the Albert Schweitzer portrait.

The portrait is being presented to the UNCW students (past, present and future) by the North Carolina Educational, Historical, and Scientific Foundation Inc.

"The concept behind the Albert Schweitzer International Prizes is to bring great men and women from around the world to UNCW so our students might meet them and have good models to live by," according to Dr. Gerald Shinn.

At 1 p.m., the UNCW Jazz Ensemble will play a short concert on the side lawn. The main event, "Simon Sez" begins at 1:30. Mr. Simon Sez will be here and he will also award prizes to the winners. Also, around noon, the snack bar will have food for sale outside. There will be clowns, free balloons, and the Seahawk bird will be present.

Afterwards, everyone is invited in the courtyard to cut the birthday cake. It will be a three dimensional cake that looks like the Union. The cake will be on display one or two days before the party.

"We will also be asking people to bring mementoes that they would like to see buried in a time capsule which concerns the Union's first year, Linda Moore explained. We hope that in the year 2033, the Union Director will open it so we want the students to bring things which pertain to the Union and or UNCW during this last year. We are leaving the time capsule for posterity."

Although Moore said she could not reveal where the capsule will be buried, she felt "we have all the makings of a great party."

UNCW students, faculty, and staff are invited to attend.

"Mr. Simon Sez" snowed out of a show at UNCW for the University Union's Grand Opening last year, will be the featured performer at the Union's First Birthday Party on Wednesday, March 21st. His unique brand of fun for all includes t-shirt and trophy prizes, with no disqualifications in the first half-hour. You'll love every minute of it with the former "One Man Volleyball Team" of Guinness Book of Records fame. 'Mr. Simon Sez' scores high with his energetic audiences. They rate him 'tops' in showmanship and professionalism in every student activities rating published...corporate groups love him, too!

He's super...great...fantastic...an extraordinary entertainer...one who'll bring tears of laughter to your eyes.

Career Day Next Week

Are you thinking about the future and wondering what kind of job you will have when you finish college? The Career Planning and Placement Center, in conjunction with the Greater Wilmington Chamber of Commerce and Sigma Alpha Beta business fraternity, is proud to present the seventh annual Career Day.

On Thursday, March 22, 1984, from 10:30 a.m. to 3:00 p.m. in the University Union, over 50 potential employers will gather. This is a day for students to talk with various industries, businesses, government agencies, military branches, and graduate schools without the pressures of an interview. All students--freshmen through seniors--are welcome to come and talk with representatives about various areas of employment and what courses and degrees will be most beneficial. The goal of Career Day is to familiarize employers with UNCW students and to give students an insight into employment opportunities which might be available upon graduation.

For additional information, please contact the Career Planning and Placement Center.

Creative Arts News

The newly formed University Players are currently in rehearsals for a one act play and several other short performances to be presented in the middle of March free of charge for the Student Body.

The one act play entitled Gettysburg by Percy MacKaye is set in Connecticut in the year 1912. The play deals with the ideas of independence and self reliance. The main character is an old Union soldier from the battle of Gettysburg. He is confronted with a crisis when he suffers a stroke and is faced with lifelong dependence upon his grandniece.

The playwright, Percy MacKaye, is a little known American Theatre practitioner and innovator of the early 20th century. MacKaye was not only a playwright but an actor, director, and dramaturgist. He was a pioneer in the early realistic American theatre. MacKaye's ideal of a theatre was a community sponsored endeavor dealing with all levels of drama. He believed during his time that American Theatre had to break away from the European styles and create a unique theatre style based on our American heritage.

Anyone interested in the University Theatre or the University Players should contact the Creative Arts department at EX 2440. The University Players meet every Wednesday at 5:00 in the SRO. All students are welcome.

Other happenings in the department are Student Exhibition of Paintings and Drawings on Tuesday, March 20, from 4:00-5:00 in Kenan Hall Gallery. The music division will sponsor a guest artist recital on March 16, in Kenan Hall. Becky Cram will present her Senior recital on Saturday, March 16, in King Auditorium. The North Carolina Symphony will be in Kenan Auditorium March 21. All concerts start at 8:00 pm.

The UNCW Forensics team recently returned from a tournament at Berry College in Mt. Berry, Georgia. The tournament, held February 24-26 was attended by 24 universities from various states, including the Carolinas, Alabama, Florida, and Mississippi. Senior Charles Hall placed fourth in extemporaneous speaking and fifth in impromptu speaking. Junior Mitch Butts, in his first year of competition, finished fourth in persuasive speaking.

The team travels next to Murray State University for a tournament to be held March 9 and 10. All members of the team are gearing up for the Carolina State Championships in two weeks. As a five time winner of the tournament, UNCW will face UNC-Chapel Hill for the first time.

Freshman Honored

On March 2, 1984, The Phi Eta Sigma Honor Society was pleased to recognize Susan Claire Chimiak as the freshman with the highest grade point average for the Fall 1983 semester. President Cari Abatiello presented Susan with a Webster's Collegiate Dictionary on behalf of the Honor Society. Phi Eta Sigma hopes to make this an annual award of prestige for the freshman who demonstrates commendable scholastic achievement at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington. [Contributed by Cari Abatiello, president, Phi Eta Sigma].

The UNCW men's and women's swimming teams closed out its season on a high note as both teams posted the highest finish ever in its respective season-ending championships.

The Seahawk men of coach Dave Allen grabbed a 5th place finish at the prestigious Easterns Championship held on the campus of East Carolina University March 1-3.

Sophomore Mike Bitzenhofer had an excellent meet, placing second and third in two events, while teammates Colin Kueny, Jeff Siggins and Art Hall set new UNCW records during the championship.

The Lady Seahawks returned from the NAIA Nationals in Arkadelphia, Arkansas with a ninth place finish nationally and seven NAIA All-Americans.

Trish Baker, Chrissie Cecil, Lani Driscoll, Denise Hamilton, Evelyn Johnson, Janet Johnson and Colleen Lawrence all earned All-American honors.

"We're very proud of those swimmers and happy to finish ninth in the country in NAIA," coach Dave Allen said. "Our women's program is just beginning to grow and this finish will be a tremendous boost for us."

Winter Sports Finish Season

Having completed its toughest schedule with the youngest team in school history, UNCW's hopes appear to be on target for an expected admission to the ECAC-South next season.

Coach Mel Gibson's squad, composed of seven freshmen, one sophomore, two juniors and two seniors, concluded the 1983-84 slate winning three of its last five games to earn an 11-17 record.

The young Seahawks played seven teams in post-season action (LSU, NC&T, Va., Richmond, NC State, George Mason, and Wake Forest).

UNCW was led by freshman guard George Durham, who scored a school-record 340 points by a first year player. Junior forward Terry Shiver averaged 11.5 points and seven rebounds a game.

Perhaps the most promising aspect of the 83-84 season was the emergence of freshman Brian Rowsom and Clarence Thompson during the second half of the season. A late-season flurry enabled Rowsom to overtake senior Carlos Kelly as the number four scorer on the team, while Thompson averaged 10 points per game over the last six outings. [Courtesy of Sports Information].

The UNC-Wilmington women's basketball team ended its season with a school-record 22 wins, compared to only six losses as the Lady Seahawks reached the semi-finals of the NAIA District 26 State Tournament.

UNCW defeated Lenior-Rhyne in the first round of the state playoffs 81-76. The Lady Seahawks then traveled to Asheville to face nationally-ranked UNC-Asheville and were defeated 78-66. UNCA went on to win the state championship and move on to the NAIA Regionals.

The Lady Seahawks were a perfect 12-0 at home in Trask Coliseum, including an exciting 61-59 win over then-fourth ranked Pembroke State on a buzzer shot by guard Sonya Pickard.

Two Lady Seahawks--Gwen Austin and Jill Amos--were named to the

IF YOU'VE JUST GRADUATED INTO DEBT, HERE'S HOW TO GET OUT.

If you've gone to college on a National Direct Student Loan or a Guaranteed Student Loan or a Federally Insured Student Loan made after October 1, 1975, here's a great way to pay them off.

Get the Army to help you do it. Instead of taking a long, long time paying back that student loan, you spend a short time in the Army, learning a skill, and possibly even accumulating additional money for college (like a graduate degree) via Army College Fund.

If you qualify, each year you serve reduces your indebtedness by one-third, or $1,500, whichever amount is greater. A 3-year enlistment eliminates your debt. It's worth looking into.

Master Degree Program Established

Courtesy UNCW News

WILMINGTON -- At their regular meeting in Chapel Hill, the Board of Governors of The University of North Carolina today approved the establishment of a master of education degree program in special education at UNC-Wilmington. Students could enroll in the program as early as summer session 1984.

UNCW already offers two master's degrees in professional education program in educational in elementary education and the master of education program in educational administration and supervision. On the undergraduate level, the School of Education offers courses leading to the bachelor of arts degree in elementary education and special education, and programs leading to secondary and special subjects teacher certification.

The new master's program has been in the planning stages since 1981 when the Board of Governors authorized work to begin on the curriculum. In anticipation of today's action, two additional faculty members have already been employed. No new resources are required to initiate the program.

Dr. Roy Harkin, dean of the UNCW School of Education, explained that the program is intended to serve special education teachers in disability areas of mental retardation, specific learning disabilities and emotional disturbance.

"This program will prepare teachers of special education for a 'cross-categorical' certificate," Harkin said, adding that this is a relatively new concept in North Carolina for dealing with the mildly handicapped.

"There are a lot of similarities in dealing with the mild to moderately handicapped students. The idea behind this cross-categorical is to emphasize the added role of the special education teacher as a consultant and diagnostician for other regular teachers and parents. This would of course be in addition to the teacher's traditional instructional role," he explained.

The program was planned in response to urgent needs recognized by school administrators, teachers, the North Carolina Department of Public Instruction as well as by University Board of Governors.

"It is a program for which the need is well-documented and pressing," Harkin said. The majority of students expected to enroll in the program will be special education teachers in the Southeastern region of North Carolina.

Board of Trustees Presents Ideas

This past week the Landmark Committee announced its proposal for a package of landmarks at UNCW. A 100 ft. by 100 ft. edicula was one of four proposals selected after several months of discussion and planning by a special committee appointed by the UNCW Board of Trustees.

The proposals are the culmination of six months' work and significant public involvement. The decision on the proposals came after looking at several landmark recommendations. More on page 6.

No News on Bomb Threat

George Walker
News Writer

UNCW Police Chief, Joseph Johnson reports that no new leads have been found in the February 27 bomb hoax directed at the campus library.

A male phoned the campus police station at 1:00 p.m., and along with the bomb location, gave a name he said was his own.

"Three students at UNCW have that name," Johnson said in a telephone interview last week. "All of them were off campus at the time. Unless he confesses, there's little chance of apprehending him." The caller also promised to meet police in the library at 1:30. No one showed.

Members of the county, city, and campus police departments immediately evacuated 400 students and began a quick, but orderly search for the bomb.

Amazingly, a noise similar to that of a bomb was heard in--a bathroom.

Tick. Tick. Tick.

"Yes, there was a ticking sound from one of the bathrooms," Johnson said flatly. "It turned out to be a malfunctioning valve above one of the ceiling tiles."

Johnson and library director Mr. E.W. Huguelet praised the students for their cooperation in the evacuation and expressed relief that no was hurt.

Letters

To the Editor:
I'm writing you and the student body in a deep state of anger and frustration toward those individuals who are blatantly immature and unsportsman-like. President Eric Squires and I, in running for re-election combined our efforts and rented two roll-away signs to promote our campaign. Monday night both signs were vandalized by the selective removal of our names "Squires & Bell", leaving "Again! Get Involved! and Vote Tuesday and Wednesday." Gee, thanks for leaving that much. The signs were not cheap, but we felt they were worth the effort toward a professional effective campaign.

This past year there is no doubt in my mind that we both have sincerely worked hard to improve SGA and UNCW for the benefit of all students on this campus. There are those who chose to ignore our efforts and try and destroy what progress we may have made toward responsible leadership and professionalism for the entire organization for their own selfish motives.

As this is Monday night, I do not know if we will be re-elected, but if we are not, I sincerely hope those who took the letters are caught and made to answer for their crimes. I say crimes because the letters were a retired man's livelihood, and it is a tragedy when the efforts of those who support us were destroyed by stupid pranks.

I have no time to play around with people like this and neither should the rest of you. If I were an employer I would not hire someone who relies on discrediting others instead of promoting their own strengths.

If anything is to come of this, it is to make you care enough not to put up with this! Watch those you put in office and call upon them to help.

If we are re-elected you can count on both of us to continue doing our best in spite of those who think of themselves. If we happen not to be re-elected I'm sorry we could not do more. I do not believe we hate anyone for what they have done because they have to live with themselves.

I'm sorry for all of us, and I pray that tomorrow will bring hope for the future.

Applications for freshman orientation counselors are being accepted now. Anyone interested should apply at the Dean of Students Office before Friday, April 6. Applicants accepted will receive a salary of $75 plus nine meals for the week. There are 12 to 15 slots that have to be filled. Each counselor has to commit herself/himself for the entire orientation period, June 14-15 (Thursday-Friday); June 17-18 (Sunday-Monday); and

June 21-22 Thursday-Friday).

Freshmen will arrive in three separate groups. Counselor will live in the residence halls for each session or for the entire week. Duties of counselors will include a training workshop before orientation. Each counselor will be responsible for checking freshmen in and out of the residence halls, running information booths, information sessions, and tours of the campus.

Stillpoint

By Bob Haywood, Campus Minister

I was touched by Jean-Michel Cousteau's lecture last Tuesday on the Cousteau Society's work on the Amazon River. He described how the outflow of the water-borne nutrients of this great river flowed northward via deep ocean currents and was responsible for the beauty of the Caribbean islands, reefs and fish I had snorkled through just the week before. His perspective on the interrelationship of the world's great rivers and the oceans was new to me and drove home once more the incredibly intertwined web of life of which we are all part on our tiny spaceship called Earth.

Too much do we humans see ourselves standing over against the earth rather than being an important, powerful and all too often, destructive part of a hardy, yet delicately balanced biosphere. The extreme of this "overagainstness" is reflected in the words of "Smiley" Ratliff, coal mine operator and real estate entrepreneur: "God didn't create us to play golf. He created us to conquer the planet. He created us for victory!" The Cousteau Society, the Sierra Club and many other voices are telling us that we are doing that: conquering the planet, but we are killing it at the same time.

Smiley is wrong. God created us to live in harmony, not only with Him, not only with each other, not only with ourselves, but also with this biosphere Earth. The Earth grew us, as surely as it grows a tree or a dolphin or a reef. Can you grasp that? The God I know created not just humans, but the whole intricate system, and we are part of it all. This planet is our home, and when we use the rivers and the oceans as society's sewage dump, we do ourselves harm.

Rather than a warning against pollution, this is written as an invitation to wonder. Spring is here. Beach weather is exercising its seductive powers! As azaleas bloom and waves roll in upon the beach with incessant majesty, drink in the wonder of it all. Stand in awe of your connectedness to sand and wave, flower and star. Know that seeing beauty touches the beauty in you so that your life is richer and fuller. Honor the earth and you honor yourself and God. Live gently in your planetary home and perhaps, then, we shall all live.

Rape Awareness Known to Students

Jane Knight
Journalism Contributor

What is rape? Who is the victim? How many people think about it? Especially students at UNCW? As UNCW continues to expand this issue needs to be considered and understood in more depth.

When various students were asked to define rape or what personal perception or rape was they answered in the following ways:

"Sexual molesting."

When someone forces someone else to perform sexual acts without their consent."

"Violation of one's privacy."

According to Webster's Dictionary, the definition of rape is "to have sexual intercourse with a woman without her consent and chiefly by force and deception."

Moreover, there are several misconceptions that accompany this crime. One, is that some women "invite" rape by negligently leaving keys in the car, hitchhiking, or leaving car doors unlocked.

Another misconception is that rape is a spontaneous crime. The rapist usually plans his attack ahead of time when the victim will unable to receive help. Also, 48 percent of rape cases involve victims previously known to the rapist.

Finally, another misunderstood idea is that only young attractive women are raped. However, victims range from 18 months to 80 years in age. The victim of a rape could be anyone.

Even though no successful rapes have been reported on UNCW campus in the past year the possibility remains of such an occurrence taking place.

There are several methods of prevention that can be followed to help anticipate rape. (1) Use the buddy system--always be with someone. Make it a habit to travel with another person. (2) Use the transport system--call the campus police to escort you back to your destination especially if it is a long distance or late at night. (3) Avoid jogging or running late at night especially alone, and if you do, take the well lighted area or path. (4) Take a self-defense class such as karate or judo. There are several options to choose from to help prevent being raped.

Rape is a serious crime and many victim's lives are seriously threatened and disrupted. The consequences that are suffered range from physical and emotional abuse to the possibility of death.

However, UNCW female students and faculty can better protect themselves by understanding rape better. Contact Pat Leonard for more information concerning "Rape Prevention and Awareness."

Teaching Awards

Courtesy UNCW News Bureau

UNCW alumni, faculty, and currently enrolled students are invited to submit nominations for the Board of Trustees Teaching Excellence Award, presented annually in July. Nominations will be accepted until 5 p.m. on Friday, March 30, 1984.

The Teaching Excellence Award, first presented in 1978 to Dr. B. Frank Hall in the Philosophy and Religion Department, was begun to exemplify UNCW's commitment to teaching excellence. As stated in the purpose of the award, recipients shall manifest "excellence as persons who have made and continue to make significant contributions to higher education through their dedication and service to students."

In addition to the distinction, the award includes $1,000 cash.

Nominees must be current members of the UNCW faculty who have been teaching at least half-time for five semesters or more. The nominee must have demonstrated a mastery of and enthusiasm for the subject taught, resoluteness in maintaining high academic standards, genuine interest in each student's intellectual and creative development, and an ability to foster respect for diverse points of view and openness to learning.

Individuals wishing to make a nomination may contact the Office of the Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs, Room 111, Alderman Hall, UNCW ext. 2137.

Past recipients include Frank Allen, 1979; Steve Harper, 1980; Gerald Shinn, 1981; William F. Adcock (posthumously), 1982; and Betty Jo Welch, 1983.

EYE ON THE WORLD

Pete Mullins

It's 2:00a.m. and my column is due in the morning at 8:00. What the heck am I going to write about? It's time for,
OFF THE WALL IDEAS ON POLITICS.

1. What would happen if we allowed the incumbents, Presidential and Congressional, to be re-elected without an election? We could take the $30 million or so dollars that the Candidates for President will receive in Federal matching funds and add it to the millions that the Congressmen will be spending and pay off a large part of the national debt.

I realize this would mean keeping Uncle Ronnie in office another four years, but the tradeoffs might be worth it. Besides, unless something drastic happens, Uncle Ronnie is going to be there anyway. Oh, I just realized that Jesse would also remain in office, so forget I mentioned it.

2. I was in Washington over Spring-Break and decided to stop in and see Uncle Ronnie. Talk about taking things too serious. I assume because of what I've said in my column, (I can't think of any other reason), he wouldn't see me. Well let me tell ya, he's not getting a birthday card from me this year.

3. Dear Mr. Meese:

I've been saving my money for several months and would like to lend you some. By the way I'd prefer a job that pays at least $100,000 per year. (Explanation: Meese has been accused of helping friends find very good jobs after they loaned either him or his wife money.)

The "Right" Stuff

Jay Stokley

College Students, you should be more politically involved than you are. You are the future for the United States whether you like it or not. It is time for you to make a stand. Your country is calling you.

There is a group at school called "College Republicans" who are trying to halt the movement of Leftist guerillas on campus. They are not Hitler's renegades as some people might think. They are just normal college students working for the "Right" party.

Instead of sitting around and watching the world go by, they are out working to make a better world. I'm not saying go out and join College Republicans, even though it is the better party, what I am saying is get involved.

If there are any individuals interested in College Republicans, please come by the meetings Thursday night at 7:30, Student Union, room 207.

If there are any questions you would like to ask about political candidates or political issues, please ask.

Two English faculty members will be honored at Guilford College in Greensboro on April 13-14. Dr. Clark Holtzman and Mr. Richard Long will travel to Greensboro for readings and workshops in conjunction with their poetry which has been selected for publication.

Holtzman's "The King of Spain" and Long's "In the Chicken Coop" will appear in Portfolio '84 which will be published in May.

The purpose of Poetry Center Southeast was to select 20 poets "who represent the diversity and strength of poetry in North Carolina." There were 100 people involved and 300 submissions.

Both poets, along with other faculty members and members of the Writer's Forum, will be reading selections at the Spring Reading Series.

Fraternity Makes Comeback

The Chi Phi fraternity is making a comeback.

Since the burning down of their house on Wrightsville Beach in January, money has been raised and much progress has been made.

President Brett Knowles informs us that the new house is expected to be completed this August. It will house 14 brothers, five more than the previous one.

The money for the new house is provided by alumni from Atlanta National Headquarters. More help could come from a pending insurance settlement. Yet the fraternity has held numerous fund raisers such as car washes and bake sales.

The new house has an off campus location on Rose Avenue to maintain fraternity independence. The architect is from Charlotte, NC.

Knowles says that the fraternity is "hanging in there and staying at the top." The old house is due to be torn down when the insurance is settled.

History Department Presents Films

The UNCW History Department and the UNCW Historical Society will present three films this spring for viewing by the university community and the public. The free films will be followed by discussions led by members of the history department.

"Animal Farm," a 1954 release, will be shown first at 7:30 p.m., Thursday, March 29, in the second floor auditorium of Randall Library on campus. This dramatic animated film is based on George Orwell's 1945 satire of the same name which treats the Russian Revolution of Stalinism.

The second film in the series is "Day After Trinity," which will be shown at 7:30 p.m., Wednesday, April 4, in the library auditorium. This 1981 film traces the birth of the nuclear age through the life and work of J. Robert Oppenheimer, including recently declassified footage of the Los Alamos community which, under Oppenheimer's direction, produced the first atomic bomb.

"Night and Fog" which will conclude the series at 7:30 p.m. on Thursday, April 12, depicts the nightmare universe of the Nazi concentration camps during World War II. This 1955 film is by Alain Resnais.

THE LANDMARK

THE UNIVERSITY OF NORTH CAROLINA AT WILMINGTON

LANDMARK PROPOSED

Donna Holden
Managing Editor

State has a Bell Tower. Chapel Hill has an Old Well. What does UNCW have?

The Board of Trustees presented a package of four landmarks representing a culmination of ideas from suggestions made by UNCW students, alumni, faculty, and staff, as well as the general public.

The main landmark will be located in the future University Commons beside the Union. This 100 ft. by 100 ft. landmark, called an edicula, will include a horizontal ground-level map of the Lower Cape Fear Region made of inlaid marble and granite. Water will flow in certain places representing the Cape Fear River and lakes in neighboring counties down a small waterfall into a three-quarter circular reflecting pool.

Surrounding the edicula will be brick arches perpendicular to a series of granite or marble monoliths, each containing engraved accounts of principal historical events relevant to this region.

This major landmark would provide "the uniqueness of a huge map, the pleasantness of running water, and a spacious plaza-like area that should be accepted readily by the student body and public alike." The concept of the proposed UNCW edicula is based on the Western Plaza Monument in Washington, D.C., depicting L'Enfant's Plan of Washington on a large granite plaza, but has been "adapted into a totally new design."

Another landmark presented by the committee is a tall, nautical-style flagpole situated in the traffic circle visible from College Road. This will incorporate the University's founding date, seal, and motto, and will be visible to those on and off campus at night as well as during the day, due to special lighting.

Board of Trustees Presents Package

The third landmark will be in the exact center (near the present flagpole and cannon) of Alderman, Hoggard, and Hinton James—the three original buildings on campus. Other than the idea that it should impart the feeling of “striving for perfection, high moral values, and an aesthetically uplifting feeling,” there have been no specific suggestions for plans presented.

Trask Coliseum will also house a landmark. Memorializing the University’s “Seahawk” athletic symbol, the large metal sculpture will be mounted on a case directly in front of the Coliseum. The final recommendation by the committee was a gazebo in front of the Union large enough for a band, which will also serve as a meeting place for students and campus visitors.

“...striving for perfection, high moral values, and an aesthetically uplifting feeling...”

The Landmark Committee Chairman, Samuel D. Bissette, said that the main landmark will follow the “traditional architecture of the University. The brick arches will be similar to the arches of the library.”

Bissette said the committee received the assignment last August and took recommendations from “news media...university family...[and] the community which represent combined efforts.”

With not one, but four landmarks, UNCW should be able to emphasize educational growth as well as the physical growth of the university.

Concert

The UNCW Concert Choir and the UNCW/Community Orchestra will perform W.A. Mozart's Requiem at 8 p.m. Friday, March 23 in Kenan Auditorium on the University Campus. General admission for the performance is $3.00 for adults, $1.00 for students, and free for UNCW students. Tickets are available from chorus members and at the door.

Both groups will also perform the work at 3 p.m., Sunday, March 25, in Hatch Auditorium, North Carolina Baptist Assembly, at Fort Caswell. Sponsors for this performance are the Southport/Oak Island Chamber of Commerce, the Arts Council of the Lower Cape Fear, and the Brunswick County Arts Council.

Tickets for the Ft. Caswell performance are available at the Southport Chamber of Commerce (457-6764), Seaway Printing, and from members of the Brunswick County Arts Council. Cost is $3.00 for adults in advance, $4.00 at the door; senior citizens and students, $2.00.

Fraternity Works for Big Buddy

Courtesy Alpha Phi Omega

Alpha Phi Omega, Upsilon Nu Chapter, would like to thank the students of UNCW for their contributions during their Mile of money for the benefit of Big Buddy. Students contributed a total of $219.00 to benefit Bit Buddy of New Hanover County.

The money raised will be used for improving the quality of the programs sponsored by them and to support special recruitment drives for new volunteers. As a result of increased funding through the Governor's one-on-one initiative, fifteen children mainly males between the ages of 10 and 17, will be referred to Big Buddy by the New Hanover County court system for assignment to the volunteers.

The Big Buddy program needs mature, dependable, understanding adults over 18 who can devote four hours per week to their little buddies for a minimum of a year. Following training, the volunteer provides the needed attention to the child through shared, positive experiences which help prevent further occurrences of problem behavior.

Carol Manning, Big Buddy Coordinator, is now available on a full time basis to train new volunteers and to monitor the progress of ongoing matches. A volunteer training session and orientation for new applicants is scheduled for Wednesday, March 28, in the meeting room of the New Hanover County Library. A light meal will be served at 5:30 p.m. followed by training from 6 p.m. until 9 p.m. Interested persons may call 763-5189 for more information. The Big Buddy program is a service of Family Service, a United Way Agency.

Cafeteria Issues

Heard

Debra Turnbull
Journalism Contributor

The cafeteria at UNCW isn't everybody's idea of a fine dining establishment, but nearly everyone who goes to school here has sampled the food at one time or another.

Many questions come to mind when talking about the cafeteria. Marcella Williams, who works with the ARA Food Service answered a few.

Ms. Williams said that the meals we eat are planned at the beginning of the year, with adjustments made periodically according to whether the students care for the food or not.

She said that a food service is contracted every five years, and qualified cooks prepare and serve the food we eat. Students are also employed and paid by ARA.

Many students wonder if the cafeteria is clean. Ms. Williams stated that health inspections are held quarterly by the county and annually by the state.

Williams said that these inspections include such things as clean food handling, wearing hair nets and gloves, and checking the freshness of food.

She did state that UNCW has always passed these inspections with an "A" on an A,B,C,D,F scale.

When asked what he thought of the food, one student said the doughnuts and ice cream were edible. Another stated, "Breakfast is the best meal, probably because it's not that hard to fix."

Still others felt the food wasn't very good. It was said to be greasy and mostly starch.

Nevertheless, Williams reported that on the average, seven to eight hundred students eat lunch and dinner, and five hundred eat breakfast. This is not including the Student Union.

So, despite the negative comments, obviously plenty of people enjoy the cafeteria food.

Film Festival Held

Sophia Jeffries
Staff Writer

On March 28, "Hester Street," a Yiddish film, directed by Joan Micklin Silver, will be shown in Bryan Auditorium in Morton Hall at 7:30 p.m.

"It is the story of a turn of the century immigrant Jewish family in New York City, which focuses on the Jewish woman's struggle to become autonomous as she comes to grips with being an American woman," said Dr. Berkeley.

Afterwards, Dr. Berkeley and Dr. Barbara Waxman will lead the discussion.

All three films are foreign with English subtitles and are directed by women. However, the issues they deal with are universal, thereby providing the viewer with a glimpse of the lives of women in other cultures.

"I think that we all face similar joys, needs, and struggles. Even though we are dealing with foreign women, the films show that we all have similar concerns," said Mimi Cunningham, Public Information Officer.

This is the third year UNCW is sponsoring activities in observance of National Women's History Week.

"Last year we had a day-long session on the theme "Women and Power" which involved presentations by different members of the community and a discussion afterwards," explained Cunningham. This year the choice of films place more emphasis on women internationally.

According to Dr. Berkeley, assistant professor of history and coordinator of the film festival, turnout for the first film was "phenomenal."

The major theme unifying the three films concerns an ongoing struggle for the women as they try to adjust to certain roles in the modern world. Also, issues of work, marriage, friendship, having children, and problems with men and the women's response to these issues are explored in the films.

"We have focused on things women share cross-culturally, and also how people relate to one another across class lines," said Berkeley.

The films are sponsored by several UNCW departments as well as community groups, including the YWCA, The Wilmington Chapter of the National Organization for Women, the New Hanover Council on the Status of Women, and the Task Force against Family Violence. After each film a discussion is led by a group of UNCW faculty.

Keeping Fit

George Walker
Sports Editor

Playboy models Victoria Cooke and Bobbi Byrd stood motionless in a cramped office room at the SPA Health Club on Oleander drive last Friday afternoon. To kill time before a dinner date and a subsequent plane flight, they pegged through an old exercise magazine, avoided the fine print, and individually assessed the qualities of their co-worker's photographs. One evoked a particularly aroused response.

"She's an anorexic. I'm sure of it," observed Cooke, disgusted at the frail picture. Byrd grinned. "Look at her arms. She's gone."

Sixty minutes earlier the two single blonds engineered an exercise routine with 40 participants (40 more watched). These stargazed persons, some of them UNCW students, jammed the mirror-clad aerobics room for a salt inducing workout and a 20/20 glimpse of Cooke and Byrd. They charmed the pleased audience with a convincing display of physical conditioning and an unending enthusiasm. Not the least of whom was UNCW basketball player Terry Shiver and SGA candidate Mickey Cahagan.

Byrd and Cooke are travelling extensively to promote their exercise program which emphasizes muscular fitness, endurance power, and aerobic capacity. Cooke, a former track and field star who can press 50 consecutive men's pushups, hopes to publish a fitness book and begin a clothing line.

They enjoy their association with Playboy and are thankful for the opportunities it has opened for them. Byrd will appear (clothed) in the May issue, and Cooke was playmate of the month in August 1980. But both happily point to other career fields they could have pursued.

"I graduated from the University of Arizona with a business finance degree," recalls 26-year-old Cooke. "Then I moved to Hawaii. It was there on a beach that a friend of Hugh Hefner spotted me. The rest has turned out great." Cooke now resides in Manhattan Beach, California.

Byrd, 25, graduated from West Charlotte High School and earned a college degree in nursing. She still calls North Carolina home.

Besides modeling, her work entails promotions for Stroh's beer, car race appearances, and TV shows. (PM Magazine will air a segment on them soon.)

Her physical beauty, she says, is maintained with "lots of hard exercise and a consistent diet of carbohydrates, poultry, seafood, vegetables, and no red meat." And yes, she does cheat now and then.

No Dogs Allowed

Courtesy UNCW Safety Office

In the interests and welfare of the majority of people who are associated with and who work for the University it has become necessary to establish the following rules concerning the presence of dogs on our campus.

The General Basic Ruling is: NO DOGS SHALL BE BROUGHT ON CAMPUS. The exceptions to this ruling are cited below:

1. "Seeing Eye" dogs in the performance of their duty.
2. Dogs who accompany their masters enroute to another destination and remain in a car. Under NO circumstances shall a dog run loose or be brought into any dormitory, library or any other type of building on campus.

(Although dogs are referred to specifically, this policy applies to all "pets" in the broad context of the word.)

Cousteau Spoke to Full House

Jean-Michel Cousteau spoke to a full house crowd last week and introduced his exploration's latest achievements and adventures on the Amazon River.

Many spectators were in awe as Cousteau presented a lecture as well as amazing film footage of the Calypso's voyage.

Although the group experienced minor technical difficulties with the film presentation, Cousteau was good natured and ad-libbed throughout the waiting period.

There were Marine Biology students from UNCW as well as people from the general public. Everyone enjoyed the presentation, and Cousteau entertained questions from the audience at the end.

For all majors, whether Biology or not, everyone present was inspired and felt as though they gained a great deal from his presentation.

Museum of World Cultures Presents Display

Donna Holden
Managing Editor

A display in Alderman Hall has become the sixth presented to The Museum of World Cultures at UNCW.

The cephalopod shell research display has been presented by Bill and Zida Kibler from Shallotte, NC. The display, elaborating on the evolution of cephalopods from their beginning, contains local species as well as those from ancient seas.

The Kiblers have done the majority of their research through books.

Every porcelain specimen in the display is natural size and was sculptured by their grandson, Duane Schily, and painted by Lydine Schily and Zida Kibler.

The Kiblers state that, "we are only laymen making a sincere effort to contribute what knowledge and talents we have so others may be inspired to look around them and see the wonder of nature."

Dr. Gerald Shinn, founder of the Museum, says that "the idea is to put a case in every building with a different culture or display of some type [in each]. Some day we hope to have a building [of our own]."

The University Union celebrates its first birthday on Wednesday, March 21, 1984.

Board Nullifies Protest

George Walker
News Writer

A randomly chosen four member panel voted 3-1 Monday night to negate protests filed against SGA presidential candidate Eric Squires, the university election board, and alleged faulty election procedures. The panel did, however, compile a list of recommendations for future elections. The charges were filed with Dean of Students, Gary Juhan by two of Squires' rival candidates, Tim Flaherty and Mickey Gahagan; also filing were former SGA President Steve Schmidt and Mike Godfrey who also asked that the March 20, 21 elections be nullified. There charges included: 1) A prejudiced attitude of the elections board to Squires. They explained that because SGA presidents choose the board members, unbiased elections cannot be held. (Squires is an incumbent.) One argument pointed to the dating relationship between Squires and the chairperson of the election board, Cindy Holt. 2) Oversized posters used by Squires' campaign and biased officials working at election booths. 3) The negligence of booth workers who failed to mark off some ID's. Thus multiple voting could have been done.

Squires and his supporters answered these allegations effectively in the boards eye, which decided if in fact infractions occurred they were not substantial enough to swing the election. Their defense stated that:

1) All SGA presidents, including Schmidt, have chosen the election board, 2) Cindy Holt, chairperson, went out of her way to avoid any campaign details associated with Squires, 3) That there were ID's not marked at booths, but any of the candidates could have benefited,

Running On Empty

George Walker News Writer

Many junior high schools have one. Most high schools do, too. And you have to search far and wide for a deprived four year University that lacks one. Yet, the depressing questions lingers. When is UNCW going to join the big leagues and build a track?

According to Anthropology professor Dr. Jim Sabella no timetable is set. Numerous faculty and administrative personnel are backing a proposed fundraising campaign for the estimated $300-$400 thousand dollar project.

Current UNCW athletic director Bill Brooks has tried in vain to collect funds since 1965. "I have applied for state grants every year," he says. "But it always seems to come back low on the priority list. Brooks adds that he could have constructed a track for as little as $60,000

NCAA Player of the Year, Michael Jordan, brought his bag of tricks to UNCW Saturday afternoon and entertained a crowd of about 300.

Hometown Basketball Star Visits Campus

George Walker
News Writer

The most trying moment last Saturday for Michael Jordan of UNC didn't occur in the sun-baked afternoon, when he played a pickup game behind Dorm '79, but that evening when he faced the mammoth task of reaching his car. "So many people," he said as the autograph and picture hounds mercilessly pressed upon him. "This is a surprise."

For the crowd of 300, the biggest surprise was the mere presence of the NCAA Player of the Year. Indeed, with the Tar Heels' 62-58 season ending loss to Indiana Thursday night, Jordan faced his first free weekend in months. "I guess it wasn't meant to be," he said of the No. 1 ranked Tar Heels hopes for a National Championship.

Jordan had faced such hopes before. In just short of two years, the muscular 6'6" junior had given Coach Dean Smith his first National title with a game winning jumper against Georgetown in New Orleans. He had made consensus All-American twice. At times, he dominated play with his offensive and defensive versatility. And this season, he captured almost every individual award available.

In North Carolina, kids practice roundball almost as soon as they learn to write. Now, with the Summer Olympics nearing its start, the Laney graduate will carry the fervent hopes of his people to Los Angeles.

Understandably, these credentials were not lost to the astonished audience that roared to a loud report at the sight of Jordan's

Letters

To the Editor:

The times they are a-changing, as we all know. But all change is not necessarily better. Since coming to UNCW the fall of '79, campus life and student freedom seem to have been steadily eroding away.

We used to have on-campus movies, good movies every month for just $.50 with a student ID. I recall a couple of special ones offered as "to be announced." Of course it was no secret that these were X-rated and were good for more than a few laughs. The Erotic Adventures of Zorro was one of those classics. Even the non-ID carrying people from the outside world were welcome if they had a dollar. But so much for the movies.

1980 or '81 saw the closing down of our campus radio station. Who really wants to listen to WHSL? The story on why it was closed was not entirely clear, but it supposedly involved students, marijuana, and campus cops. But administration has the final say so in these matters, and well, the station had to be closed down. But so much for the campus radio.

We now have a student union that is more like a library. We need a permit to drink alcohol. Where-o-where is this campus going?

ACCEPTED APPLICATIONS

Applications for freshman orientation counselors are being accepted now. Anyone interested should apply at the Dean of Students Office before Friday, April 6. Applicants accepted will receive a salary of $75 plus nine meals for the week. There are 12 to 15 slots that have to be filled. Each counselor has to commit herself/himself for the entire orientation period, June 14-15 (Thursday-Friday); June 17-18 (Sunday-Monday); and

June 21-22 (Thursday-Friday).

Freshmen will arrive in three separate groups. Counselor will live in the residence halls for each session or for the entire week. Duties of counselors will include a training workshop before orientation. Each counselor will be responsible for checking freshmen in and out of the residence halls, running information booths, information sessions, and tours of the campus.

Recently, and this says it all, an ex-class president noted that a good logo for the new union could be, simply, a picture of a screw. It sounds like a winner to me.

Eric Johnson

grand entourage of slam dunks. Early in the scrimmage, shades of a game-ending jam at Maryland were flashed. Jordan crossed the foul line, then exploded his way to satellite proportions. He then cupped the ball with his large right hand, and hanging in a gravity-defying manner, mashed the ball through the hole with his palm. When his tongue rolled out of his mouth it became obvious that even he could marvel at himself.

Antics like these only served to strengthen the resolve of George Durham and Larry Jordan. Durham, a UNCW freshman who is intimidated by no one, earned Jordan's respect with his own repertoire of finger rolls and jams. Five-foot seven inch Larry Jordan, a UNCW junior, also drew acknowledgement from his younger brother Michael with a remarkable 360 degree stuff.

But the day belonged to Michael Jordan. And when he finally untangled himself from the multitudes to depart for his parents' home, it was clear that he had made history. Perhaps years from now, green freshmen will walk across the asphalt basketball courts, and they will dream of duplicating the spectacular moves that have already become legendary in these parts.

Editorial

The SGA is no longer a body of students that represents all the other students on campus, rather it is a group of students that continue to fight among themselves or any other club or organization that gets in their way.

Most students on campus are proud not to be associated with the SGA and would be even prouder to know the group didn't exist. Many students as well as club leaders, have made these feelings known. Also several senators Sunday night at a special hearing made it clear that they were fed up with the actions the SGA was taking among themselves, whereas their job to serve the students was being left behind.

Susan Goodrum, a state employee, has now taken it upon herself to sit in at many of these student meetings which are student funded. She also furnishes information, although its sometimes nothing but lies to aid one of the sides in conflict. I think its time she did her 8 to 5 job and left SGA politics to itself. I believe if she worked on what the state has hired her to do then there wouldn't be such a delay and mix up in paper works.

Some of the executive officials have taken it upon themselves to look the other way when clubs being attacked - especially when the issues at stake are not ones that are just cause for drastic measures such as the resignation of a club leader. Is this a leader?

Since January, I can't list any real progress the SGA has carried out by the students and still this issue has seen further the needs and wants of the students.

However, through all this I must say I have seen some very hard working senators, ones that do not allow themselves to be caught up in personal conflicts. These senators have been a definite asset to student government as well as to the students on campus but I'm afraid the efforts these senators make are being swallowed up by witch hunts, personal fighting and anything else except to support the students' ideas and needs on this campus. Hats off to the few senators that try to make it all work.

Young Democrats are having a Voter Registration Session on Tuesday and Wednesday, April 3 and 4 from 11 - until 2 at the Student Union.

Stillpoint

By Bob Haywood,

"In the name of God, in the name of this suffering people...stop the repression." Thus spoke Archbishop Oscar Romero one day before his assassination while celebrating mass on March 24, 1980. His cry for justice and mercy for the poor and dispossessed had become too dangerous for those in power. In the four years since his death, tens of thousands more have died in El Salvador and Guatemala, killed by the forces of greed and corruption that rule those countries. Disappearances, torture, and political murder have become all too common occurrences in neighboring Honduras. And in Nicaragua, hundreds of poor farmers, church workers, students, and others have died at the hands of counter-revolutionary forces seeking to overthrow the government.

Many Christians and other people of conscience throughout Central America have worked to continue the witness for life and human dignity that cost Archbishop Romero his own life. Increasingly, they are appealing to members of the religious community in the United States to end the U.S. intervention in their countries. U.S. actions in Central America are often described as being necessary to promote democracy and protect U.S. national security. But through the eyes of many Central Americans, they seem to increase the suffering and raise the possibility of a wider war.

It becomes a matter who you believe in determining what position you take. I choose to believe my Christian brothers and sisters in Central America who are asking that Christians pray for them in their suffering and seek to stop our government's intervention in their nations. I believe deeply that our nation's policies are wrong and immoral. I invite you to call upon our legislative leaders to oppose US military aid to Central America, halt CIA supported attacks against Nicaragua; oppose direct US military intervention in El Salvador and Nicaragua and stop the deportation of Salvadoran and Guatemalan refugees. I maintain and defend this not out of political analysis but as an act of faithfulness.

Azalea Festival Plans Made

Caroline Butts

Journalism Contributor

Nothing to do you say? Well, the 37th Annual Azalea Festival will be held April 5 to April 8 right here in Wilmington. The four days will be packed with a variety of entertainment and celebrities.

Highlighting this year's festival are concerts by Barbara Mandrell Thursday evening at 7:30 and 7:30, and Johnny Mathis on Saturday at 8 p.m. All three performances will be at Trask Coliseum with the Queen's Coronation and Pageant following Johnny Mathis on April 7.

The Clyde-Beatty Cole Brothers Circus will raise their Big Top at 7 a.m. on April 6 on the corner of Shipyard and Carolina Beach Roads. They will also have a 4:30 and 8 p.m. show Friday, and several more on Saturday and Sunday.

Don't miss the downtown parade which starts at 9:30 a.m. on Saturday. People begin arriving at dawn carrying lawn chairs and coolers hoping to catch a glimpse of the Azalea Queen (This year it is Sharon Wyatt, otherwise known as Tiffany on General Hospital) or maybe even a celebrity.

Following the parade of marching bands and colorful floats, stroll along the riverfront and experience the smells of tempting food, enjoy the arts and craft show or take a boat ride up the river.

For those interested in historic houses and lovely gardens, there is an Historic Tour as well as a Garden Tour. These will be open from 2 to 5 p.m. Saturday and Sunday. The gardens will be open Friday, Saturday, and Sunday for your enjoyment.

The world's largest free horse show can be seen at Hugh McCrae Park on Saturday and Sunday.

For tickets or further information, the Azalea Festival Office is next to Olan Mills studio in Long Leaf mall. It is open from 10:30 to 5:30 Monday through Saturday.

APARTMENT WANTED

The Wilmington Baptist Association wishes to sub-lease a furnished apartment for ten weeks beginning May 27, 1984, through August 5, 1984. A one bedroom apartment will be sufficient as a missionary couple will be living in the apartment with no children.

The Association will pay all rent, utilities, and other expenses for the time period needed or will negotiate with the original renter. We will assume all responsibilities for the apartment for the time period of the sub-lease contract.

On April 3rd and 4th at 8:00 p.m. in King Hall, the UNCW Faculty Women's Network and Pat Leonard, Associate Dean of Students will sponsor the film "College Can be Killing" for public viewing.

Following the presentation of the film on April 3rd, a discussion will be led by Pat Leonard, and on April 4th a discussion will be led by Dr. Sue Lamb, Ms. Sue Boice, Ms. Monica Maelwald and Ms. Faith Lunsford.

All students are invited to attend and to bring their parents.

EYE ON THE WORLD

Pete Mullins

Washington: Don't feel too sorry for Uncle Ronnie because he didn't get a Constitutional Amendment on prayer in the public schools. He may have lost the battle, but he helped himself in winning the war.

The conservative element in this country, who has been giving the bulk of their support to Uncle Ronnie, has been clammering for a sign of strong conservative measures. They got that sign in Reagan's fight for prayer.

By showing his concern for the well-being of students (cough, cough) Uncle Ronnie can point to this stand at election time and say, "See what a good boy I am."

Uncle Ronnie already had the conservative vote (What's that? Did someone say the fanatic vote? Now don't call them that, they can't help it) but some insurance won't hurt.

Washington: I'm going to be nominated to the Supreme Court, at the first vacancy, if I can raise another $5,000. Edwin (Meese) said he could just about assure me of the position if I can loan him $10,000.

I know that sounds like a lot of money, but heck, it's a lifetime job and you don't have to work very hard.

Also, I don't have to worry about being confirmed by the Senate, if they could confirm Meese (although they have yet to do so) they'll confirm anyone.

Washington: Uncle Ronnie phoned the other night and apologized for not seeing me over spring break. He said he was very busy. I think he just wants that $5.00 I always give him in his birthday card.

The "Right" Stuff

Jay Stokley

Taxes, taxes: everybody hates taxes. I guess everybody will agree with me on the issues of taxes. Nobody likes the idea of the government sticking their big hands into our paychecks and then put it to Lord knows what use. I am not saying get rid of taxes, I am just saying that a man should be able to make a decent living with out half of his paycheck disappearing before he gets to see it.

Has anybody heard Mondale speak lately? He has said-and I quote-"I will raise taxes." Great. That's just what I need...a smaller paycheck. I would tell you how Gary Hart stands, but all I know is that he has new ideas. I have no idea what they are. I hope one day he tells us. Who knows, I might like some of them. But I doubt it.

Reagan, on the other hand, has lowered taxes since he has been in office. I don't think that I can get used to someone else raising them again.

Regulations Changed

Donna Holden

Managing Editor

According to Sgt. Jordan of the UNCW Campus Police, several changes will be made concerning traffic on campus on Thursday April 5, during the Barbara Mandrell concert for the Azalea Festival.

Since there will be approximately 10,000 people attending both shows, there will be several adjustments made. This traffic plan will go into effect at 6:30 p.m. on Thursday evening.

Riegel Rd. will be blocked from "B" St. to "F" St. until approximately 11:30 p.m.

Jordan says that Campus Police would appreciate it if students would concentrate on lots D and H if possible. "This might be an inconvenience, but it would be easier for us to get everyone in and out."

On-campus students are asked to use Wood Dale Dr. (between Hewlett and '79) to enter and exit campus. If any on-campus students have night classes or need to use the library or Union, they are asked to walk rather than drive.

Off-campus students with night classes are asked to use Randall Dr. and the lots in that area to park. The main event will be on Riegel Rd., with "B" St. being made one-way from New Riegel Rd. to Randall Dr.

Campus Police Enforce Law

David Wood
Journalism Contributor

Driving While Intoxicated is a serious offense. And the consequences of getting caught is something that no one wishes to happen to them, especially college students.

The campus police can and will give DWI's—not only to students here, but to anyone caught driving while intoxicated through the campus. So everyone is taking the chance of getting caught.

Being a campus police department does not change anything in the format of giving a DWI. The campus officers follow the identical procedure of the municipal county police or the highway patrol.

If a student is caught by a police officer, they will be arrested and taken to the Sheriff's Department. There they are to take the breathalyzer and sent to the magistrate's office where the outcome is decided.

If a student blows a .10 or more, or refused to take the test, he/she can lose his/her license for ten days.

In the case that a student cannot meet his conditions for release, he can be put in jail. And usually two to three weeks after the arrest a student will end up in court for the offense.

Johnson stated, "Since January 1, five people have been arrested by campus police and several other students by the city and beach police."

So the DWI law is in effect, even in campus life. And the outcome of an arrest remains the same.

Does your experience in computers need to be "booted" up?

The UNCW OFFICE OF SPECIAL PROGRAMS can help! You can successfully learn how to use a microcomputer and write BASIC computer programs in our 12 hour hands-on course without the pressure of outside assignments or grades.

Course title: COMPUTER AWARENESS FOR THE COLLEGE STUDENT

Course dates: April 2 through April 30.

Course time: Monday Nights 6:30 - 9:30

Course fee: $35.00 (UNCW students with valid ID)

a few years back but relented for immediate concerns such as scholarship money. This makes it even more crucial to hurry.

One of Sabella's most stressed justifications for the sight is the services it would provide to the school and community. Among these are:

1. An enhancement of minority recruitment due to resulting track teams.
2. A benefit to the HPER Department; intramural programs, and recreational outlets for UNCW students.
3. Visibility and recognition to the school by sponsoring high school, collegiate, and master's track competitions.

The track, when it is built, will be a fine one. Today, low quality rubber asphalt tracks can be constructed for as little as $50,000. "But we want one that will last and be comfortable to run on," said Dr. Sabella. "A tartan track is probably too expensive, but the new synthetic surfaces yield good training and racing results."

These results will never occur until the financial matters, or more simply, contributions of $400,000 are collected. Sabella says that up to one-third of the costs will probably come free of charge from a grant from Krege, a private foundation that pours out almost $40 million per year. More good news.

"The only cost involved," Sabella says, "are basically the construction costs. We have the land."

Wilkins International, constructor of the new Olympic track, will act as consultant for all building aspects. Once begun, the track could be built in three months. As the track-dominated Summer Olympics draw near, and the efforts of athletes like Carl Lewis and Mary Decker are recognized world wide, it is hoped that UNCW will leave the Dark Ages and build a permanent site that will be enjoyed by so many.

Offered

Jackie Nichols

Do you hate to do research? It takes hours of time, and it often leads you in circles. Well, Randall Library can help. For a few dollars, the library can begin research for you and allow a thorough, updated start.

A computer search is an automated method of searching an index to compile a bibliography or list of sources on a particular subject and is available to all students, faculty, and staff.

According to Sue Ann Hiatt, an assistant Reference/Special Collections Librarian, the search is "especially helpful in trying to link two concepts."

The library has access to over 180 computerized index files. Through a computer terminal located in the library, the files are searched for key words, authors, or categories.

After discussing strategy with the librarian, information will be plugged in, and within minutes the computer will produce a print-out of relevant citations.

The average cost of a computer search is $5.00 to $20.00 for each file or data base searched. Payment is due when the results are picked up.

Hiatt also says that there is a special program available for a group discount. A class lecture, presented by a librarian, enables the class and teacher a discount price.

The subjects that can be searched include science, technology, health, social sciences, business, education, and the humanities. For more information call or drop by the Reference Department, Randall Library.

School Kids Record Review

TWIGG

The undeniable, directional force of the Fab Four traded in his mop top and merged with Yoko Ono through music and love in his endless search for peace and love. Funny this courageous act of devotion meant the end of his musical stature. The genius appeared in flashes as on Double Fantasy where 'Watching the Wheels' and 'Woman' proved the magic force of the Beatles still existed. Yet, as in any great artist, John's life and creativity became mirror images of each other. The musical power of Milk and Honey is diminished in scope because most of John's arrangements are undone. The fact that the center piece 'Grow Old with Me', so obviously an anthem classic with its simple, lasting declaration of love, was not given the Beatle treatment is sad indeed.

John, with the rest of the Beatles, helped transform-pop star to social phenomenon. The life and times of the Beatles reflected an entire generation thanks to their melodic gifts, sense of humor, and increasing awareness of their own power. From the hook-filled songs of innocence to the growing strength of Beatles '65 and Help to the full flowering of drug use and experimentation contained in Revolver, Sgt. Peppers, and Magical Mystery Tour the Beatles' fervent attempts to unify the world through love had more impact than any single government. The fall through drugs marked their growing cynicism with their simple dreams and increased doubts of their own inner strength.

Undergoing crucial self-examination and reacting against his Beatles legacy, the power of a man's soul dared to come shining through on record. Imagine and Plastic Ono Band will remain John Lennon's most brilliant testament. At least with his collaborations on record with Yoko, John came back from a self-imposed retirement, still, the muse remained inconsistent. Milk and Honey counts more as a collection of outtakes than an album of new material. The isolation which he sought had left him with very little to say. "Now I am older, the more that I see the less I know for sure" John states in the sly reggae of 'Borrowed Time'; "when I was younger...living illusion of freedom and power...full of ideals and broken dreams."

For John Lennon, the most important work in his life was the merging of mind and spirit with Yoko-love one to one. On Milk and Honey Yoko's songs are some of the best she's ever done. The closer 'You're the One' is an eerie, unsettling companion to the "God Bless Our Love" of 'Grow Old With Me.' To create as a musical equal with John has always been a bad smudge. It brings to mind David Lee Roth talking about the evaporation of Lennon "when he underwent some kind of role reversal with his wife...the budgie bird on the rhino's back." If only she had pushed John to record within--without himself rather than in a cramped musical love box.

After all is said and done it was you and me that destroyed him. He really believed in Beatle mania until it took him from himself. It's a shame that on Milk and Honey only a few pieces of inspiration remain.

The University Union is going to bury a time capsule containing articles commemorating the building's first year of operation. Items to be placed in the capsule should be taken to Room 214 no later than 5 p.m., Friday, April 6. The capsule will be opened on the Fiftieth Anniversary of the building's opening (March 21, 2033).

The HPER department in conjunction with the New Hanover County Health Department, will sponsor a Health Fair March 31 in Trask Coliseum from 10 a.m.-4 p.m. Free screenings for those 18 and over will be given for height, weight, blood pressure, anemia, hearing and vision.

As for the Johnny Mathis concert on Saturday, there are no foreseeable problems, since the crowd will be smaller and there will be no evening classes for students.

"The Azalea Festival contracted the building...we have to manage the best we can," said Jordan.

Squires Wins Run-off Election

George Walker
News Editor

Eric Squires nipped challenger Tim Flaherty in a March 28 runoff to gain yet another term as SGA President in 1984-85.

Squires, whose campaign slogan was "let's get involved," won by a narrow 312-238 margin.

"I was most happy with the voter turnout," remarked Squires. "More people turned out for this runoff than the entire general election last year. Seventeen percent of the student body voted."

"Because I live off campus, most of my support came from non-campus residents."

The runoff was in compliance with the SGA constitution. Neither Squires (45%), Flaherty (27%), or Mickey Gahagan (21%), could garner the needed 50 percent in the March 21, 22 general election to win outright.

Gahagan, who earlier had lodged a protest against Squires with Flaherty and two campaign workers, dropped out of the runoff to give Flaherty his support, but Squires received the needed support anyway.

Homosexual Misconceptions Rampant in Society

Caroline Butts
Journalism Contributor

Five years ago a student had to drop out of UNCW. Why? The student was gay.

Today, a UNCW student told of a recent encounter with a teacher on campus which left the student wanting to quit school. Learning that this student was gay, the teacher berated the student and withdrew previous support and acceptance.

As Bob Haywood, campus minister and counselor, said, "Negative attitudes about homosexuals are so entrenched in our culture that they even infect the attitudes of people who are in helping professions."

Gays are estimated as a 1-in-10 minority, which means that UNCW has approximately 540 homosexual students.

Two of these students, when asked about the accuracy of that figure, felt that 540 was probably a low estimate.

"People need to understand it's a fact and it's here now," said one student who wished to remain unnamed.

The problems gay students face are many. The fear of discovery, the fear of rejection, and negative stereotyping dominate the list. Two of the predominant misconceptions that gays encounter continually are that "it is catching," or "you can always spot them".

"We need to examine our stereotypes in college. We serve ourselves better as we increase our tolerance," Haywood believes.

Agreeing with him, Dr. Sue Lamb, Associate Professor of Psychology and a counselor, feels that giving factual information would help to dispel the myths of homosexuality.

Pat Leonard, Associate Dean of Students, concurs. "You cannot make decisions unless you have the facts. We have a responsibility to examine our attitudes, because they affect our reactions to people."

"College is a place to encourage students to have tolerance and to live people who are different than themselves," Dr. Lamb said.

Other universities within the UNC system have support

Newsweek, in its August 8, 1983 issue, stated, "After decades of research, no one can say for sure whether homosexuality is biologically or psychologically determined or—more important—whether it really matters. 'We don't know how sexual preferences are developed,'" says sociologist Philip Kayal, "yet people are being condemned for something in them which shouldn't matter."

The American Psychiatric Association removed homosexuality from its list of mental disorders in 1973. It is now known as an alternate life-style.

Also, "the public use of words like gay in a positive context (Gay Student Organization) would have a beneficial effect on the self-esteem of homosexuals," said John Clifford, Associate Professor of English.

Ginga Colcough, one of the Nurse Practitioners in Health Services, said gay students often turn to them for help. One question that is frequently asked her is whether or not parents will ever see the students' records.

The answer is no.

"No one on campus can see these charts," Colcough said.

Asked what she would like to see this article accomplish, one gay student replied, "I'd like people to look at it in terms of being more open about gays, and look at them as people, not as being gay. We need UNCW's only real media source, The Seahawk, may run into financial ruin if a current budget proposal is passed by the SGA budget Committee and the Senate.

The proposed budget will allot only $6,000 to the debt-ridden newspaper—half of the 1983-84 amount.

To understand the reasoning behind this act, some explanation is necessary.

Every year presidents of SGA-funded clubs are required to submit a pending budget for the next fiscal year. LaVera Parker Jeffreys, editor of The Seahawk, turned in a budget that was deemed inappropriate by the Budget Review Committee.

A new budget was turned in by a staff member that was sensible. Input came from SGA Office Manager Susan Goodrum, Seahawk Managing Editor, Donna Holden, and SGA Treasurer, Brad Bruestle.

The final numbers in the budget read as such: $28,215 for expenses, $16,000 for revenue from advertising. In other words, The Seahawk was asking for an allotment of $12,215. The 1983-84 allotment was the before-mentioned $12,000. The 1982-83 was $12,300. With inflation the budget was asking for less.

But Dr. Harper, a marketing professor who reviews the budgets and makes the final proposal, had other ideas.

"The paper should raise $20,000 in ad revenue instead of $16,000," he said. "With the paper going from eight to 12 pages next year (33% increase) the advertising should increase the same."

With all due respect, Dr. Harper is mistaken. The paper has not been a standard eight pages. In fact, a majority have been 12 pages.

Secondly, how has it been assumed that the paper will be 12 pages next year? The editor's position of The Seahawk is filled every May by election of the Media Publications Board.

Third, a higher printing cost (about $200 per week) is needed to produce a 12 page paper every week. Harper's budget did not increase the printing cost to match this. A larger staff will also be required, yet proposed salaries for staff editors ($400 year) were wiped out.

A philosophical tug-of-war has developed. Is the paper a device for bringing in loads of money or is it a news medium?

"It's absurd for someone to think that a student paper should pay for itself," says Journalistic Advisor, Bill Atwill.

Atwill is also an English lecturer at UNCW. "I could almost see it if we had a school of Journalism here. What you have is a small group of students, only a few of whom get paid, working hard to put out a paper."

All year Atwill has been adamant in his belief that the paper has contained too many ads. Indeed, this week's issue is a good example. Do you see a sports page? Classifieds? Or club organization articles? If the budget proposal is passed, six out of 12 pages will be ads. Another incredible fact to consider is that Seahawk ads (circulation 3,500) cost more than Star News ads (circulation 35,000).

It is not anybody's intention to discredit Dr. Harper. He obviously has the marketing know-how to hold his position. It is his monetary ambition for The Seahawk that is out of line. No doubt he could turn a great profit for any business he would work for.

Chapel Hill, which receives $180,000 per year for its newspaper, is a daily newspaper. Being that The Seahawk is printed weekly, it is essential that it become a valuable source of news, and not an Ad Pak.

To the Editor:

The University Union is experiencing a dangerous problem that can be solved with a little help from UNCW students, faculty, and staff that ride bicycles. The problem is non-use of bicycle racks.

During the planning stages of the new Union facility there weren't enough bike racks to handle the number of bicycles on campus during the day. With this in mind, four bike racks were placed next to the Union, each within 50 steps of an entry door. However, on any given day of the week, it is not uncommon to find 30 bicycles piled up around one of the Union entry doors and only two or three in a bike rack.

This practice must stop. Not only does it impede traffic flow in and out of the building, but it also poses a serious safety hazard. On numerous occasions I've witnessed individuals having to literally fight their way through a sea of bicycles just to get in or out of the building.

Sometime during the next week, there will be someone posted outside the Union to ask people to park their bicycles in the bike racks and away from the entries. If this does not solve the problem, more drastic measures will be taken such as impounding bicycles that are parked in front of the entry doors, handicapped ramps, and entry stairs. Hopefully, this will not have to be implemented if those individuals riding bicycles will show a little courtesy and use the bike racks that are provided for the protection and safety of their two-wheel transportation.

Stillpoint

By Bob Haywood,

In a world where the forces of darkness often seem to winning out over the forces of light, there are some of us who insist on looking for signs of hope; little successes, little candles of light in the darkness that are signs of encouragement and possibility. People who work so that their personal life and their world can be "better" need such encouragement.

The boycott ended after a series of intense negotiations between INFACT and the Swiss-based Nestle. Nestle has now agreed to comply with virtually every detail of the World Health Organization's Infant Formula Sales Code.

The boycott, which began in 1977, was in response to the distribution of free samples of infant formula to mothers in the Third World. Millions of women switched from breast to bottle feeding, thereby creating a dependence on the formula and risking the health of children when the formula could not be afforded or was mixed with contaminated water.

On January 26, 1984, Douglas Johnson ate a Nestle's Crunch Bar. This would not be particularly newsworthy if Johnson wasn't the chairperson of the Infant Formula Action Coalition (INFACT), the organization that has led a boycott against Nestle for the past six and a half years. But he is.

While I'm not all that thrilled about my Nestle's Crunch

Bar, I am excited when moral concerns bring about change in a major corporation.

It is interesting and worthy of note that the final resolution of the conflict between INFACT and Nestle began when Douglas Johnson of INFACT while traveling in this country found himself, totally by "chance", seated by a man whom he did not know but who turned out to be the chairman of Nestle Corporation. Out of their personal conversations, talking as one genuine human being to another, the final negotiations emerged.

So I am left with some nourishment for my belief that greed does not always win and that such positive change can only occur when we discover the human faces of our "enemy". So the flame of hope burns a little brighter.

ROTC Travels to Florida

Twelve UNCW students spent nine days in Florida and all of them are ready to go back. UNCW's Army ROTC program in conjunction with Campbell University conducted its annual Florida Keys Scuba trip over Spring break and fond memories still haunt its participants.

The journey began on Saturday morning at 8:45 a.m. when the Army bus pulled out of the parking lot next to Hoggard Hall. The first day of the trip ended in St. Augustine Florida where the driver and students rested for the night. Cadets John Brackett and Ed Totten who were involved in a touch football game that first night said, "At the time all we could think about was the long bus trip, but later we found out it would be worth the ride."

The next afternoon they arrived in Key Largo where they spent the remainder of the day setting up their camp site. That evening, those students who signed on to take the basic scuba course received their first instruction.

The next five days were spent either in the pool, where instruction to the basic course scuba students was conducted, or for other, sitting around the pool improving one's tan. In the afternoon, advanced divers left for Pennekamp State Park and dove on Frenchmans reef, Molasses reef, Dry Rocks, The Elbow, and the Statue. Nondivers spent their time at the beach in Pennekamp State Park. On Wednesday, Captain Macrae took eleven students up to Fort Lauderdale for an evening on the strip. Cadet Ron Walters who went with them described the trip as "UNFORGETTABLE!!" Most of the UNCW cadets spent their nights dancing at a local lounge or resting at the camp site.

On Thursday and Friday the basic scuba students made their first open water dives. Finally on Saturday the tents came down and the students headed back to Wilmington and Buies Creek. Some students were tired, others sunburned, and most were sad to be leaving. Cadet Nancy Russell, the day after returning asked "How soon will it be before we go back?"

EYE ON THE WORLD

Pete Mullins

I remember one Christmas as a small child, I was sitting on Uncle Ronnie's lap and he was explaining to me what made our country, a democracy, great. He said in his monotone way "that the thing that made our country great was the free and open discussion that Americans enjoy. And that this country will stop being a great country when government places limits on free speech."

Now, has the importance of free aid open speech changed? Uncle Ronnie, during a press conference, blamed Congress for the Lebanon fiasco because of their open debate over Lebanon.

Is free speech only good when it doesn't question the President's policies?

Central America: Does Uncle Ronnie wear a white or black hat in dealing with Central America? I firmly believe that we should be there. But why don't we say to those that we are backing: "Behave yourselves or you won't see any American dollars." I bet that would scare the sombrero's off them.

Wrightsville Beach's most famous landmark has reopened. It's a good thing too, I was getting very thirsty.

The "Right" Stuff

Education has become a growing concern in North Carolina. SAT scores in NC have consistently been below the national average. North Carolina has not kept up academically with the majority of the states in the union.

Why has education been on the downswing for the last eight years? Not because Jim Hunt has been Governor. No. Jim Hunt has changed his policies n' education during his two terms as Governor. Jim has displayed a negative attitude which does not help our severely depressed education system.

Jim, however, was responsible in bringing the competency test to North Carolina high schools. This major contribution does not prove competency, but it does prove whether a student in the school system can walk to the corner drugstore without getting lost.

Nobody can call Jim Hunt stupid. Before his reelection as Governor he did raise the base salary structure in North Carolina for teachers. Now he's at it again, just last week he boosted the salaries for teachers.

Right before another election, isn't that convenient? Why would we as people here in North Carolina and throughout the country want a man in the U.S. Senate who does not seek to help education, only hinder it?

Mandrell Receives Enthuusiastic Response

La Vera Parker Jeffreys

Barbara Mandrell played to two audiences Thursday night with the energy of a race horse. This 90 pound beauty never stopped the whole time she was on stage. She gave it her all and the audiences showed how pleased they were.

Mandrell was so sweet and sincere to her audiences. Nothing was fake. Barbara talked to the people like they were her next of kin.

For a girl that has really made it big, we could all learn a lesson from her about humility.

With a house packed full it was obvious Johnny Mathis was bringing more to Wilmington than just his talent for singing.

Mathis' mellow voice and romantic overtones has made this man a lasting singer, one that doesn't ever go out of style.

In Mathis early days he played track and field events and was very good yet, because his father Clem taught him to sing when he was young that was the talent that became his career.

Mathis genius is a gift to all audiences every where that hear him. He leaves something of himself with all his audiences -it's that good feeling between Mathis and the people he sings to. This magic will continue to last for decades.

Student and Professor Receive Honors

Dr. Jack Levy, professor and chairman of the department of chemical and physical sciences at The University of North Carolina at Wilmington, was elected to the Board of Directors of the North Carolina Academy of Science at their annual meeting March 31 at Wake Forest.

Attending that meeting also were Dr. Sybil K. Miller, assistant professor of chemistry, and her student Anita Lister of Shelby. Lister, a senior at UNCW majoring in chemistry, presented a paper to the Collegiate Academy Section of the North Carolina Academy of Science entitled "Study of the Protective Effect of Various Salts on Acid Inactivation of Human Serum Butyrylcholinesterase."

UNCW senior Anita Lister, daughter of Daniel B. and Helen B. Lister of Shelby, will present the results of her research at the Fifth American Chemical Society's National Student Affiliate Research Symposium April 9 in St. Louis, Missouri. Pursuing a bachelor of science in chemistry at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington, Lister will present her results in a paper entitled "Study of the Protective Effect of Various Salts on Acid Inactivation of Human Serum Butyrylcholinesterase."

Accompanying her to St. Louis will be the chemistry professor under whom Lister has done this research, Dr. Sybil K. Miller, assistant professor of chemistry at UNCW.

Alpha Phi Omega Announce Pledges

The Upsilon Nu chapter of Alpha Phi Omega, a co-ed national service fraternity, has initiated into active service pledges from the Alpha Eta pledge class for Spring 1984.

The pledges were invited to become brothers after fulfilling requirements for an eight week pledging period. One of these requirements was to organize a service project in the community. The Alpha Eta pledge class chose to raise money for Lower Cape Fear Hospice by sponsoring a Skate-a-Thon. Their efforts raised $135 to benefit hospice.

Alpha Phi Omega welcomes these pledges to their brotherhood of service: Angela Butler; Steve Carrera; Reynold Carrera; Dennis Edens; Donna Padgett; Ralph Pandure; and Debbie Price.

Seaside Jam

Underway

Donna Holden
Managing Editor

After four months of extensive planning and laying of groundwork, Seaside Jam V is finally underway.

UPB Chairperson, Gilli Chamberlain, feels that this Save The Whales benefit concert should be the best ever. The chosen bands were based on budget, popularity, and availability. The Program Board, because of limited available funds, chose Sleeper, Gene Cotton, and Tony Carey after talking and negotiating with agents which have been used in the past.

"A major group would cost anywhere from $50,000 to $100,000 just for one show," said Chamberlain. The UPB budget cannot withstand that type of cut.

All organization has been done by UPB members. "All legwork is done by students [volunteers]

...anybody that wanders up, we'll put them to work," said Chamberlain.

Several groups will have booths set up on the day of the concert for various things.

Alcohol will be allowed into the concert, but guests are limited to one beer per hour, according to the university policy. IDs will be checked at the gate, and persons eligible to drink will be tagged with a colored wristband. Other guests will wear a different colored band. Campus Security will be present to check for offenders, and according to Chamberlain, UPB workers will "have the right to say, if we catch them drinking, to pour it out right there."

The key workers for Seaside Jam were Gilli Chamberlain, Don Wait, and David Fair. They laid the groundwork for the bands and did most of the paperwork under the advice of Ellen Servetnick, Union Program Director.

Chamberlain feels that this Seaside Jam will be a "festive-type day for everyone to come out and have a good time."

Pi Kappa Phi Fraternity Thanks Merchants

Pi Kappa Phi Fraternity would like to give acknowledge and much thanks to the students and local businesses who helped make PUSH week a success again this year.

PUSH [Play Units for the Severely Handicapped] is the national philanthropy project that Pi Kappa Phi takes part in annually. Using donations, pledges, and gifts, stimulation-response units are erected each year to enhance learning for and about handicapped children all over the United States.

With two major events last week in the form of a 24-hour wheelchair PUSH-a-thon and a Roman style Toga Party. The UNCW Chapter of Pi Kappa Phi raised over $1500.00, well above our goal from last year's campaign.

Among the local businesses taking part in our cause were:

The Patio
Ogden Optical Co.
Pizza City
Coleman Supply Co.
Atlantic Audio Inc.
Skinner & Daniel's B-B-Q
American Opinion Bookstore

Shoemaker's Office Supply

TONY CAREY

One of 1984's hottest new rockers, Tony Carey is racing into the top 40 with songs like "It's a Fine Fine Day." Formerly known as Planet P, Carey has hit with songs like "Why Me." Spending most of his six year career in Europe Tony Carey has returned to the United States to perform. His latest album, "Some Tough City" takes a hard look at life on the edge of America. Along with most of the artists of the 80's Carey has also struck out into the world of video. A video of "It's a Fine Fine Day" can currently be seen on MTV.

Wilmington's very own Sleeper is a popular favorite among students. Playing mostly at the local bars they mix versions of hit songs with songs of their own. Their collection includes songs by Def Leppard, Bryon Adams, Van Halen, and the Romantics. And as a change of pace they mix in songs like "Fallin' Out Of Love," and "Losin It" which were written by members of the band.

GENE COTTON

The first artist to receive the Harry Chapin award presented by the colleges and universities, Gene Cotton performs the sensitive lyrics that he is known for. But as shown in his album "No Strings Attached" he has a selection of no-holds-barred rock 'n roll songs as well.

Gene Cotton has performed such songs as "You're A Part Of Me" - a duet with Kim Carnes, and "Like A Sunday In Salem" which was number two on the national singles chart for several months. He is an artist "who comes on stage with something to say, says it very well, and leaves."

“Look Back in Anger”

Courtesy Creative Arts

The UNCW University Theatre are presenting John Osborne's drama which began last night and will run through Sunday, April 15.

“Look Back in Anger” was first produced on the London stage in 1956 and began a movement in English theatre that placed emphasis on life in the industrial cities dealing with the problems of working class people. The material seemed fresh and robust to a London audience used to genteel plays about the upper classes.

Jimmy Porter, played by David Surridge, is caught in an environment he hates, but he is not inarticulate. He spits back with a fiery anger that gave a name to a generation in Britain - its angry young men. Kim Weeks portrays his upper middle-class wife Alison, who receives the major thrust of Jimmy's anger.

Jimmy's best friend Cliff is played by Hunter Thompson, who attempts to buffer the anger between Jimmy and Alison. Into this atmosphere of personal animosity steps Helena, Alison's best friend, portrayed by Jamie Ursiny. Helena's solution is to remove Alison from the anger of Jimmy by sending for Alison's father, Colonel Redfern, played by Paul Sebastian. But, there is no direct solution and only Jimmy and Alison alone can ultimately come to grips with the real conditions of their lives.

The depths of suffering depicted in the play are softened by its cry for compassion. Its vividness of speech puts “Look Back in Anger” in the class of most of the best of the world's naturalistic plays.

“Look Back in Anger” is directed by W. Terry Rogers with Jon Frazier serving as the stage manager. Dennis J. Sporre, Chairman, Creative Arts Department, has designed the set. Juli Canfield, Jim Ornate, Karen Smith, Larry Call, Brad Williams, Lydia Keller, and Jean Wesner will handle all technical aspects of the play.

Record Review

The Alarm Declaration

At the recent Pretenders concert in Raleigh, The Alarm held their own as the intense opening act. Similar in Christian belief to U2, closer to the music of Big Country (thanks in part to E-bow), and sounding in vocal delivery much like the Clash, The Alarm is another self-righteous message band from the misty isles who use war, scripture, and a finger to ring out injustices.

The Alarm possess a simpler, folkish beat than its compatriots choosing to mix amplified acoustics with harmonica that brings to mind an early Bob Dylan. Their music is a swirling storm of passion, full of the immediacy they wish to imply, yet Mike Peters (lead vocalist) does not seem to be as vehemently politically possessed as Joe Strummer. Like U2, The Alarm prefers to speak to the individual and the change that comes from within.

Armageddon is an inspirational basis that can cement any music. The Alarm do a good job in keeping the lyrics in a general context without sacrificing the intent of the music. Songs like ‘Marching On,’ ‘Blaze of Glory,’ and ‘Shout to the Devil’ with the precision drumming, pounding bass, and stomping feet may in fact refer to the Coming Day but could just as well be used to get down! in other righteous ways.

Still, the absolute sincerity and seriousness of the Alarm combined with the threatening urgency of their message leaves me stuck in my old American point of view: Hey! where's the fire and what are we marching to, if you don't mind?

The wars we Americans like to wage are not in our homeland or in the backyards of Northern Ireland where the confusing loss of human life betrays the meaning of life.

The Alarm are totally convincing when one hears the reprise of ‘The Stand’ from their first LP. Sounding like Neil Young becoming a folkie Christian, the apparent simplicity hiding behind the power and force of will of this testament transcends anything that might make some suggest a copy band. ‘Howling Wind’ turns the simple conviction into a storm of deliverance on an empty wasteland. This is folk music of war, death, and retribution. All actions contain a judgement and The Alarm are sounding off in their own voice the tragic consequences (not for the faint of heart). TWIGG ****

Why are a lot of college men and women becoming buddies in Army ROTC?

Probably because Army ROTC is full of the kind of people other people go out of their way to meet.

ROTC students tend to be high achievers who are interested in more than their studies. They're popular students with a serious side, but who like to have a good time, too.

In other words, when people join Army ROTC they often meet people a lot like themselves.

Conservation Program Planned

Courtesy UNCW News

The New Hanover Soil and Water Conservation District and UNCW will sponsor a public awareness forum entitled "The Challenges of Growth in the Cape Fear" at 7:30 p.m., April 18, and 24 in Bryan Auditorium in Morton Hall.

The three-program forum which began on April 10 is designed to raise public awareness of the issues and potential impact associated with growth and our environment.

Area residents, planners and policy makers of coastal New Hanover County are especially concerned about the effects of population growth within the county. New Hanover is not only growing at a rate greater than any other county in the state, but is the second most densely populated county in the state.

Other factors of great concern include food, pollution, industry and natural resources. The forum will focus attention on these and other issues in an attempt to promote public understanding of the consequences of unplanned growth.

According to Marc Lynch, soil and water representative for the NC Department of Natural Resources and Community Development, "This program is coming in right in tune with the feelings of society toward the environment. Everyone is concerned now about the effect of growth on the environment," he added.

The second program in the series, "Values and the Environment," will analyze society's values toward the land and its resources and how these values determine the quality of life. Three speakers will be featured in this Wednesday, April 18, program which begins at 7:30 p.m.: Wallace Kaufman, author of articles and books with environmental themes, who will discuss "Is Man's House Everyone's Castle." Dr. John Costlow, director of the Duke University Marine Lab, will discuss "Public Trust Where do you fit?" Dr. Earl MacCormac of Davidson College will talk about "A Corporate Outlook Toward the Environment."

The final program on Tuesday April 24 will tackle sequences of an environmental ethic. A panel of technical specialists will be on hand to give additional information on topics including "Humanity and the Earth: Reflection and Projections," featuring Dr. Waldo Beach, professor of Christian Ethics, at Duke University; "Origins of Caring," with Dr. Vincent Bellis, coastal representative of the Sierra Club; Coy Garrett, state conservationist with U.S. Department of Agriculture and the Soil Conservation Service and Paul Denison, vice president of von Oesen and Associates.

The program is funded by a grant from the NC Humanities Committee, a state based program of the National Endowment for the Humanities. Refreshments will be served following each program. There is no charge for these programs and the public is invited to attend. Dr. Jim Megivern, professor and head of the department of philosophy and religion at UNCW, and Stella Shelton, reporter and news anchor at WWAY-TV3, will moderate and hostess the program respectively.

Nontraditional Exam Scheduled On Saturday

Leslie McRimmon
Journalistic Contributor

English 101 students will be given exams in a different manner this spring, they will have their exam on a Saturday.

Instead of going to the regular exam periods, all of the students will meet at the same place on Saturday, April 28 to take a proficiency exam.

The trial run for this exam is being given this spring because there are fewer English 101 students in the spring, according to Dr. Robert Byington, Professor of English.

The proficiency exam will be given on Saturdays permanently after this year.

Students will be required to write a 500 word paper on a given subject during the three exam period. If a student fails this exam they will fail English 101 and be required to take the class over again.

Sports... The Main Event

George Walker

Athletic Director, Bill Brooks, is getting excited over UNCW's recent acceptance into the East Coast Athletic Conference (ECAC).

"It will mean so much to our program," he said. "Being an independent is tough. The superior teams want to play you because they believe it's an easy win. The teams of your ability or less won't play us. In a conference they have no choice."

The members of the new conference include George Mason, James Madison, Richmond, William and Mary, Navy, ECU, and American University.

Ever wonder what sport receives the most scholarship money? According to Brooks, basketball is tops. It is the only real revenue sport at UNCW. Using a 1982 away game at LSU as an example, UNCW received $10,000 just to play. Thirteen basketball scholarships are allocated. Soccer is second, followed by baseball and swimming. Surprisingly, the team with the least travel and equipment expenses, cross-country, receives nothing. "The type of people that run cross-country will run for free or for money," says Brooks. "Heck, they like it so much that you will see them running around Greenfield Lake for nothing." Wonder what the cross-country members, who run 70 to 90 miles per week, would think about this statement?

The money given for scholarships originates from three areas: gate receipts, student fees, and Alumni. The alumni are not very effective, being that UNCW is such a young school and most of the graduates aren't financially secure yet. The name of the Alumni group is The Seahawk Club.

Tennis coach, Larry Honeycutt, has more interests than tennis. He has officiated high school football and basketball for more than 10 years and college football and basketball for eight. He hopes to officiate full-time on the college level when the opportunity arises.

All the UNCW coaches can breathe easily. Brooks reports that no one's job is in jeopardy. He is satisfied with their work. Wonder if that will change when the program rises in stature due to the conference move?

There will be no collegiate football team at UNCW, according to Brooks. "It's ridiculous to think about that until we can properly support the sports we have."

A new weight room containing 13 Nautilus stations is almost set for use, according to Greg Dalton, facilities director of Trask. No word yet if just Varsity athletes will be allowed to use it.

The UNCW girls basketball team must have been smiling when UNC-Asheville won the NAIA National Championship. The reason? They defeated UNC-A early in the season.

Surfing

Bailey Webb
Surf Team

With spring weather conditions upon us, Surfing Club members are hitting the surf in full force.

On March 27 an intra-club contest was held at Wrightsville Beach. A brisk, northeast wind produced small, rideable waves for the competition. Thirteen surfers competed in the event which was broken down into three heats.

First place in each heat automatically advanced to the finals. First round winners were Bryan Tracy, Stan McCauley and Tracy Peters. To round out the final heat, Mike DeMartin and Frank Horne advanced out of the semifinals. Stan McCauley put on a display of radical maneuvering at times, but could not overcome the consistency and long rides that Tracy came up with. The final results were: first-Bryan Tracy, second-Stan McCauley, third-Frank Horne, fourth, Mike DeMartin and Tracy Peters.

Also on Sunday, April 1, Surfing Club members Bryan Tracy and Frank Horne competed in local ESA contest at Carolina Beach. Horne took second place in 1A Men with Tracy placing third in 3A men.

EARN "EASY MONEY" IN YOUR SPARE TIME. NO INVESTMENT NEEDED.

Here's an easy, no-risk way for students, housewives and retired people to earn extra income. Virtually every marina, boatyard, marine accessory store, boat manufacturer, service and repair facility uses hundreds, even thousands of dollars worth of stainless steel marine fasteners every year. Yet, because they are small and relatively inexpensive, screws, bolts, nuts, washers and other essential fasteners often are overlooked by conventional marine supply distributors.

That's your big opportunity! As a sales representative for MARINE FASTENERS AND SUPPLY COMPANY, INC., you can sell these items with very little effort and no investment whatsoever.

All you do is contact local marinas and boatyards by phone or in person and offer our full line of marine fasteners. We'll give you simplified sales literature and forms free of charge to make it easy for you to write orders.

You send orders directly to us. We fill them, bill your customers and send you your commissions. You handle no-merchandise and no money. You just collect commissions every month. And, you have the tax benefits of being self-employed.

Find out how "easy money" can make your retirement years more productive and secure. Fill out and mail this coupon or telephone 201-762-9018.

EASY MOVING COMPANY

La Vera Parker Jeffreys
Editor

The Easy Moving Company presented a very unique program of dance Tuesday, April 3, in Kenan Auditorium.

The dancers were graceful and the choreography skillfully mastered.

Dance techniques used in the presentation were of a ballet origin but many of the pieces added oriental touches and exercise to change the pace a little.

"Bon Voyage" was the last number and it indeed was updated. The audience seemed to responded well to this particular part of the program.

The Easy Moving Company may return to the campus in the fall. If so it's a performance you won't want to miss.

Japanese Film Festival

The B. Frank Hall Philosophy and Religion Society is sponsoring a Japanese film festival April 18, 19 and 20. The three classic films will be shown in the auditorium in Randall Library. The first night,

RASHOMON will be featured. It stars Toshiro Mifune and was the first to expose the west to Japanese cinema. Thursday, April 19, SEVEN SAMURAI will be shown. This film also stars Mifune and is a sort of western set in 6th century Japan. The third, Ugetsu, has been described as one of the most beautiful productions in cinema.

All films will start at 7:00 p.m. and are absolutely free. Students, faculty and the public are invited to this cultural experience.

Johnson, Hackler and Ahrens

Make Film

Pete Mullins
Staff Writer

Have you ever been sleeping soundly when into your bliss creeps a nightmare of unbelievable reality and horror?

The nightmare could be of a monster, an accident, or worst of all, the nightmare could involve the re-emergence of Richard Milhouse Nixon on the political scene.

A ghastly thought indeed, but one that two UNCW students and a faculty member, along with several others, have been dealing with. They looked at Nixon's re-emergence through an independent study project.

For the past several weeks, Alan Johnson, Chip Hackler, and Dr. John Ahrens have been filming a movie based on the concept of Nixon running for the presidency in 1984.

The movie concentrates on a talk show involving Jesse Jones, the talk show host, and four unique individuals somehow connected with Nixon's returning to politics.

One of the guests is S. Tom Hunter, a character based on writer Hunter S. Thompson (Where The Buffalo Roam). "A long-time political reporter for practically any magazine that would pay for his typing paper."

Co-writer, Alan Johnson, indicated that he and Dr. Ahrens had been throwing ideas for a movie around for about one year. They then brought in Hackler, not only to help with the writing, but also because he had some practical experience with the technical aspects of filmmaking.

The film, an "Afterbirth Production," will be shown at The Patio April 19th at 7:00p.m.

Pitchin' In

How many college students do you know that would get up early on a Saturday morning to clean up a park? Give a hand to several recreation majors who did just that.

Carolina Beach Parks and Recreation Department requested the assistance of the UNCW Recreation Majors Association to aid in the cleaning up of Dow Road Park. Under the leadership of Dr. Robert Wolff, curriculum coordinator of HPER, seven recreation majors responded. They were up and at it by 9 a.m. on March 17. Before noon they accomplished such chores as laying bases, building a mound on the softball field, and pulling grass out of park flower beds.

They completed their assignment and Carolina Beach Parks and Recreation department showed their appreciation by hosting a free barbeque plate at a pig pickin' sponsored by the Carolina Beach Volunteer Fire Department.

Williams Awarded Fellowship

Courtesy UNCW News Bureau

Eugene Williams, graduate student in marine biology at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington, has been awarded a National Science Foundation Graduate Fellowship worth $24,300 plus tuition for three years at the graduate school of his choice.

Williams, the son of Carl and Dorothy Dempsey of Wilmington, was one of only 43 students to be awarded NSF graduate fellowships in the field of biomedical science and only one of 540 graduate students so honored nationwide. Students applying for this competitive fellowship numbered 3,924.

The award pays for tuition for research and study plus a yearly stipend of $8,100. As an undergraduate at UNCW, Williams received the Wrightsville Marine Foundation Scholarship and now holds the Wrightsville Marine Foundation Fellowship to fund his master of science work at UNCW. He expects to use the NSF fellowship to pursue his doctoral studies.

A student of Dr. Ralph Brauer, director of the Institute for Marine Biomedical Research and professor of biology, Williams is conducting research into the development of temperature preference behavior in vertebrates, using tadpoles as an example.

Dr. Brauer has been involved in invertebrate research in temperature preference behavior for a number of years," Williams explained. "Now we are going into vertebrates. Using tadpoles, we can follow the development of temperature preference behavior."

"Just as humans feel hot or cold, the young tadpoles choose a temperature they prefer as they mature. We want to know what the lower vertebrates are keying in on and why they choose a particular temperature. Preliminary results indicate that day-old tadpoles show no temperature preference, but by 10 days old they have developed the ability to avoid high or low temperatures. I also want to look at how their swimming patterns change at different temperatures."

Eugene Williams became the first UNCW student to receive the NSF graduate fellowship in biomedical science. Only 43 were awarded nationally to students.

Strickland to Speak to May Graduates

Courtesy UNCW News Bureau

The University of North Carolina at Wilmington will graduate approximately 800 men and women at 10 a.m. Saturday, May 12, at Trask Coliseum. Commencement speaker for the thirty-fifth graduation program will be Robert L. Strickland, chairman of the board of Lowe's Companies, Inc.

Lowe's is a North Carolina-based corporation active in 19 states, primarily in the Southeast. The largest single retailer of building materials and hardware in the United States, Lowe's recorded 1983 sales totaling $1.4 billion from their 238 stores. The Lowe's store in Wilmington was the prototype for the company's new "super retrofit" stores, a recent innovation with a sales floor of 24,000 square feet.

Strickland has been with the firm since 1957 when he joined as advertising manager. In 1970, he became senior vice president for marketing, then executive vice president in 1976. In 1978, he was named chairman of the board.

A resident of Winston-Salem, Strickland is a Phi Beta Kappa graduate of the University of North Carolina with a master of business administration degree from Harvard University issued with distinction.

A former state legislator, Strickland currently serves as a director of the U.S. Council of Better Business Bureaus, Revelstoke Companies, Ltd., of Alberta, Canada, the Committee of Publicly Owned Companies and the Home Center Institute. He is president of the Employee Stock Ownership Council of America. Strickland is listed in Who's Who in America and Who's Who in the World.

Letters Correction

Letter To The Editor:

In my article concerning gays at UNCW, the student in the opening paragraph did not drop out because of UNCW. The sentence that was omitted explained that the student had been beaten over and over again in the dorms, resulting in him dropping out of UNCW.

The third column left out 5 lines which I feel those people I interviewed would have liked to see included. Those omitted lines explained that gay students at UNCW feel a support group wouldn't work, because none would go. Why? Because they fear harassment and abuse by some other UNCW students.

Caroline Butts
The first paragraph of the article should have read:

Five years ago a student had to drop out of UNCW. Why? Because that student was physically beaten over and over again. The student was gay.

In the third column of the article some lines were missing which should have read:

UNCCH and UNCG have support groups for gay students. Many students here feel that no one would attend a similar group at UNCW.

Why? "Because they would fear ridicule and harassment by other students who are not gay," one student said.

The Seahawk apologizes for the mistakes made in this article and for any problems it may have caused.

To The Editor:

I am writing in response to the March 29th editorial.

First - is this editorial the opinion of the Editorial Board?

Second - does the author know for a fact that most students "are proud not to be associated with the SGA and would be even prouder to know the group didn't exist"? Some students may feel this way, but do most? It seems a statement like this would require some polling of a large number of students to determine their opinions before stating what their opinions are.

Third - it is stated that Susan Goodrum sits in on "student meetings which are student funded." These meetings are not funded. A group of representatives are elected by the students to come and volunteer their time every Thursday at 6 p.m. Although these meetings might at times deal with student funding issues, they are in no way student funded. These meetings are open meetings; alumni, faculty, students and interested individuals may attend.

Fourth - the author states that Susan Goodrum "furnishes information, although its sometimes nothing but lies to aid one of the sides in conflict." This is a strong allegation to make without furnishing proof.

Fifth - the author "can't list any real progress the SGA has carried out ..." An investigation of the senate minutes might prove enlightening on this subject.

Finally - I feel all the senators deserve praise for their hard work and dedication to student affairs.

Mona Franklin

Letter To The Editor:

I would like to extend my gratitude to those students who came and made the BACCHUS dance a success. I think this shows that the students really appreciate entertainment on campus. They are tired of having to leave campus to have a good time. BACCHUS stands for Boost Alcohol Consciousness Concerning the Health of University Students. Our main message is drink if you like but do it responsibly. The students that came Friday Night showed that you do not have to get drunk to have a great time. All the BACCHUS members worked hard to make the dance a success with the greatly appreciated help from Dominos, Paul's Place, Pepsi, Miller High Life and ARA. I think the success of this dance shows that the students of UNCW do want to get involved if given the opportunity. Thank you once again.

Sincerely,
Jana Archer

Editorial

As editor I would like to thank all the people that have supported The Seahawk during my term in office. I cannot list everyone but I would like to thank everyone in the Development Office without whose help the paper would not have seen the progress that it has seen. I especially thank Dr. Jairy Hunter for his support and encouragement. The Fledgling staff has helped the paper in many ways. I appreciate all that Mr. Bill Atwill has done to see that the paper improves with each issue. Thanks also Mr. Atwill for your advice.

Our staff may have been small this year, but by the efforts of a few people a paper has been put out each week. I am grateful to Kevin Coughlin for the many things he contributed to the paper in the fall. I appreciate greatly the efforts of Bill Estep and Alan Moore this summer and fall. Thanks also to Angie Latta, Woody Willis and Stephanie Loftus. Many thanks to Mona Franklin. Special thanks to Mark Beasley for his continuous support.

Thanks especially to those currently on the staff: Eric Williams, Brad Lamberton, Pete Mullins and Karen Sefton who have contributed in any way needed. I thank George Walker for his seemingly never-tiring efforts and his willingness to see a paper to its end. Thanks to Donna Holden for being "acting editor" in my absence.

Stillpoint

By Bob Haywood,

A strange collage of events color these days. These are days of pressure--papers, tests and final exams. These are days of endtimes--graduating for some, simply finishing the semester and leaving for summer for others. These are days of beginnings also---springtime bursting forth but winter's cold still lingering, couples marrying and starting a new season in their life.

And in the midst of these days we find ourselves face to face with Easter. For some of you that fact means nothing more than a one-day holiday. For me, Easter celebrates a fundamental reality of my life. He is Risen! With that announcement, the powers of darkness are broken. Out of betrayal, defeat and death comes life. There is a solid, secure place to stand that no thing, no force, no power can overthrow.

My emotional world includes an awareness of the dark forces of power politics, potential nuclear holocaust legitimated by some skewed sense of manifest destiny, children dying of hunger by the thousands. My world, as yours, includes days of pressure, times of beginning and times of ending and saying goodbye. It is easy to live in this world and these days like a pinball shot out of bed each morning and bouncing from one task to another, from one feeling to another only to fall back into the hole at the bottom of the day.

But Easter points us a place from which we can live with hope and joy and confidence. To join in the cry "He is Risen" is to break through all the doubts and fears and worries and questions to find the absolute assurance that nothing shall separate us from the love of God.

Such security shapes exam taking, all our beginnings and endings, and even our perception of the realities of our world which seem so threatening to life, to meaning and to the personal possibilities of our future.

"He is Risen", we shout. Wherein lies your hope and security?

Radio Station Begins

Operation in Fall

George Walker
News Editor

It's more of a Ford than a Cadillac, yet the new UNCW Radio Station, WSEA, will begin operations in September, via cable.

According to SGA president, Eric Squires, all dorm rooms will be equipped with the cable hookups, to be donated by Vision Cable.

"It's not the same as broadcast, but we will have to settle for it right now," said Squires.

The Radio Station has been dormant since 1981, when a drug bust of WLOZ radio employees precipitated the closing. Attempts to reopen have been blocked by Channel 6, which claims the signal from such a broadcast would interfere with its signal.

When approached about the subject, a majority of students voiced displeasure.

"I think it's unfair for only a small percentage to have access to the station," said one off-campus student. "Everyone's money is supporting it."

In the end, the station will need a lot of support to overcome Channel 6's resistance and become a Cadillac of the airwaves.

EYE ON THE WORLD

Pete Mullins

North Carolina: I have a question. What exactly does the Governor do that directly affects the education system?

I was going to do some research and find out what he does, but I figured, why break a tradition? I haven't yet done any research for my column, so why start now?

So far, I've heard that North Carolina students are near the bottom on SAT scores, and that it is Jim Hunt's fault. Yet I haven't heard where those students were prior to the Hunt administration.

I'm willing to bet that since Jim Hunt came into power, SAT scores have risen. Although apparently they haven't risen enough to keep up with the nation's scores, which I believe are on the rise.

I'm also willing to bet that in 1979 SAT scores were at a low ebb; that's the year I took them.

Washington: Hurray for Daniel Patrick Moynihan Democratic senator from New York, who resigned from the Senate Intelligence Committee in protest of Uncle Ronnie's not informing Congress about the covert mining of Nicaragua's ports by the CIA.

The resignation won't cause any great change, but at least he took a strong stand.

Wilmington: I understand that there is a column in the UNCW paper called "The Right Stuff", though I haven't read it yet. What kind of name is that for a newspaper column? Sounds more like a movie or the answer to the question, "What does Christie Brinkley have?"

Prediction: Uncle Ronnie is going to be President for the next four years, and although it breaks my heart to write it, I think (No, I can't say it) Jesse Helms is going to be in the Senate for another (Oh my God!) six years.

There may be a bright side; I predicted Washington to defeat Oakland by three touchdowns in the Superbowl.

Since this is my last column, I'd like to thank those who have said they enjoyed my column and make a comment to those who have responded negatively. Well, the editor wouldn't allow me to put what I wanted to say, so just remember the words from a commercial, "The mind is a terrible thing to waste."

Students Express Preferences

George Walker
News Editor

"Ideally it should be a place that fosters casual encounters, one that is functional and also gives students a chance to be leaders."

So said University Union Director Linda Moore of the massive structure, now beginning a second year of service and located in a convenient central campus location.

The underlying cause for Moore's reflection came after a recent campus mail survey was administered by Sociology professor Rob Miller's 306 class. Student attitudes toward Union operations were the main focus of the of the questionnaire, which was sent to 659 students.

Of the 140 replies, females, blacks, and freshmen had the highest participation rate.

Survey categories included opening hours and entertainment preferences, awareness of existing services and use, and upkeep of the facilities. In essence, everything.

Moore says the Union was a long time in coming. "When I first arrived at UNCW in 1972, I was told by the Vice-Chancellor to make plans for a new Union," she says, relieved to be rid of the midget-sized Hinton James building beside Trask Coliseum. "In the fall of '79 we were finally ready to go with it."

Growth. More growth.

Moore adds that despite its youth, the Union is already undersized. Frustrated studyroom seekers and jammed hallways are as typical of the Union as sold-out movie tickets and unparked bicycles. No extra meeting or office space exists. Plans for future expansion are in the making.

Space or no space, trends did emerge from the survey. Seventy-five percent indicated that operating hours are "about right" and a majority favored the 7-11pm scheduling of activities. Movies (87%) are the preferred entertainment, with comedians (84%) and rock concerts (71%) close behind. On visitation, seventy-four percent come at least four times a week, and the post office has 93 percent usage. A majority were satisfied with the sanitation, decor, and snack bar food and service.

Budget making time comes soon and these results will be carefully recalled by Moore. She will have $54 from the fees of each student to cover operating costs and debt payments.

It isn't enough.

"We would like to have more social activities for the students," says Moore. "But until the number of students paying fees increases, we will have to cut back in this area. Luckily, University Program Board and other groups provide events for the entire campus."

Ultimately, it is this wide array of "provisions" that draws UNCW students to the Union.

Sorority Announces Year's Activities

Courtesy Alpha Delta Pi

1984 has been a productive and busy year thus far for the Alpha Delta Pi sorority. We kicked off the spring semester with a pledge retreat that included a pig pickin'. We would like to congratulate the following members of the Delta Pledge Class: Joy Cottle, Donna Fincham, Samantha Shepard, and Lou Ann Stokes on being initiated into Alpha Delta Pi on January 21st.

In January we held our annual scholarship banquet. Several girls were commended for their outstanding scholastic performance. Lori Gallimore received the award for the sister with the highest grade point average.

Elections were held in late January. The following officers have been installed for the 1984-1985 term: Cari Abatiello, President, Angel Kiesel, Executive Vice President, Laura Benavides, Pledge Education Vice President, Andrea Harkin, Recording Secretary, and Sharon Batten, Corresponding Secretary.

February was a busy month for us. On February 5, eight delegates from Alpha Delta Pi attended the NCSU Greek Leadership Conference in Raleigh. On February 14, we held a very successful Valentine's Day Balloon Sale fund raiser. On February 26, we attended a province exercise-a-thon in Chapel Hill. The Eta Alpha chapter alone raised $750.00 for our Philanthropy the Ronald McDonald House.

Alpha Delta Pi is not all work and no play. On a social note, we have held mixers with the brothers of Pi Kappa Phi, Delta Tau Delta, and the brothers of Delta Upsilon from Chapel Hill. On March 31, we held our first spring formal at the Terrace Inn, which was followed by a Senior/Alumnae Tea the next day to honor our graduating seniors.

And finally, the sisters of Alpha Delta Pi would like to extend a congratulations to the following: the Alpha Lambda Omega sorority for becoming an associate member of the UNCW Panhellenic Council, Delta Tau Delta fraternity for their installation, and Sigma Alpha Epsilon for placing first in Greek Week.

We would also like to recognize a few of our sisters for their accomplishments: Linda Williams for receiving the Greek Woman of the Year Award and Joy Cottle for receiving the Delta Tau Delta Sweetheart Award. We are very proud of them.

System Improves New Direct Dial

Courtesy UNCW News Bureau

Beginning April 20, persons placing phone calls to the University will be able to dial individual offices directly, bypassing the switchboard operator.

In announcing the installation of the equipment currently underway, Dr. Jairy Hunter, vice chancellor for business affairs and development, noted that this long-awaited development "will solve the greatest complaint we have had from the public for the past five years."

Phone calls to the university are now made to a central number, 791-4330, and the switchboard operator must route each call individually. When circuits are overloaded, callers hear a continuous ringing, rather than getting a busy signal, often prompting complaints that UNCW appears to be closed.

"We are very pleased and excited to have this problem corrected," Hunter said. Following that [the switch], individuals can dial directly to an office."

Once installed, the UNCW number will have a new prefix -395. The main campus telephone number will be 395-3000. Individual telephones may be reached by dialing 395-3 plus the last three digits of present extension numbers. For example, the University Union Information Center has two extensions, -2841 and 2846. After April 20, it can be reached by dialing 395-3841 or 395-3846.

Many students enter college right after high school, complete four years of study and graduate with a college degree. This is the typical situation and a course that the majority of students choose to follow.

This is not the case, however, for those who choose to attend college a couple of years after graduating from high school, who choose to have a family first and who enter a university non-traditionally or for any number of other reasons.

An unclassified student is not a junior or senior, not even a freshman or sophomore. They are just unclassified. This often causes an uneasy feeling for some of these students other requirements. They are allowed to take any undergraduate course offered, as long as the prerequisite is honored, but are limited to only taking two courses per semester or summer term.

The unclassified student must also complete English 101-102 and three semester hours of basic math and receive a C or better for each. After the student has completed a total of 15 semester hours with an average of C on all work attempted, he/she may then apply for admission as a degree candidate.

UNCW currently has 334 unclassified students enrolled. These students are mercifully attempting a college career, and sometimes these obstacles may seem rough. The pressures of attending a university are hard enough-without added obstacles.

because they are just as eager to pursue an education as any classified student. "Unclassified" sometimes sounds like a harsh label to give someone, but it doesn't mean that this student is any less serious or unable to obtain a degree than the next student.

According to the UNCW catalog, a student may apply for admission at UNCW as unclassified if he/she is 1) a transfer student who has not been enrolled in an institution of higher education for at least one year and who has not been academically suspended within the last three years or 2) a high school graduate who has not attended an institution of higher education and has been graduated at least two years.

The unclassified student also must follow a few

The UNCW Research Committee is pleased to announce the Eleventh Annual Student Research Fellowship Competition which carries a stipend of $350.00 for the academic year for each recipient. The fellowships are intended to stimulate original research or other outstanding creative activity among students at UNCW. Any rising junior or senior who has completed at least one semester at UNCW and who has at least a 3.0 overall grade point average may apply for a fellowship. Questions about the Fellowship Competition should be directed to Dr. Andrew Hayes, Research Committee Chair, or to any member of the committee.

Mainly a youth-oriented rock picture, Footloose has the adult sensibility that is lacking in other troubled-teen pictures. From its foot tapping opening to the 'happily ever after' ending, this picture is full of the latest songs from various artists including Kenny Loggins who sings the title cut.

The beginning quickly establishes the story with Reverend Moore (John Lithgow) welcoming Ren (Kevin Bacon) and his mother, Ethel (Francis Lee McCain) to the town. Ren and his mother, just moving from Chicago, realize that there will have to be some adjustments made since moving to a smaller town.

At his first day of school Ren quickly finds a friend in Christopher Penn, wonderfully portraying a hulking, thick-witted farm-boy named Willard, who is anxious for a little of life's excitement. Together they teach and learn each others' ways and become the best of friends.

Reverend Moore's sexy, confused daughter, Ariel (Lori Singer), sees Ren as a fresh new breath of air in their stalemate town.

There seems to be a generation gap between the young and old which makes this movie work. The older generation banned music and dancing in the town because of an accident years ago involving teenagers and music.

Essentially the movie is good because the characters are portrayed very well.

Every year there is a motion picture made that should be viewed by the whole family. This year Orion pictures has done at least half of that.

Harry and Son starring and directed by Paul Newman, is the Father and Son picture of the year.

Newman portrays an embittered construction worker who is laid off from work when he begins to have headaches affecting his vision.

Newman's character, Harry Keach is turned down time after time for job interviews; his temper rises, and he looks for refuge.

The flick also stars Newman's real-life wife, Joanne Woodward, and Robby Benson as Newman's professional surfer son.

As the film progresses, Harry and his son grow farther apart. Harry finds every possible thing wrong with his son. But, Benson always replies, "I love you, Pop."

The film is a touching story of a widower and his loving son. The truth is, Harry is afraid of getting old and showing any affection.

What can a guy do when a naked girl shows up in New York City with his wallet and ID? Take her home and fall in love, of course.

Splash starring Life covergirl, Caryl Hannah, and John Candy follows the adventures of a lonely city man falling in love with a beautiful girl with a dark secret.

This seemingly hopeless situation goes from one hilarious scene to another as Madison, the mermaid, learns to speak English, buy clothes, and is pursued by a mad scientist trying to prove she's a mermaid.

Can this be true love for Alan Bauer finally? He must decide when Madison's six days as a human come to an end.

This delightful tale, although somewhat adolescent, brings a new twist of romance to the screen.

Splash seems to hover somewhere between the real world and a fantasy land as the viewer is caught up the in the love affair, and at the same time, sees pressures and problems placed on them by the outside world.

This comedy is also capable of bringing a tear to the viewer's eye as it depicts sacrifices lovers must make for one another.

John Candy gives a wonderful performance as Alan's "big brother." Candy, who earned his reputation for comedy through Stripes, is hilarious as a lonely fellow who hides his resentment and anger through riotous living. This includes many women, drinking, and lack of employment. Although he is a comedian, Candy does a few sincere scenes in trying to make Alan understand what he really has with his beautiful mermaid.

Tom Selleck's newest movie this year is Lassiter, a movie release by Warner Brothers. The movie, produced by Albert L. Ruddy and directed by Roger Young, is an action-packed almost spy type of movie set in Britain just before World War II.

This film is total action from start to finish which characterizes Selleck's earlier movie High Road to China and his hit t.v. series Magnum P.I. His acting is good and seems to fit his character perfectly. Many of his actions and expressions almost parallel those of his character on Magnum.

Nick Lassiter is an elegant jewel thief who is blackmailed by the FBI and Scotland Yard into stealing $10 million in Nazi diamonds passing through London.

Lassiter gets help from his British girlfriend Sara (Jane Seymour) and a London cabdriver, Smoke (Ed Lauter), who just happens to be an underworld car thief. They are to steal the diamonds from the German spy, Countess Kari von Fursten (Lauren Hutton) who seems to have unusual tastes for pain and violence.

Set during the late thirties, the film was shot in London. Old talk, dress, and cars give the movie a special knack, making it seem almost real.

Record Review

The smoke begins to melt as the two dueling lead guitarists wind down their bashing chords of steel. They beat a retreat down the gangways at the wings to the back center of the stage. Lead singer Rob Halford breathes fire on his ring finger and takes off his motorcycle cap, slowly nodding agreement with the crowd ("This show is hot"). He raises his fist and rejoices with the crowd. Wordless at first his scream rises above the motley array of bikers, Twilight-gleaming marines, and young punks: "Judas Priest!

Judas Priest! Judas Priest! Welcome to the annual heavy metal vigil - the communion. Long Live Judas Priest!

"The Metallian - rising from darkness where Hell hath no mercy and the screams of vengeance echo on forever, only those who keep the faith shall escape the wrath of the metallian ... master of all metal".

Admirers of metal, leather, motorcycles and spiked helmets, studs and wrist watches; a scream before a melody, and raw noise before a harmony: welcome to the frightening rage of Judas Priest!

Come ye faithful, let us raise a toast of plenty and toss a mug of potent elixir into the rotting streets. This world's gonna burn - hell bent for leather and screaming for vengeance it is written.

"I know you like it hot
Love to writhe and sweat
You think that this feels good
You ain't felt nothing yet."

Halloween? The final chapter?
Night of the Living Dead?

"If the man with power can't keep it under control. Some heads are gonna roll."

Up and down the gangplanks at breakneck speed, Halford rides a Harley to the stage front and casually reclines in permanent bliss. Lightning spurts from the Metallian.

"Rock Hard Ride Free
All day, all night
Rock Hard Ride Free
All your life".

Judas Priest is the archetype for heavy metal and proud of it. Appealin to the teen dream the Priest employ the staggering twin lead guitar attack of K. K. Downing and Glenn Tipton to cut up space and time. Combined with the vocal shrieks of Rob Halford this trio's intent is to tear the night into shreds with blistering energy and piercing leads. In this they do succeed but the real treat is the goods live with one of the best light shows in rock. Next time they play Fayetteville (which will be soon) wrap a mattress around your body and bounce among the crowd. Heavy duty!

Students Say No to Indoor Seaside Jam

George Walker
News Editor

At 9:30 AM last Saturday morning, T. Lankford crept down a silent hallway of Dorm '79 towards the multicolored parking lot for a 10 mile run to the Bridge Tender Restaurant. Budweiser cans littered the floor, and the only sound of people were those who filled their ice coolers in anticipation of Seaside Jam V.

When Lankford reached the road, he deftly strided into the brisk wind, one that pushed straight into his face. At the long awaited halfway point, he turned for home and felt it comfort him from behind. Yet, he found a new burden to reckon with. The air became extremely hot, and the black asphalt roads' absorption of the sun had blistered the toes on his feet. He finished in a staggering sprint, and promptly searched out a water fountain.

Then came the day's biggest jolt! The Seaside Jam would be held inside—because of rainy conditions.

Despite the irony, the decision could go no other way. The simple fact stands, says Special Programs Director Ellen Servetnick "that six hours is needed to set up the equipment for a concert."

Six hours before singer Gene Cotton would ignite the fifth annual benefit for the whales, thunderstorms beat upon Wilmington with a violent force. Time had run out. Trask Coliseum would be host to Cotton, Sleeper and Tony Carey.

When the news spread, most UNCW students pocketed the $3 admission price and sought refuge at Wrightsville Beach. In the sand, they said, "We can socialize in the sun and drink beer." Alcohol is prohibited in Trask Coliseum.

By late afternoon, a sparse crowd of less than 200 had braved the air conditioning and shadowy lights and the doors were eventually opened for all comers.

At about this time, a tag football game was played on Brooks Field. The sun and fun of the outdoors was too much to pass up for UNCW students

Starting Over

George Walker
News Editor

The struggle to begin cable operations is over for campus radio station WSEA, but the real battle will start soon when applications are sent to the FCC for future broadcasting rights.

Jack Sessoms, General Manager of WSEA, says "the only roadblock to broadcasting is TV station WECT's protest of a UNCW broadcast station."

"It is standard procedure for them," he said. "They blocked an attempt by ECU to broadcast."

"We know that 150 watts won't interfere with their signal. It probably wouldn't even if we were at their tower."

According to FCC regulations, the action by WECT must be challenged in court or it will stand. Court action translates into heavy money.

Sessoms hopes to negotiate with WECT. If no agreement is made, the new struggle for broadcasting rights may outlive the one for cable.

Bike Riders Cause Problems

Remember when mom always said, "Look both ways before crossing the street"? Well, at UNCW it is, "Look both ways before crossing the sidewalk," due to the large amount of bicycles being pedalled across the campus.

According to Joe Johnson, the Chief of Campus Police, there are approximately 250 bicycles registered on campus this year. That seems as though every one of these riders has chosen the sidewalk to ride on.

Bicycles, as well as mopeds, are prohibited on the sidewalks, but this law is very rarely enforced. Surprisingly, the amount of accidents involving bicycles is fairly low. Most bicycle accidents do not involve cars, but involve collisions between bicycles. And there have been no reports of a bike actually running over a pedestrian, said Johnson.

Although there have been only a few accidents involving bicycles, students who walk to class still complain about all the bikes riding on the sidewalks. "Why can't they ride on the road like they're supposed to?" said one pedestrian who had been run off the sidewalk by two people riding side by side. "It's pretty bad when it's safer to walk in the middle of the road than on the sidewalk."

But many people who do ride a bike to class also have an argument. They want to know why there aren't any bike routes.

A bike routes would provide a place for bike riders to ride without bothering pedestrians on the sidewalks and cars on the roads. According to Johnson, the subject of a bike route is still in the discussion stage, and as of now no plans have been made.

Johnson would like to urge people to register their bikes with the Campus Police. Registering of bikes is done on a 24 hour basis at the Campus Police station and is done for free. Each person who registers a bike receives a sticker with an unique serial number on it. This serial number is used entirely as a means of identification and as a deterrent to theft.

Campus Ministry Sponsors Good Friday Event

James Bernhardt
Journalism Contributor

In this spectator, entertainment oriented society, we are more often than not standing on the outside of activities looking in. This is true on t.v., at sporting events, and day to day at UNCW.

On Good Friday, April 20, on campus at UNCW, there is a chance for everyone to experience a worshipful, processional program.

The United Campus Christian Ministry, a multi-denominational group, is putting together an ecumenical or non-denominational, event. This event is being called "The Way of the Cross" and will begin in front of the University Union at 12:00 noon on April 20. The processional will follow 14 stations located around campus.

The "Way" will last about one hour. Stations will have psalm readings, some singing, experiential events, and prayer. A cross will be constructed to carry from station to station.

Joseph Cooper of the Church of the Servant Episcopal Church will be on hand and has helped organize this program.

All are invited and welcome to "The Way of The Cross."

Anyone interested in working on The Seahawk staff for 1984-85 may get in touch with Advisor Bill Atwill in the English Department. People interested in layout, writing, production, ad sales, accounting, editing or general work are encouraged to apply.

Apathy Prevalent Among Students

Suzanne Parker
Journalism Contributor

UNCW students are "chips off the old block of Eastern North Carolina's public opinion" as far as politics go, said Dr. James Dixon, chairman of the political science department at UNCW.

According to Dixon, the majority of the students at UNCW and colleges everywhere are more concerned with things that affect them more closely, such as career plans, personal relationships, and having a good time.

This political apathy is demonstrated during every Student Government Association election on campus, said Dixon. There is rarely a large outflow of students responding to these elections. Because of this lack of participation, the actual majority of students do not choose the SGA representatives.

The political awareness of students seems to have decreased to an all-time low, but according to Dixon, there are reasons for the increase in political apathy, other than a lack of interest among students.

One reason is that there are not as many outstanding or controversial issues as there have been in the past. In the 1960's and 1970's college students across America were very verbal in their political opinions, and the issues they protested, such as the draft, the Viet Nam War and civil rights. There were more issues for college students to be affected by.

Dixon also said that the average college student does not have a sufficient background in politics as far as the structure of government, government personnel, and what policies certain candidates support. Most college students do not know how the government is run, so therefore, they are politically apathetic.

Dixon said there is a small amount of students who have some political concerns at UNCW. Students who are majoring in the humanities or the social sciences are usually more politically oriented than other students. These students are concerned with, among other issues, the economy, nuclear destruction, abortion and capital punishment. Dixon said there is also a surprising interest in the blue laws of Wilmington.

Sinclair Williams, a junior at UNCW, has recently been notified that his poem "Mother's Closet Door" will appear in The American Collegiate Poet's Anthology.

He has also received an award of merit for his poem "Compass Love". Williams was asked to submit this poem for publication in a book of the world's most beloved poems.

Sinclair Williams claims Ms. Welborn of the English Department is the reason he is inspired to write. He said, "She taught me to believe in myself and my writing".

This commencement will be the first of its kind for UNCW. In the past, graduates' names have been read with graduates presented by department to the assembly during the commencement ceremony. This year, commencement will be a convocation of all graduates, faculty, participants, and guests followed by smaller departmental ceremonies where graduates will be personally recognized and presented with their diplomas. Each department will hold a reception for graduates and their guests following the diploma presentation.

Graduates are reminded that they may pick up caps and gowns in the book store between 8 a.m. and 4 p.m. Monday through Friday. Commencement rehearsal for UNCW graduates in August and December, 1983, and spring 1984 will be held at 10 a.m., Friday May 11 at Hanover Hall. The UNCW Alumni Association will provide refreshments on the lawn outside Hinton James Building immediately following rehearsal. All graduating seniors are invited to attend.

National Fraternity Installed

Courtesy UNCW News Bureau

Delta Tau Delta International Greek fraternity was formally installed at UNCW in black-tie ceremonies at 7:30 p.m., Saturday, Marcy 31, in the Union dining room. With the presentation of the charter for the Zeta Tau Chapter, Delta Tau Delta will become the sixth national fraternity in UNCW's Interfraternity Council.

The Zeta Tau Chapter has forty-three members. The group was organized among friends living on the third floor of Galloway Hall in 1982. They became the Crescent Colony of Delta Tau Delta in the spring of 1983. Saturday's events culminated a year of colonization.

Dr. William H. Wagoner, chancellor, welcomed the fraternity to campus. Keynote speaker for the evening was the Rev. Grover C. McElyea of Dallas, Texas, minister of Merciful Savior Episcopal Church there and international president of Delta Tau Delta.

Also in the program will be Thomas S. Sharp from Hammond, LA, president of Delta Tau Delta's south division, who presented the Zeta Tau Charter to Jay M. Harris, Jr., president of the fraternity.

Other officers of the new fraternity are vice president, Kevin Hinsdale; treasurer, William D. Johnson, Jr.; recording secretary, Chris Bedrosian; corresponding secretary, Andy Gates; and sergeant-at-arms, James B. Mundell.

The League of Women Voters will be sponsoring a panel discussion on April 17 titled "Where Do We Go From Here?" This discussion on the future of New Hanover County will center on what kind of county we want to live in, what our priorities are, and basically what we want.

The panel will include Felix Cooper, County manager; Dave Hilliard, president of Wilmington Board of Realtors; Jim Long, president of the Chamber of Commerce; William Wagoner, Chancellor; Karen Gottovi, New Hanover Commissioner; and Jacqueline Morris-Goodson, District Court Judge. It will be held at the County Commissioners Meeting Room, 320 Chestnut St., at 7:30 p.m.

Candidates forums, sponsored by the League of Women Voters, will be held on April 18 for all School Board candidates and April 25 for all County Commissioners. They will be held at the New Hanover County Library at 7:30 p.m.

WP/WF Abolished: New Policy Instated

James Lee
Associate Editor

The Faculty Senate voted last spring to abolish the policy of WP-WF and institute a single W (withdraw) system in its place. According to the new policy, the amount of time a student is allowed to withdraw from a class has been cut almost in half.

The last day to withdraw from a class this fall will be the end of the sixth week of school, Wednesday, October 10, the day before fall break. An appeal can be made after this date to each Academic Dean, but the appeal must be initiated by the student.

"The feeling in the Senate for quite a long time now has been that the period to withdraw has been too long," says Faculty Senate Chairperson and psychology professor Dr. Kathy Kowal. "The period is more in line now with what other schools are doing. In some schools the withdraw period is as short as four weeks.

Dr. Kowal stressed that "we've done away with the WF. I think students should like that. With the old policy, if a person took the first test, flunked it, and discovered they had no aptitude for the course; it was too late. They would receive a WF and get penalized for attempting the course."

A person can now drop a class up to the sixth week of school, even if they are failing.

The discretion of allowing a student to exit a class with a WP or WF has been taken away from the professor. A student can now drop a class without consulting with the professor. The complete process is handled at the Registrar's Office.

The Assistant to the Vice-Chancellor for Academic Affairs, Dr. James McGowan feels the new policy will "place a lot of responsibility on the student. They will have to think in advance how serious they are about a course, because beginning the seventh week, there is no possibility of getting out. If you came to study, by the end of six weeks, you should know if you are going to pass or not."

He also said, "It may force the kid who might buckle, to hang in there and that might require students and advisors to work closer together."

Assistant Dean of Students Pat Leonard feels that "with this new policy, maybe we are helping students to make a more thoughtful decision."

The Academic Standards Committee, a faculty/senate subcommittee who studied the policy, looked at other schools and then made their recommendation to the faculty senate, who approved their recommendation. The measure was approved by Chancellor Wagoner.

The new withdrawal policy affects only undergraduate students. The drop period for graduate students remains the same. If a graduate student fails a single course, they flunk out. It was felt they need the extra time.

Registration To Be Overhauled

James Lee
Associate Editor

When Kelly Helms arrived to register at 6:am, the line of students waiting to enter Trask Coliseum extended from the side door entrance, over to the street, down the side of the coliseum and was about to make the turn across the front of the building. At 9:30am, three and one half hours later, Kathy had registered for her classes and was waiting to turn in her course cards and pay her bill. "I'm just glad it's over," she said. "I got all of the classes I wanted, except one, so I guess it was worth it."

When Bill Jonston arrived, at 8:30am, he noted that "the line was long, but it wasn't too bad. It took me only a half an hour to get inside from the front doors of Trask." By 9:50am there was no line outside of the building.

Campus Policeman B.W. Dawson said that students had been "nice and orderly all day" and that "lines moved real smooth and steady."

It is generally agreed that registration has become a smoother process over the years, but the lines are not growing shorter.

Next March, the Registrar's Office will begin to implement a system of on line computer registration that will make the present card system obsolete and put an end to students waiting in long lines on the traditional registration day.

With the new computer system, students will no longer fill out forms from each administrative office. Dr. John Anderson, Director of the Computing Service Office in Hoggard Hall, said that "the system will integrate each office together."

A student will come to a terminal with their class schedule and their registration will be finalized right there. If a class is already filled, if the student is ineligible, if there is a conflict in class time with the schedule the student came up with, or if they owe any previous bills, all that information will be available without having to venture from one line to another.

The new system will simplify the preregistration process as well. J. Murry Lee from the Office of the Registrar said that "you can have an individual preregister in one building, so they don't have to travel from one department to another."

He said our present card system is slow and that our grading system has already moved away from cards. According to Mr. Lee "we have out grown our cards now." The new system will be "faster, more efficient and have fewer errors. There will be no cards at all. Each student will be on line."

He also said that "it will be state of the art for the state, the best that is available and right now we will be the first school in the UNC-system to have the complete package."

About the only person who will be saddened by the end of registration day is Reverend Bob Haywood, who has offered free refreshments to students leaving registration for the past four years. He said "I'll be a little sad" to see the end of the registration day, but "I'll just have to look for another way to meet students."

Students Resist New Rule

Damned if I do. Damned if I don't.

New ARA (cafeteria) manager Steve Cummings has probably muttered these words recently after UNCW students resisted a new rule which would have stopped thefts of food and supplies.

The new rule? No book bags allowed inside the cafeteria. It's no secret that in the past silverware and snack foods have commonly been taken out. "The old manager caught a guy carrying food out last year," says Cummings. "He had four liters of juice and half a cake."

Thus the new rule came into effect and intimidated students who didn't want to leave their books and possessions unguarded.

Some compromises were brought to Cummings' attention, including student lockers, or just placing a person at the exit area to check bags.

But the old system will prevail and the students will bare the costs of any thefts. "But we will make spot checks on bags," says Cummings. "And the punishment will be harsh if we can get the support of the administration and the students."

Editor:

State has a Bell Tower, Chapel Hill an Old Well and what does UNC-W have? Well, one-third the student body, one-eighth the library, one-eighth the outside basketball courts, etc., etc. But I have no problem with that. However, the administration's "cart before the horse" search for a landmark is irritating for several reasons.

First, a college is ultimately respected for, or built around, its facilities. While the trustees are dumping money into a "Tonka Toy" map of New Hanover County, Randall Library expansion is set back yet another year--so is a football program.

Secondly, this university is young--too young for landmarks. Landmarks evolve out of the spirit of an institution. They should not be some shallow administrative marketing technique to play "keeping up with the Joneses" within the Carolina system.

Third,--priorities--A map? How completely in touch with the pulse of the student body! Daily in my walks across campus I hear students cry out for a map with five unconnected walls. This should satisfy the multitudes nicely...at incredible expense. Bravo.

I'm not alone in my views, or sarcasm. I heard several students laughing outright at this bland useless expense. Some aesthetics are important but facilities can look nice, and, more importantly, be functional for the student body it ultimately serves.

For Long Distance, Deposit Firstborn Child.

I stood in line for half an hour in Galloway's lobby for a phone last week. I got to the front and they wanted my dorm and room number...My name...My address...My home phone...My parents' names...Their address...Their phone number...My roommate's name...Her address...Her social security number...Her parents' names...Their address...Their phone number...Have I ever had a phone before?...140.00 dollars and a male child.

For a phone?

Forget it!!!

They patly explained that the average person spends $25 a month in long distance calls--and they need to cover two month's bills. One-hundred dollars!!! Not to mention installation. Forty dollars for me to plug my phone in the wall and Southern Bell to flip a switch.

Heavy duty installation!!!

And the questions they asked! It sounds like they're afraid you'll move without paying your bill...but it's nearly impossible to get out of your dorm contract--you have to be married, withdrawn or dead! And the phone company has your home address, and your parent's too! What's the big deal?

Having no phone is such a handicap. You can't very well say, "Well, Scott, here's my room number, why don't you drop by and ask me out sometime?" You can't call your professors when you're dying of flu or any other convenient illness. You can't get pizzas delivered. You can't call your parents to plead, "Send money!" Sure, you CAN write your parents, but "Dear Domino's" just doesn't cut it.

I wish they'd never deregulated ol' Ma Bell...The new rates aren't more competitive, just more prohibitive!

Stillpoint

By Bob Haywood,

So we begin again, zooming from home to class to office to library to cafeteria--clutching schedules and syllabi in our hands and making long lists of chores and assignments. New surroundings, new people, expectations or roommates and professors and parents seem to mount an attack on our inner citadel of security, leaving us uptight, tense; dealing with our days in kind of clinched fist belligerency. "I just got to get all this stuff done!!"

The wisdom of our world is the wisdom which says: "It's best to stand firm, to get a good grip on yourself, hold your own against everyone and everything that demands from you. If you don't carry a weapon, if you don't make a fist, and don't scramble to get and keep what you need, then you're just asking for trouble.

So, grab hold and go for it!"

I find real value and the measure of peace in learning to live, less with clenched fists and tight shoulders and more with open hands; less grasping and clutching of days and people and tasks. It has to do with reclaiming control from all those forces outside of ourselves that try to tell us what is important. It has to do with discovering (or rediscovering) that deeper Self that allows us to set goals and arrange priorities consistent with our own sense of identity. The more consistency there is between our internal Self and outward activity, the more ease and gentleness we find even in the midst of days that will continue to be busy. Such an internal focus allows us to hold days and people and tasks more gently and loosely, i.e. with open hands. We see with clearer vision all the tasks and demands that the outside places upon us and can move away from a sense of life as burden to embrace the possibility and the promise of each day.

Moving from a clenched fist attack on each day's chores and demands toward living with open hands, comes, for me, in prayer and meditation. In such times of solitude and silence we can detach ourselves from all that claims our attention and demands our energy and put each day in a deeper perspective that will allow us to live with more ease and gentleness. As you move into this busy semester, I covet for you such an oasis of silence where you can plumb the depths of your own being and live into your world with more open hands.

Campus Herpes Epidemic Down, While Eating Disorders, Depression and Suicide Are Up

The campus herpes epidemic has subsided, but that news is mitigated by alarming increases in eating disorders, depression, and suicide, according to reports given at the recent American College Health Association's annual report in Atlanta, Ga.

Clifford Reifler, a physician at the University of Rochester, says "there has actually been a decrease of herpes cases on college campuses. The number of sexually-transmitted diseases on campuses is not as high as in the general population."

Many of the 240 campus health professionals attending the convention did agree that while herpes may have abated among the college population, suicide, eating disorders, and other stress-related maladies have skyrocketed in the last several years.

Next to alcohol abuse, suicide and eating disorders are the most prevalent student health problems, says Jim Dilley, ACHA executive director.

"There's no question that eating disorders--such as anorexia and bulimia--have become real student issues," Dilley says.

Anorexia victims, of course, slowly starve themselves to death in obsessive attempts to lose weight, while bulimia sufferers gorge themselves with food and then force themselves to vomit.

However, "suicide is our biggest and most threatening concern" among college students, according to U. of Washington physician Gordon Bergy.

Suicide is still the second leading leading cause of death among college students, second only to automobile accidents, and ongoing studies have shown campus suicide rates increasing steadily over the last few years, he adds.

The President's Corner

Eric Squires

Life, the final frontier. And I, for one, have been willing to go where no one has gone before, boldly or otherwise. For, I have seen, read and heard where others have gone, to see where I would go. That's one of the reasons I'm president, and for the second year, a successful one.

Life will always be the final frontier. And it is far too precious a gift to be wasted by any one individual, or institution. Many of you will not change once you have left UNCW. Your character will be established and your inner will, forever molded. UNCW can only do so much for us, and we should see to it that it does no less. In fact, we should leave our trademark on UNCW as being better because we came. Because we cared enough about ourselves and others, and got involved and changed what we felt would make UNCW a better institution for higher learning.

My philosophy as president, a student, and a Christian is a simple one. I believe in the deep down grass root integrity of people. There are many more people in the World wanting to make more of themselves and the lives around them. Then there are people just wishing to take advantage of situations and others for personal gain.

We must get involved with the school and others if we wish to make more of ourselves. The classroom can offer us one part, the student organizations the other.

I am your president, and your sworn representative. I will represent you in whatever you want to do, and however far you want to go. But I need your input.

You can start by simply writing the SGA office, attending meetings and speeches, voting, signing petitions, and writing the Editor. By a little effort on your part, UNCW can become so much more.

This is my space for the next year. And I will be writing you about the things on campus as I see them. Policies, programs, conduct, laws, breaks, food service, prices, sex, alcohol, procedures, activities, recreation, codes, and other controversial subjects that you would like to know about.

My job is to help inform. Yours is simply to decide. Together we all can put an end to the Dark Age, and replace ignorance with involvement.

Next week's topic: Prohibition.

A Seahawk meeting will be held in Room 205 of the Student Union on Monday, September 10, at 5:30. All students wishing to join The Seahawk are invited to come to the meeting. Even if you have already spoken to the Editor, or some other staff member, please attend. If you cannot attend, either come in earlier or leave a note on the door.

The "Right" Stuff

By Jay Stokely

Heating up around our state of North Carolina is the Senatorial race between Jesse Helms and Jim Hunt. It is one of the most publicized races in the nation. Here is a profile of one of these contestants-Jim Hunt.

Jim Hunt has given North Carolina the highest per capita tax rate in the south-and he continues to increase it! At the National Governors' Conference in Washington, DC, Hunt voted to increase your taxes by $217 billion. That's over $2500 for the average American family.

Jim Hunt opposed Reagan's Economic Tax Recovery Act which dropped inflation, unemployment, and taxes.

Hunt raised state spending by 83%. Imagine what would happen if he raised federal spending half that much! The federal budget would be out of sight.

Now let's get to education. After seven years of Jim Hunt our SAT scores are near the bottom nationally. Our teachers salary is 44th in the country.

Jim Hunt has worked too hard for his accomplishments and I think he deserves a rest. A long rest.

"BUT SERIOUSLY, FOLKS... THAT WAS OFF THE RECORD!"

Because of the tremendous growth of UNCW in the last several years, new Dean of Students Dick Mullendore is thrust in the peak of transition and confusion.

"Helping students through the growing pains is my main goal," Mullendore, a Charlottesville native, said recently. "There is a lot of room for improvement. Just look at the lines students stand in."

He also hopes to alter UNCW's high transfer rate. A recent study showed that 56% of incoming freshmen have aspirations of transferring to other schools.

Mullendore, 36, replaces former Dean, Gary Juhan, who is seeking a doctorate. His educational and administrative experience is impressive, so much so that at one time the word "professional student" would have fit nicely. His undergraduate degree came in 1970 at Bradley, and his Doctoral degree in 1980 from Michigan State.

So after years of moves, Mullendore is ready to put down some roots. His wife Jane, a physical therapist, is expecting a baby in March.

And Mullendore is expecting a satisfying career at UNCW.

College Costs Lower

The total cost of attending college this school year will increase only six per cent over last year, a new report by the College board concludes.

Over the last few years, says College Board President George Hanford, college costs have increased 10-11 per cent a year as colleges boosted tuition to keep pace with high interest rates and inflation.

The comparatively small increase in this year's costs marks what many experts hope is an end to the double-digit cost increases of the last several years.

Total college costs in the survey include tuition and fees, books and supplies, room and board, personal expenses, and transportation.

The Massachusetts Institute of Technology will be the most expensive school to attend this year-16,130

Bennington College comes in second for a total cost of 16,040, followed by Harvard at 15,750, Princeton at 15,625, and Barnard at 15,558.

Center Changes Name and Location

The Counseling and Testing Center has traditionally carried the stereotype as a place where mentally disturbed students went for treatment. This fall, the center has a new name-The Student Development Center-a new director, a new location and is trying to redefine its image.

Linda Shaddix, a counselor at the center, explains that "students, faculty and staff have a misconception of our office in the past. While we do want to continue to be here to help students who are having problems, we also want to be viewed as a resource for developmental issues for students like making career decisions and improving learning skills. We want to become a positive force in helping students develop their full potential."

Dr. Diane McKinstry, a licensed psychologist from Cornell University, will assume the role of Director Sept. 1 at the center's new location, 217 Alderman Hall. The phone number is 395-3280.

The Student Development Center offers several types of assistance. The Career Development Program is designed to help students decide what career they are best suited for guidance with what to major in. The program includes workshops, individual counseling and SIGI, a computerized career-decision making program.

A student facing academic problems can find assistance through the Center's learning skills program. It includes reading comprehension, speed reading, time management and study skills.

The disabled student can also find assistance through the center. They assist students with any barrier, accessibility or management problem. This assistance also includes a temporary disability, such as broken arm or leg.

The staff of the Student Development Center will be offering a variety of workshops throughout the school year. These will range from study skills, career development, assertiveness training, relationship enrichment and stress management.

In addition to all of these categories of assistance, the center still offers personal counseling in areas of relationships, depression, anxiety, stress, adjustment or any other emotional difficulty students need assistance with.

Red Dawn

A Non-traditional Rocker: Interview with Ric Ocasek of The Cars

By LaVera Parker Jeffries

As paratroopers drop across the Colorado plains, and fill a school, a sense of mystery invades this once peaceful setting.

The Soviet and Cuban paratroops have dropped down to take over this part of America. The realization of all this overpowers the emotions of the town's people and leaves them little hope to fight back. They become submissive and afraid. This is WWII without the use of nuclear weapons.

A group of high school students band together to form the only fighting force against the invaders. This group becomes known as the "Wolverines" and are hated by the enemies so much that the Soviets and Cubans risk tanks, people, helicopters and anything else to destroy this gang of high school seniors, but to no avail.

Kevin Reynolds wrote the screenplay and did a superb job. The stars, Patrick Swayze, C. Thomas Howell and Lea Thompson are sure to be seen in many upcoming movies. Their acting ability is splendid. Ben Johnson also followed through with a true-to-life performance. Other actors include Harry Dean Stanton, Ron O'Neal, William Smith and Powers Boothe.

The line of progress, plot and actions was excellent—well organized. This certainly gave the film the smoothness needed. Red Dawn is now playing at Independence Mall Cinemas on Oleander Drive.

A dirty white sofa is pushed away from the wall to make room for the paint cans, brushes, and newspapers matted on the floor. The only sign that this is the front office of the Cars'synchro Sound Studio is a "Candy O" t-shirt on one of the painters.

Spindle thin, instantly recognizable by his wig-wag hair-do, Ric Ocasek towers in the doorway, grinning at the scene in the room. Suddenly he turns in the narrow hallway and walks past a closet stuffed with framed gold records. His bright red sneakers squeak on the staircase as Ocasek heads downstairs. Below is an inter sanctum, with a patio set and a large Cinzano umbrella ("Everybody hangs out here") and a dully decorated, glassed-in TV room. Ocasek wanders in and languidly folds his long legs underneath him on the sofa.

The phone buzzes annoyingly and Ocasek, his grey eyes flashing, makes an attempt to disconnect it by throwing the receiver to the floor in disgust. Lighting a cigarette, he leans his chin on his hands, ready to begin.

The Cars have always had a reputation for helping struggling bands and musicians. Why is it that other successful bands don't do the same thing?

Ocasek: Maybe because we don't live in Hollywood. If we were in Hollywood, maybe we would get caught up in the whole LA scene. Or if we were in NY, we'd probably wear more make-up. Being in Boston, we're out from that particular microscope. You don't get influenced by the daily trends and scene. It has a lot to do with the show-biz aspect of rock and roll. Some people get lazy I guess, and you have to wonder how much substance there ever was. You know, the Cars get criticized for the same thing sometimes. But actually, it is just the way they are: they have a sound, and it's just the way they play it together. Knowing how other people are, I know the Cars do things differently than anyone else. I'm just not interested in the standard. I'd rather do something...

Off the beaten path.

Ocasek: Yeah, for me. Regardless of what the music sounds like that has always been my inspiration. I was never obsessed with success, I was obsessed with making music that I thought would be interesting to people, and to myself. Now I have the word success hung around my neck. It's like a coat or something. But it doesn't mean that much.

The best thing about success is that we have more toys and I can do more for people. I was always interested in working with other bands, even when I had nothing.

Did anyone do that for you?

Ocasek: No, who would have then?

What is the difference between your solo album-Beatitude- and a Cars album?

Ocasek: Well it's hard to pinpoint where I made the big left-I'm hearing everything from the inside. It is definitely more personal. And more raw, because everything was recorded at my home on an 8-track. I guess the main difference is that the Cars aren't playing in it.

How do you feel about producing versus performing?

Ocasek: I like performing better. Performing I like as long as it doesn't become redundant. We've gotten it down now to where we tour for only five weeks.

But basically I don't feel like touring. I don't just go out and do that kind of thing.

Do you think there is a gap between the performer and the audience?

Ocasek: Yeah, in a way there is a gap, but I can't really control it. It's all a result of selling a lot of records, you end up with that. Mass audiences are different from cults, and they come prepared for all the moves.

How do you write songs? Do you just sit down and say I'm going to write a song?

Ocasek: I write standing up all the time. (laugh) Actually I do write the whole song at once, lyrics and music. I usually have a good time.

Who has influenced your lyric writing?

Ocasek: A lot of beat poets have interested me. Jack Kerouac, Ferlinghetti, William Burroughs, ee cummings. I am trying to write a book of free verse "Pros and Cons"—But I keep putting it off. One thing in it is "There is one in a million." That's it.

How long will the Cars continue?

Ocasek: As long as they want. We all still get along great. We are definitely going to make more records.

Are you planning to take a break?

Ocasek: What would I do?

O'BOY

O Boy: Out of Space, Outta Sight!

O-Boy is either from the planet Zard--where some of the 88 sexes found there exist solely in the fourth dimension--or from a Richmond, Virginia hairstyling salon where Julie Jumper, Fiona LaFrance, and Zoe "Zowie" Shebelskie teamed up to provide futuristic music for an avant-garde design show.

The three member group performs with three synthesizers and two drum machines--and "computerized" haircolor and clothing.

Their own flamboyant electronic music makes them eligible for the New Wave category, but Fiona prefers "modern music", saying "New Wave reminds me of up-against-the-wall, colored wigs, leather and chains and stuff." Recently they recorded three demos with Dave Adams of Glass Moon. "Goo Goo Ga Ga" is an upbeat dance tune with percussion programmed by Julie. "Va Va Voom" has been called a "21st century striptease song that can laugh at itself..."--the song parodies the way women are presented in rock videos, and "Dance to the End of the Universe" seems similar to Prince's statement in "1999".

But the band denies searching for political messages to fill their songs, saying, "If someone can find a political message that they want to hear, that's fine. And if they just get fun out of it, that's fine, too."

O-Boy composes most of the music they play and adapt any songs they cover, like setting Patsy Cline's "I Fall to Pieces" to calypso, the Jackson Five's "I Want You Back," or the Yardbirds' "Over Under Sideways Down."

Perhaps the most irksome topic to the three is Cyndi Lauper's look. "Everyone thinks we look like her, or that we want to play like her--our music and our clothing are completely original," Julie emphasized.

Their strangest date so far? "Well, once we were booked for a 19-year-old girl's birthday party," Julie relates, "but there was a mix-up and she was 91. Everyone had a really great time...and we loved their spirit and their attitude."

Likewise, we're sure.

I Ain't 'Fraid A No Ghosts!

Sigourney Weaver sits in an armchair and laughs nervously. No, wait a second, that's not Weaver, but her stand-in—who, oddly enough, looks just like her. The real Weaver watches intently, standing a few feet away in comfortable looking sweats and worn old tennis shoes. Suddenly, three hairy, demonic arms shoot out of the chair, one between the stand-in's legs clutching her thigh, another out of the side to grasp her face, and a third from the other side that lands squarely across her chest. The logistics worked out, director Ivan (Stripes) Reitman calls for the real Weaver. This time, she's the one who laughs nervously.

Such are the goings-on on the set of Ghostbusters, a $30-million comedy starring Bill Murray, Dan Aykroyd, Weaver, SCTV's Rick (Strange Brew) Moranis and Annie (Heartaches) Potts, she of the big eyes and high pitched voice. Though described as "first and foremost a comedy," big-budget special effects permeate the film and are much in evidence as Weaver takes her seat, looking at it as if it were the electric chair.

"We were practicing with it yesterday," one technician says. "She sat in it for hours. She's been a real good sport, since the hands scratched her face up."

"Finally, she looked down at the big hairy arm between her legs and said, 'Go ahead: Make...my...day.'"

Filming such special effects sequences are by now old hat on this Columbia Studios set, covering two full soundstages. Richard Edlund, one of the chief magicians of George Lucas' Industrial Light & Magic, broke from ILM and is inaugurating his own special effects company (tentatively tagged Boss Films) with Ghostbusters.

"The effects," Edlund says, "are the equivalent of filming Raiders of the Lost Ark and

The story, written by Aykroyd and Ramis, involves three interpid parapsychologists who go into business for themselves when strange astral forces start to menace New York City (which, of course, has its share of spaced-out menaces to begin with). Somehow, a portal has opened in Weaver's apartment building allowing demons to enter our realm, and the Ghostbusters—armed wit technological weapons to combat the supernatural—ride their Ectomobile to the defense of humanity. And God help us, everyone.

Actually, the story is less written than outlined. Murray and Aykroyd adlib freely, and frequently a scene is planned, not considered to be funny enough and then quickly postponed while Reitman and his stars go off and huddle about how to improve it. Earlier in the production, for example, faced with some grotesque ghostly vision, Murray quipped, "Now there's something you don't see every day." The crew howled, and a line was born.

Meanwhile, Weaver has peeled off her sweats and waits patiently in pink stockings on the cold set for her call to armchair. Moranis—who plays her nerdy neighbor that is hopelessly in love with her—stands next to her. He barely comes up to her chin.

With 40 or so people cramped into the equivalent of a one-room apartment—which isn't that unusual in New York City or on Hollywood soundstages—there isn't much room for loitering. A crew member apologizes for bumping into Moranis while trying to line up the shot.

"No, no, you have genuine work to do," Moranis says, smiling. "Me, I'm just an actor."

A new chair has been inserted, one of several built over a period of months for a scene that will last only a few seconds onscreen. The first chair, elevated, allowed three puppeteers to get under it and manipulate the arms. This second chair has merely the arms, styrofoam and hollow but grotesquely realistic.

Weaver settles into the chair, and they begin adjusting the arms, which she practices grappling with while screaming. Supplied with springs, the arms cling to their respective targets—thigh, face and chest, none of which look like a bad place to be on the statuesque actress, who had a close encounter with another menacing arm in Alien. Because the production is slightly behind schedule, sets are being constructed elsewhere in the soundstage, and the pounding must stop so they can shoot the scene. One arm, they notice, doesn't adhere to Weaver's body as tightly as it should, so they delay the shot. The pounding begins again.

"We spent money putting an elaborate spring in that arm," explains Assistant producer Michael Gross, who supervises special effects, "but half the time with something like that we still end up jerry-rigging it." The arm is invisibly wired to Weaver's thigh. Looks like good work if one can get it.

With Weaver secured in the armchair, the next step is for the chair to quickly swivel 90 degrees, then shoot across the living room floor through an ominous, steam-filled doorway. Lit by eerie pink lights, the steam obscures several technicians frantically scurrying about trying to stay out of the line of the camera.

The chair, set on an invisible track like the one that slid the little girl across the kitchen floor in Poltergeist, makes a loud pneumatic hiss as it jolts Weaver into place, similar to the sound of the sliding doors in Star Trek. One quickly discovers that nothing is quite what it seems on this set, as the door Weaver faces begins to bulge and undulate, as if huge fingers are pressing against it from the other side.

The door, however, is rubber, and a group of somewhat bored looking technicians prod it with sticks from the back to produce the impressive bulging effect. Veteran cinematographer Laszlo Kovacs informs Reitman that the shot is lined up and ready, the lighting satisfactory. They are ready for a take.

"Struggle!" shouts Reitman; Weaver grapples with the arms.

"Scream!" he shouts; she does.

"Swivel!" The chair snaps into place, with force enough to give someone a good case of whiplash.

"Bulge!" The door begins to stretch and balloon out, a very strange thing for a door to do.

"Door!" yells Reitman. Slowly, the door swings open, and smoke billows out.

"Chair!" With that, the armchair shoots across the floor with shocking speed, but the left side smashes into the doorway, providing Weaver—whose hair, fortunately, is supposed to be dishevelled in the scene—with another healthy jolt.

"The chair has only a fraction of an inch clearance on either side," Gross confides.

Reitman chuckles. "Okay, let's adjust it and try it again."

Outside the bogus apartment an entire hotel hallway has been constructed, elevated high enough for more things to shoot out of other things, like the chair. Ghosts, it seems, do not stand on ceremony—and neither did the production, which created its share of havoc. The hallway, for example, is a replica of the Biltmore Hotel in Los Angeles, where the crew had done some filming before the hotel forbid them from doing any more when they destroyed a banquet room there.

"They apparently weren't too happy about that," Gross says, with a unique gift for understatement. "I think they were glad when we left."

The denizens of New York City weren't too happy either when the production "screwed up all the traffic in Manhattan" and scattered debris all over several major streets.

"We asked the city for an extra day to film, and they said, 'Go away,'" Gross recalls. "We weren't very popular. Some of the crew went into a bar near the shooting, and people asked, 'Who's doing this?'"

"We said, 'Hey, it's Coppola—he's crazy.'"

With a $30-million budget, when they couldn't go to New York, they could afford to bring New York to them. Giant black

The UNCW water polo team will achieve its first winning season ever if all goes well, says 3rd year coach Marc Ellington.

A 500 season is not usually something to get excited about, but UNCW has completed only two seasons of competition and comes off 10-15 and 7-10 records.

"Most of our opponents, such as UNC-Chapel Hill and Duke, have programs dating back to the early '70's," says Ellington. "And it is tough to compete with the northern schools because they have an abundance of talent to recruit." Water polo is commonly played in northern high schools.

Nevertheless, UNCW returns six skilled, seasoned players. Paul Thompson, Jeff Siggins, Bill Cottom, Greg Magdanz, Bill Biddix will be joined by freshman Don Hosier. Junior captain Brett Higgins is the key. "Higgins is a scoring machine," says Ellington.

The initial match of the season will be Sept. 14 vs. Washington & Lee in Lexington, Va. On Sept. 22, UNCW will entertain opponents that have yet to be determined.

A clash of wills. Greg Dalton, Trask Coliseum Director of Facilities, and two assistants, remove UNCW professor's equipment. The professors refused to give up designated lockers and now must check them out like students.

Soccer coach Calvin Lane anticipates tourney.

Port City Classic Begins Friday

Courtesy UNCW Sports Information

After a season-opening 3-0 loss Saturday at George Mason, the UNCW soccer team comes home to host its own Port City Classic this weekend at UNCW field.

The loss to GMU marked the first confrontation for a UNCW team in the ECAC South, which Seahawk teams joined this year.

The Port City Classic is set for Friday and Saturday, with double-headers on both days. UNCW will play Baptist College Friday at 4 p.m., and Georgia State Saturday at 4 p.m. Campbell will switch opponents with the Seahawks on both days and play its games at 2 p.m.

Spikers Seek Repeat

The UNCW women's volleyball team opens its 1984 season at home this Thursday in a double-dual meet against Pembroke State University and Gardner-Webb in Hanover Gymnasium.

The Lady Seahawks, who posted an outstanding 25-13 record last season, the most wins in school history, begin their first season in the powerful world of NCAA Division One action after being affiliated with NAIA in the past.

UNCW head coach Jackie Bartlett, who is beginning her fifth season with the Lady Seahawks, will also lead her team into the ECAC South this year.

"We're all very excited about the conference affiliation with the ECAC South," Bartlett said. "The opportunity to compete with the strong schools in that league will be a big challenge for us."

UNCW joins the conference which also includes William & Mary, Navy, East Carolina, James Madison, Richmond, George Mason and American University.

Cross Country

Midway through the UNCW cross-country intersquad meet last Monday, a feeling of inspired hope filled the thoughts of the seventeen competitors. The runners, mostly freshmen and sophomores, powered across the UNCW campus in a streamlined pack with lots of passing and little compromising. A stiff wind, always a nemesis to a distance runner, cut through the north side of campus. The sun began to tell.

Only the veterans on the team could be sensitive to this occurrence. Last season was a dismal one for UNCW, with a poor turnout accentuated by sporadic training. Yet, an enthusiastic group of freshmen and walk-ons greeted sixth year coach Bill Atwill this year, and suddenly the competition for travelling spots is fierce.

Leading the way is senior George Walker, the top runner for three consecutive years, hoping to demolish all school records. "I'm only expecting the best," says Walker, who averaged 96 miles a week this summer. "It's my last go around."

Not far behind stands freshman Ken McCraw, a rail-thin speedster, and T. Lankford, who missed most of the last year with a knee injury. "My first priority is to stay healthy," says Lankford, a senior. "My second is to get fast by the end of the season."

By that time, solid help should come from Frank Fren-duto, a sophomore from Pennsylvania, Chuck Luey, from New Jersey, Ric Olsen from Connecticut, and John Leahy. Layne Fuller, Jimmy Lee, and Kip Kiser have shown steady improvement in workouts.

The girls squad has a two-way battle for the top spot between seniors Caroline Brady and Brenda Walker. Brady is large for a distance runner, but relies on hard aggressive running to surpass. Walker has eight years of experience to carry to battle. Mary Edwards, a freshman from Ohio, will hold the third spot, but only if Leah Ashley, Pat Smith, or Sheila Viola don't catch up to her. Debbie Hockensmith, Sharon Royal, Sherri Mesplay or Colleen Lawrence will battle for travelling spots.

The season, which begins Saturday at Campbell, is a brutal one. The ascension and decline of varied runners will surely change the order, but hopefully won't break up the pack.

Registration provokes sour faces from frustrated students forced to wait in line.

Cadets Spend Summer Training

Jack Fryer
Staff Writer

Forty-three members of UNCW's Army ROTC detachment spent much of the summer in uniform, attending camps and schools located throughout the eastern US, according to Capt. Tim Fitzpatrick.

Fitzpatrick, Assistant Professor of Military Science for the Seahawk ROTC program, says the UNCW students travelled as far south as Fort Benning, Georgia for the extra training.

Each summer, ROTC cadets from all over the nation are sent to various Army schools. The summer programs are designed to give future officers a taste of service life in an actual military environment--while providing training opportunities that cannot be duplicated on a college campus. Cadets are exposed to a wide selection of training opportunities, including ROTC Basic Camp, Advanced Camp, Airborne, Air Assault, Ranger, Northern Warfare, and Cadet Troop Leadership Training.

Of the 43 cadets who attended the summer training, 17 went to Ft. Knox, Kentucky, for Army ROTC Basic Camp. The six week course gives rising juniors the the opportunity to qualify for the advanced ROTC program, with instruction in such areas as military courtesy, drill and ceremony, map and compass, and weapons.

Despite the fact that many of the things taught in basic camp are the same as that of regular Army basic training, the summer version does not obligate the cadet for service in any way, and simply takes the place of MS1 and MS11 classes on campus for those who have not had them. In addition, students completing basic camp take home pay checks of $670.00 for their time in uniform.

Twenty cadets ventured to nearby Fort Bragg for Army

ROTC Advanced Camp. Like the basic camp, the advanced camp runs for six weeks, but differs in that it goes into greater detail in areas such as tactics, small unit leadership, and weapons. The course is geared to provide MS111 and 1111 cadets with a background in those things an ROTC cadet needs to know in order to function as an Army officer upon commissioning. As well, it also exposes the students to opportunities in the various Army career fields, from finance to infantry.

Seahawk cadets Marc Wagoner, Bob Smith, Scott Toussaint, and Ron Walters all successfully completed the rigorous jump school training provided at Fort Benning, Georgia. The MS1111 earned their wings after making five airborne jumps from military aircraft under simulated combat conditions from as high as 3000 feet.

Three cadets, Charlie Brown, Richard Livingstone, and Pat Brewington attended Cadet Troop Leadership Training at Fort Story, Va., Fort Jackson, SC., and Fort Pickett, Va., respectively. The CTLT program is designed to provide cadets with the chance to serve in leadership positions with the authority of 2nd Lieutenants--in actual troop units.

Captain Fitzpatrick stated that UNCW's ROTC detachment anticipates commissioning 22 cadets as officers in the active Army, reserves, and National Guard this year. At present, there are 92 Seahawk student's in UNCW's cadet corp, but Fitzpatrick says the door is wide open to newcomers looking for "a challenge, a rewarding career, or information about the Army."

Anyone interested in the Army ROTC program at UNCW should stop by the offices in the "White House" behind Hoggard Hall, or ask any ROTC cadet about the opportunities in the program.

and white photographs were hand-painted and backlit to created the illusion of the New York skyline within the soundstage. Most impressive is the set constructed for the final scene, the largest currently being used in Hollywood. At a cost of one million dollars--and seen only in the final seven minutes of the film--it alone fills an entire soundstage. The set is the peak of an ancient church on top of Weaver's apartment building and from which the spirits are escaping into the real world. At 65 feet, with 30-foot swinging doorways and huge, styrofoam beasts (dubbed "Terror dogs" by the crew) guarding the entrance, the grey edifice looks like the sort of place Christopher Lee or Vincent Price would call home.

A giant panoramic view of New York serves as a backdrop for the structure, which requires 3000 man-hours to build with different shifts working around the clock. For long shots of building, an intricate model of the temple is superimposed onto a real building in New York where the New York shoot took place--an event, according to the crew, they are still talking about in the Big Apple. The production was one big worm as far as New York commuters were concerned.

The "Terror Dogs" underwent numerous changes in the course of the production. As Gross explains, "The early concept was abandoned because we wanted the scary parts of the movie to be more fun. It's that way in which the audience is having fun being scared."

It isn't all fun and games on the set, as the chair is still having difficulty clearing the wall. On the fifth take, it smoothly shoots through the doorway. Reitman breathes a sigh of relief, checks his slightly frazzled star and debates breaking for lunch. They decide to try it one more time. Stomachs rumble a bit, but no one complains. After all, when the spirits of technology are at work it's a shame to break the spell.

That's Ghostbusters...and that's Hollywood.

Get down to business faster. With the BA-35.

If there's one thing business students have always needed, this is it: an affordable, business-oriented calculator. The Texas Instruments BA-35, the Student Business Analyst.

Its built-in business formulas let you perform complicated finance, accounting and statistical functions -- the ones that usually require a lot of time and a stack of reference books, like present and future value calculations, amortizations and balloon payments.

The BA-35 means you spend less time calculating, and more time learning. One keystroke takes the place of many.

The calculator is just part of the package. You also get a book that follows most business courses: the Business Analyst Guidebook. Business professors helped us write it, to help you get the most out of calculator and classroom.

A powerful combination.

The Weekly Crossword

When Barky the dog died, Earlham College student Shannon Kirchoff heard about it in a sweet letter from home that began "Dear Glorious Child" and went on to express her parents' deep sorrow.

Kirchoff, shocked by the dog's sudden demise, wrote a reply that accused her parents of poisoning little Barky.

Sound cold and unforgiving?

Maybe, but Kirchoff's parents, the letter, the death and even Barky himself are just inventions of REM Enterprises, Ron Mader's "fake mail" service for students suffering from empty mail boxes.

For a modest $2 a semester, Mader will write his subscribers a monthly letter to help them ward off loneliness with hometown gossip. The only catch is that nothing is real.

Mader, 20, a telecommunications major at Indiana U., created his fake letters when friends complained they never got any mail.

Letter ideas originate in his copious note taking.

I take very different kinds of notes," he says. "They're obscure. If anyone looked at them, they would think 'very strange.' If I hear anything unusual, even in class, I write it down."

He began by offering subscribers letters from a "generic suburban family," and then branched out to offer subscribers a choice of friendly or hostile parents at the head of the family.

Mader says the "suspicious" parents, who typically begin their letters with a "Dear Trouble" salutation, outsell the supportive parents, who begin their letters with "Dear Glorious Child."

"I like writing the suspicious ones better," he adds.

Fall ID card validation stickers for full-time students are temporarily out. Pink papers ID cards with Dr. Bryan's signature stamped on both the front and back, along with the words "UNCW Gym" written in pen, are being issued in the meantime. A new supply of stickers should arrive in two weeks. Students who are issued this temporary card are being asked to return for a regular validation sticker at that time.

Computers To Alleviate Workload

James Lee
Associate Editor

Last August 28th, UNCW plunged into the modern computer age when the first of two powerful V.A.X. minicomputer systems became operational for academic use on campus. The second V.A.X. computer will be used solely for administrative purposes.

The two Digital Equipment Corporation computers, both located in Hoggard Hall, will cost the University over one million dollars during the next five years and will radically change the computing services offered on campus.

Dr. John Anderson, Director of the Computing Service at Hoggard Hall feels that "most of what you can do with computers today, you can do with the V.A.X."

He also said that the administrative computer, which will be fully operational by next spring, will "eliminate the use of the student as a messenger," and thus will "in a large part put an end to the lines you will see."

Dr. Paul Hosier, assistant Director for academic systems in the office of Academic Computing Services, is very excited about the V.A.X. computer that will be used in academic areas.

"Look at where we were four years ago. We had a tightly restricted computer center," he said. "Now we have a wide open, distributed computing system with modern equipment and compare that to where we will be in five years." He went on to say, "we are pushing out the areas where people have access to the computer. We have taken a great leap forward."

Before this change in technology, the computer had remote access to the Triangle University Computation Center's computer. Each user had to buy the right to be on-line at a cost of three hundred dollars per hour. This caused academic use of computers to suffer, because of the costs.

Access was via a key punch card that was fed into a key punch machine. UNCW installed its first key punch machine in 1969. IBM has since stopped making key punch machines. Most schools in the UNC system stopped punching cards years ago.

Instead of buying the right to use a computer somewhere else, and working with outdated punch cards and machines, the computer is now located right here on campus. Students can sit at terminals instead of key punch machines. Since they are no longer bound to cards, they no longer have to come to the computer.

There are currently three public cluster terminal rooms on campus where students have access to the V.A.X. These sites are located in Hoggard Hall, Bear Hall and the Behavioral Science Building. They are open to the public sixteen hours a day, 8 a.m. to midnight, seven days per week, to any student enrolled in a computer related class.

Presently there are roughly forty such classes offered at UNCW. About half of these are in the Computer Science Department, about one third in the Business Department and the rest are scattered in the various departments. These classes all have a fee of $17.50 which enables students to have privilege for use of the V.A.X.

Every faculty member in each department, as well as graduate students, also have access to the V.A.X. computer. A Tellabs Multi Plexer white box is being installed in every building on campus. Phone like cables from video display terminals, that include most personal computers, will run from the terminal to the white box where they are sort of compressed in order to make the jump over to the V.A.X. computer in Hoggard Hall and back again.

Dr. Hosier explains that "we are in the process of upgrading the campus phone system." Access to the V.A.X. will be through the campus phone system. Once that is complete, every faculty member and graduate student can receive and account in the V.A.X. and be ready to go on-line.

Students will begin to feel the effects of the new computer as instructors receive more information about it and understand how they can incorporate the computer as an educational tool.

Dr. Hosier stated that "for now the Computer Science and Business Departments will dominate the use." But he added that "we are going to see a shift in that over the next few years, as other departments discover what the computer can do."

He said the V.A.X. has potential for use in every department on campus. One example he cited is a new type of software that will be available in the future called the "writer's workbench," a Unix operating system. It will correct spelling, help arrange paragraphs coherently, point out when a word is overused in addition to to other areas of writing.

The V.A.X. is capable of using an Optical Scanner System. It allows instructors to quickly analyze exam results and will aid in designing better exams. It will also speed up the survey process. The scanner is simply an easier way of getting information into the computer.

The V.A.X. also has simulation programs. These are computer assisted instructional aids that put the computer to work as a teacher's aid.

Letters

Dear Editor:

It has come to my attention that this school does not have any walkways for students to walk, ride their bikes, or like me, push their wheelchair to classes except to go on the main roads on this campus. (It is very dangerous when you have someone who is late for class, in a hurry to meet a friend, or just wants to show off by driving fast on these roads.) It also comes to my mind (and I am very upset about this) that the Student Development Center is on the second floor of a building that does not have an elevator inside. (Smart, I wonder who is the clown who thought of that idea?) Also everyone from the Chancellor on down has a PhD., but they do not use their common sense when it comes to student safety or make accommodations for the handicapped who go to UNCW. But since I am from New Jersey, I guess I have to get used to the slow, "take their time" attitude that some people have down here.

Deja Vu Drinking Dilemma

For a government that embraces the philosophy of "less is more," it seems to be horning in on a lot of private areas.

Take, of course, for example the proposed 21-year-old drinking age...prohibition is reborn!!

(Ronald Reagan was alive back then, wasn't he??!!)

It's like a bad case of deja vu...last year I was 18, and along came the state's new 19-year-old drinking age. This year I'm 19, and now the feds want to raise the limit! I don't have MANY complaints, because by October 1st, 1986, I'll be 21 and old enough to drink beer. Just like last year when I was old enough to drink beer for a couple of months!

There's a big difference between age and maturity.

And I think they've got driving ability mixed up with drinking ability. Instead of teaching children that drinking and driving don't mix, they want them to be alcohol-free.

They quote lots of statistics, saying that most teenagers kill themselves and others while driving drunk...but don't tell you that an equal number of 40-year-old chronic offenders kill and maim people every year.

And have you noticed that the North Carolina roads are in sad shape? They twist and turn and are filled with potholes and ruts. They're hard to drive sober, much less after a few too many "for the road."

Have you driven to Myrtle Beach lately?!

So maybe Washington, instead of trying to tell us HOW to live, should pay more attention to making it safer for us to drive...contrary to their law, which CUTS road funds for states that don't accept the new age.

And a few more people will die on the roads in those states, so (here we go AGAIN!) the government will raise the age to 31. Hopefully in 1996, when it won't affect me!

I wonder if Reagan will still be around??

Stillpoint

By Bob Haywood,

One aspect of the fall flood of students moving into the University, an aspect particularly called to mind by the freshmen, is the tendency of so many to leave religion behind at home along with high school friends and parents. It is a common, and in some ways normal, occurrence for college students to turn off religion during their student years, and, in some cases, for the rest of their lives. What concerns me about this conscious or unconscious decision to give up the religious practices of their early years is that, in doing so, they may be giving up something more significant to their lives than they realize. There is an element of throwing out the proverbial, "baby with the bathwater" and turning their backs on their religious life.

Let me explain. From my perspective there is in all humans an innate yearning for coherence in our lives and communion with something that we sense is greater than we are and, in some ways, beyond us; however, we name or define that reality. In another direction, many people find themselves caught up in a sense of shallowness or loss of soul and disillusionment about life. Whether motivated by yearning or emptiness we find ourselves searching for "God" and personal meaning in our lives. These kind of feelings and thoughts comprise our spirituality which is the most basic term that I have discovered to describe a central aspect of our human experience.

Religion, whether personal or institutional, describes a way that various groups have chosen to organize their spiritual experience for their common benefit; i.e., religion follows spirituality. The problem comes when many people find their religious upbringing filled with many "musts", "oughts", and "shoulds" which they are glad to leave behind along with many parental "musts", "oughts" and "shoulds". My concern is that in blocking out religious practices that no longer seem to fit us (the bathwater), we also block out our spirituality (the baby). My hope and wish is that more of you will see the distinction between religion and spirituality and let negative feelings about religion and other questions and doubts become the basis of a spiritual search that is totally appropriate to this stage of your personal growth and development. Rather than turning off the whole process by turning off religion, I hope that you might choose to live through the questions, seeing that process as the significant part of your shaping of yourself and your future that it can be. Want to talk about it? Give me a call.

He's been called "a national treasure," and no wonder: Jesse Helms is one Senator who will not compromise principle for politics...

One of the hardest working members of the Senate, Helms is also one of the most ethical and conscientious members.

As chairman of the Senate Agriculture Committee, he is the principal architect of the nation's current farm program.

Perhaps Helms' most visilbe work in the Senate is his service on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, where he is the third-ranking Republican and chairman of the vital Western Hemisphere Affairs Subcommittee. An acknowledged expert in the field of Central American Policy, Helms is a strong supporter of the President's Caribbean Basin Initiative and U.S. policies in support of the democratic government of El Salvador.

Helms has also, throughout his years in the Senate, opposed wasteful, liberal spending all across the board Jesse Helms led the fight against the federal gas increase. Sen. Helms supported the Kemp-Roth tax cut proposed and he opposed the give-away of our Panama Canal.

Jesse Helms stands for honesty and decency, he has refused to sell his soul and compromise his morals and values when he felt he was right. # Husband and Wife Travel To London

This summer a husband and wife student team from UNCW studied abroad at the University of London, Chelsea College.

Margaret Bailey, secretary in the Philosophy and Religion Department, and her husband, Jim, planned for three years to be involved in this sort of study, offered through the University of Southern Mississippi.

Margaret, an undergraduate student majoring in English, and Jim, a graduate student, found this program economical since it offered a five week program and housed the pair in a dorm where they could be closer to other students. A big plus for Margaret was that she received credit here for her Victorian Literature course.

Two days a week, professors from USM lectured with special guests David Rumblelow, a British authority on Jack the Ripper, H.R.F. Keating and Julian Symons, who spoke on Sherlock Holmes and Sir Author Conan Doyle, and Sir Angus Wilson, who spoke on Charles Dickens. The days the Baileys were not in class, they traveled, studied, or did research.

The Baileys were two of four people from North Carolina to participate in this study program. Approximately 500 Americans were involved in the tour, and other European countries, such as Austria, Italy, Germany, and Sweden, also participated.

The charge for the program was approximately $1,985 each. This included air fare from Atlanta to England, transportation from the airport to the college, room, tuition, and any special tours that were part of the curriculum. Even though the travel of these students was only within the city of London (composed of about 6.5 million people), there was much to do and see, and many activities were free, so some students spent less than five hundred dollars, while others spent more than a thousand on souvenirs.

For those interested in this type of program, the University of Southern Mississippi offers similar opportunities in Criminal Justice, Political Science, History, Drama, TV and the Media, and Journalism. More information may be obtained by writing to:

Weight

If you're a college freshman, arm yourself for a four-battle of the bulge.

A just-released study of Penn State students by nutritionist Jean Harvey and two other researchers reveals men gain an average of 9.1 pounds during their first year of college. Women average a nine-pound gain.

And the extra pounds sneak up each year. Sophomores gain 7.3 pounds while juniors put on 7.8 pounds and seniors 6.5 pounds, the study found.

Many students blame fattening dorm food, but Harvey says the study exonerates it.

"Residence (on or off campus) wasn't a factor in weight change," she states. "So students' claims that dorm cafeteria food caused the gains aren't accurate."

The questionnaire, sent to 2400 Penn State undergraduates, drew about 1000 responses to 36 questions about weight, eating and exercise. Results show 67 percent of the men questioned and 62 percent of the women admitted gaining weight.

Only senior respondents lost weight, apparently thanks to exercise, Harvey says.

Emotional and psychological factors, such as living away from home, weren't surveyed, but Harvey has "a feeling people at Penn State are planning a study to determine the influence of these factors on student weight gain."

No one knows if all students put on pounds at the same clip Penn State students do.

The American College Health

Association shows no record of any national surveys similar to the Penn State study, though a 1978 federal study determined college students were an average of six pounds heavier than of students of 1968.

Yet overweight students and health and nutritional concerns have prompted many colleges to implement diet and exercise programs.

Wayne State University in Detroit bases weight control on behavioral methods to improve eating habits.

Many student health clinics publish diet tips in campus newspapers, especially during the spring "get in shape" rush.

In 1982, Stanford developed a dorm nutrition program, posting nutritional information for cafeteria food. It listed the calorie, fat and cholesterol contents of each item it sold.

A similar program exists at the University of the Pacific in Stockton, Calif.

Dietician Joan Nikirk calls it an "educational" program, mostly presented through posters and pamphlets to make students aware of basic food groups and nutrition."

But the program has done little so far to change students' eating habits, Nikirk admits, although a survey shows 80 percent of the students are aware of it.

"There's only so much you can do in the dining halls," she says. "Maybe next year we'll take a different approach."

The band 3 Hits will appear at the Patio on Saturday night

Three Hits at Patio

"Bands should work well together and help each other out, rather than compete with each other," Mike Klutz of the Raleigh based band 3 Hits said. This is an attitude that is beginning to spread in today's music scene and one that is particularly necessary when "spreading the word" on a new band like 3 Hits.

Having played other area hot-spots such as Cafe Deja Vu and the Culture Club (R.I.P.), 3 Hits is prepared to take on The Patio on Saturday night. The band has been together for one and a half years (their original name was 3 Hits and a Miss--get it?) and the current line-up consists of Mike Klutz (guitar), Sheila Valentine (bass), Jim Biddell (drums) and an added summer bonus, guitarist Danny K.

3 Hits draws their major influence from such bands as The Pretenders, The Jam and The Go-Go's. While most of the band's original compositions are a joint effort of Sheila and Mike, Sheila seems to dominate the group's sound, since she both sings and provides the beat.

Recently, 3 Hits recorded a four song tape (with who else but Don Dixon) called Little Gifts. WKNC has featured two, the cuts, "At Night" and "Sharp Focus" on their Nightwaves program. Other stations across North Carolina have also been playing the tape. With the help of Don Dixon and Idea/sound man Matt Matthews, 3 Hits will release their first single early this fall.

But fall is quite a long way off, and in order to get the scoop on 3 Hits, their show tonight at The Patio is a must.

Q. HOW FAST SHOULD SOMEONE RUN?
A. IT'S UNHEALTHY TO RUN TOO FAST TO HOLD A CONVERSATION.

STEIN
NEWS - NER
CPS

Gene Wilder's latest movie, "The Woman in Red," is a comedy about the plight of man in married life. Director, writer, and leading man, Wilder plays Teddy, a "typical" husband with two kids and a wife concerned with social awareness. Unfortunately, she is unaware of the fact that her husband is in need of more excitement (mostly sexual) in his life. That excitement is realized in the form of a beautiful model working for Teddy's company. He becomes physically infatuated with the woman, and that infatuation provides the fuel for the rest of the action in the movie.

Teddy has three best friends who often seem more like cartoon characters than real people. One is a obnoxious cherub who is having fling with a doctor's wife; and one is a crude male chauvinist having fling with everyone but his own wife.

The third, played by Charles Grodin, is a closet homosexual. The revelation of Grodin's homosexuality leads to one of the few scenes in the movie in which anything can really be felt for these characters.

The movie was obviously perceived from the male point of view, as none of the female characters is fully realized.

Although all of the jokes don't work, there are several humorous spots. Gilda Radner, in a very small and bizarre role captures a few of these spots, and one wonders why she wasn't in more of the movie.

Ultimately, "The Woman in Red" falls short because the characters just aren't quite as likeable as they should be. But, for the $2 matinee price, some might find that it's not a bad movie. Now showing at Cinema 6 on Oleander Dr.

Cross-Country

Campbell defeated Baptist 2-1 to claim the championship of the Port City Soccer Classic here Saturday, while Georgia State defeated UNCW 5-2 in two overtimes.

Campbell, now 3-0-1 on the season, jumped to a 2-0 lead behind two goals to earn the win.

But the Camels had to wait out two overtimes of the second game before the Championship trophy was safe as UNCW needed only a win to earn the title.

With only seven minutes remaining in the final overtime, Georgia State's Keith Mainland scored on a penalty kick to give the Panthers, now 2-1, the lead for good. The Panthers added two late goals, including a hat trick by midfielder Henry Musey, his fourth goal in the two-day event.

UNCW, now 1-2, lead by a score of 2-1 with only seven minutes left in regulation when Musey scored his second goal to force the extra periods.

Campbell's David Nisbet was named the tourney's outstanding player. The Camels placed five players on the 11 man team, including Per Jensen, John Reed, Scott Scarborough, Larry Hensen and goalie Louie Arias. UNCW's Kevin Cox, Brad Dixon and Pat Brown earned all-tourney honors, as well as Rodney Thomas, Henry Musey and Doug Yearwood from Georgia State.

UNCW senior, George Walker, methodically burned off the top runners from eight other teams to win the Campbell Cross Country Carnival 4-mile race in 20 minutes, 4 seconds.

Walker's winning time and "T" Lankford's 20:41 placed both runners in the top five, but it was not enough to offset the youth and inexperience of their teammates. The Seahawk harriers finished sixth on cumulative but the margin separating third place from sixth was a mere 58 seconds.

"If our other runners had just run five seconds a mile faster over each of their four miles, this young team would have scored our highest finish ever at Campbell," said coach Bill Atwill.

To be so close and yet so far would frustrate most coaches, but Atwill was delighted with the potential he saw in his team.

"They ran the race tired, without any tapering the week before, and I left one of the better runners home because he missed a time-trial over Labor Day," he said. "We should be much faster this week at Pembroke, when Ken McCraw, Frank Frenduto, Layne Fuller, and others are rested and ready."

Conditioning and inexperience also combined to hold the UNCW women to a fourth-place finish in the women's 2-mile race. Brenda Walker led a pack finished for the Seahawks, placing 14th overall in a time of 13:21. She was followed closely by freshman, Mary Edwards, sophomore, Leah Ashley, and junior Frances O'Connell. Sheila Viola and Pat Smith trailed the pack, but are expected to move up as they gain more stamina.

George Walker's race was the highlight of the meet. All morning the red and blue singlets of Liberty Baptist College had surged to the front of each match race and it was clear they intended to sweep the meet. "T" Lankford had pressed their number 3 runner for two miles, but his endurance base isn't back to 100 percent yet and he faded in the third mile.

Not so Walker. The speed work of the summer and the 90-100 mile weeks left him plenty to work with. A 5:02 first mile, followed by a 4:58 second one, shook the Liberty Baptist and Virginia Commonwealth runners visibly. By the 3-mile mark Walker's white and green jersey was 70 meters ahead and pulling away. A 4:59 final mile added insult to injury as he won easily.

Penthouse Controversy

If Penthouse magazine readers overrun newsstands in January searching for the second series of nude ex-Miss America photographs, they'll avoid the University of Colorado-Boulder bookstore.

On August 17, Tom Cruff, CU's bookstore trade book manager, banned Penthouse published nude photos of former Miss America Vanessa Williams in its September issue.

The Williams controversy, which re-emerged last month when Penthouse publisher Bob Guccione announced his magazine plans to publish more photographs of the former Syracuse University student engaged in various sexual activities, has accelerated previously-building pressure on magazine sellers on several campuses to cull certain publications from their shelves.

In the days after Penthouse announced it would publish the first set of photos, for example, some Ohio State students joined demonstrators asking Columbus bookstores to drop the skin magazines.

Students at the University of Minnesota also renewed their campaign to get bookstores around campus to drop the magazines.

Efforts to rid campuses of sex-oriented media, both printed and filmed, are not new, of course.

In 1980, Antioch University removed skin magazines from its racks when feminist groups threatened to boycott the campus bookstores.

Last spring, students at the University of California-Davis and the University of Massachusetts-Amherst also threatened boycotts to rid their bookstores of the magazines, but the attempts failed.

In June, the University of Hawaii student government voted down a bill to ban the campus sale of magazines and postcards featuring nudes. A month earlier, the

The Seahawk/September 13, 1984

University of Virginia student government junked a similar proposal because it smacked of censorship.

Colorado, in fact, is one of the few schools actually to implement Cruff's decision to remove part of a certain line, not censorship in any form," says Colorado's Cruff.

The ban, effective the last day of CU's summer semester, has produced little student reaction, but Cruff claims "everyone else is happy with the decision. I continue to receive letters of support from people off campus."

Cruff says he had long considered the ban, and the Williams photos finalized his decision.

CU Feminist Alliance and Lesbian Caucus members, who lobbied for the move since at least 1979, are happy Cruff's action was a personal choice, not a result of their pressure.

The CU outlet sold 30 to 50 copies monthly of both Penthouse and Playboy, but Cruff maintains the ban won't affect sales figures.

"Compared to overall sales it won't show even if you try to calculate it," he explains.

Store managers are most likely to drop magazines for economic, not moral, reasons, explains Charles Phodt of the National Association of College Stores (NACS).

"While there have been store managers who remove pornography as a matter of propriety or of taste," he says, "the usual reason is people who hang around the racks, thumbing through the magazines. Racks become reading rooms instead of sales points."

NACS takes a dim view of censorship, though Phodt adds, "I happen to know the management in the Boulder bookstore is strong against censorship."

Penthouse magazine disagrees.

"We hear about things like the CU ban and we're not happy about them," states Leslie Jay, a Penthouse spokeswoman. "Basically, it's a form of censorship."

The controversial September issue sold well over five million copies, Jay claims.

"It was our all-time best-seller," she adds. "For the first time in 15 years, we went back to press a second time."

Jay says the September issue's success is driving up distributor requests for the January edition, which will contain more Williams photos.

Get down to business faster. With the BA-35.

If there's one thing business students have always needed, this is it: an affordable, business-oriented calculator. The Texas Instruments BA-35, the Student Business Analyst.

Its built-in business formulas let you perform complicated finance, accounting and statistical functions - the ones that usually require a lot of time and a stack of reference books, to help you get the most out like present and future value calculations, amortizations and balloon payments.

The BA-35 means you spend less time calculating, and more time learning. One keystroke takes the place of many.

The calculator is just part of the package. You also get a book that follows most business courses: the Business Analyst Guidebook. Business professors helped us write it, to help you get the most out of calculator and classroom.

A powerful combination.

Think business. With the BA-35 Student Business Analyst.

ROTC Instructor Builds Leaders

Jack Fryar
Staff Writer

There's a certificate of appreciation hanging on the wall of Major Sgt. Henry Kohlman's office in the ROTC building. The award is from the United States Military Academy West Point, and it begins "...in grateful appreciation for your outstanding support of the United States Corp of Cadets." Recently Kohlman was transferred to UNCW, and is still providing outstanding support for the Army's future leaders, in the Seahawk Army ROTC program.

Kohlman has been wearing "army green" for seventeen years now. That's half his life. In that time he has attended just about every school the Army has for enlisted men, including the prestigious Sergeant Majors Academy. In his career, he's travelled around the world, serving in places like Saudi Arabia, Germany, and three tours of duty in Vietnam. His awards include 3 Bronze Stars, 3 Meritorious Service Medals, and a Purple Heart.

Major Sgt. Kohlman, the Senior NCO in UNCW's ROTC program, served as an instructor for three years at West Point. Many people would think he'd be able to compare UNCW's infant cadet program to the U.S. Academy, but according to the sergeant just the opposite is true.

"There is really no way to compare any other commissioning program to West Point. The 'Long Gray Line' is very unique. There's one major difference in my opinion: ROTC requires more self discipline" Kohlman says.

According to Major Sgt. Kohlman, West Pointers have all their needs taken care of. ROTC cadets, on the other hand, often juggle jobs, classes, ROTC, and personal lives all at once. That takes a lot of motivation in Kohlman's eyes.

"As a noncommissioned officer," he says, "I've enjoyed working with ROTC graduates more than OCS or West Pointers."

Despite an extensive military career, Kohlman, a native of Long Island, is a peace lover. When asked what future he sees for America's Army, he replies, "Hopefully a passive one."

According to Kohlman the biggest challenge the nation's military faces is ensuring its leadership and management are able to keep up with the large numbers of what he calls "brain children", and high technology.

With instructors like Kohlman providing training for those future leaders, that shouldn't be any trouble at all.

Co-ed Hall A First At UNCW

Stephanie Loftus
Editorial Editor

For some parents carting loads of their child's accumulated garbage to the fourth floor of Dorm '79, something wasn't quite right. Members of the opposite sex were moving in across the hall.

The University's new co-ed experiment seems to be taking well, despite a rather mixed start. "We were unsure at first because we thought the guys were going to be too loud, and they thought we were going to be too quiet," sophomore Kim Lovingood reported. "Now everyone loves it!"

Last semester, fourth floor '79 was a girl's study floor with Diane Coyle as RA. This semester Diane remains RA for the 48 guys and girls, and has learned to make adjustments.

"One night a bunch of the guys came on the hall around 1:30, and woke me up. My first thought was to run to the door and make them leave. Then I stopped and said, 'Wait a minute! They're supposed to be here. They live here!'"

Some have predicted doom for the experiment, saying that guys and girls would get too friendly, or that they would be completely incompatible. However, most of the people living there are happy with the experiment.

"It's great...a good experience," sophomore Erin Laughter commented, "but it's not a big deal as people think. I lived in Galloway last year and that was practically co-ed. Everyone here gets along real well--there's a lot of close friendships."

Sophomore Pam Koroly feels the idea is "working out great! They should have started this earlier...it took 'em forever." But Milton Burroughs' parents think that only juniors or older should live on a co-ed floor. Milton, a freshman, says that it's just like living in a regular co-ed dorm, "but it's good to have a girl living across the hall so she can wash my clothes and stuff."

"It's different," junior Jeff Niles said. "It's a good time."

"I love it! It's great!" freshman Jamie Walker exclaimed.

Consequently, the students on the hall feel that the experiment should become a reality in every hall. In the words of sophomore Kevin Fischer, "uh-HUH, by God!"

Seasquawk®

By Stephanie Loftus

Due to mechanical problems, The Seahawk has been behind schedule. Sorry.....

Dear Editor,

I read a letter in last week's Seahawk from Michael Gruber. He discussed the lack of facilities at UNCW, for handicapped students. I do sympathize with his, and other handicapped student's obstacles on our Southern campus. However, his statement about southerners being slow offended me.

I'm from the south and Proud of It. Maybe I'm missing something though. I have never been to New Jersey, where I guess everything happens fast. If Mr. Gruber likes everything fast, (fast food, fast women, fast cars, and decisions), maybe he should go back to New Jersey....Fast! Otherwise, I guess he will just to get "used to slow southern ways."

Jay Ray.

Fall Break Revenge

Last semester, UNCW students were dismayed to learn that the administration arbitrarily shortened Fall Break by two days, reducing it to a three-day holiday.

We were pretty upset, and vowed retaliation.

Who do you think started Hurricane Diana?!

A few select members of the student body were sent on a top secret mission to stir up the waters along the Florida coast (and to check out locations for Spring Break parties!)-a tropical depression was born!

But seriously, it was a fun vacation. I've ALWAYS wanted to live in the dorms without going to class-my wish came true last week. I think the people in the dorms were the luckiest because they were in relatively safe surroundings, with some extremely nice people (4th floor '79), and pretty darn close to Kroger's!!!

Beer runs in 40-50 mile an hour winds are challenging, and add that extra dash to any well-planned(?) hurricane party!

But if you were broke, (and I WAS!) then getting money from the bank became the real challenge! Those automatic teller machines aren't worth a darn in a thunderstorm, much less a hurricane! They were "unable to complete this transaction" the whole week. Darn computers!!

Oh. And you know what they told me last year about Mini-Fall Break? That the administration needed more time to sort out records and schedules since they recently switched to computerized data!!! You'd think people would take longer than a whiz machine wouldn't you?!

Think again, I guess.

But thanks to Hurricane Diana-at least we got a decent vacation this semester. It's not often a natural disaster does this much good!

Stillpoint

By Bob Haywood,

It is worthy to note that out of some of the worst experiences of life we can garner some good insights. Diana, for all her forboding and threatening presence, provided us just such an opportunity to learn. A Biblical verse reads, "All things work together for good for those who love the Lord." This is not some simplistic attempt to justify all bad events as God designed, but rather an invitation to take any threatening or destructive event (as well as the positive) and open ourselves to the possibilities of growth and learning hidden in the midst of struggle, pain and fear. Diana brought three insights to mind.

First, there was the parable of the trees. Trees were pushed over everywhere you looked. I expected pine trees to go, but so also did many of the old live oaks. Why? Their roots, while spread widely, did not have the depth to withstand the pressure of the wind. To live and flourish where wind blows strong, any living thing needs deep roots. Into what is your life rooted? What sustains you? Not the surface obvious things like food and water, which allow a surface root system; what sustains the center of your being? When really stormy times hit you, and they surely will, where are your deeper roots attached that provide the deep inner peace and security that leaves you knowing that you will endure?

Secondly, how close we are to real human community. When our world is calm, we get caught up in our own little worlds, protective, isolated in the cocoon of self-interest imprisoned in our little circle of friends and activities. But when disaster looms, all of a sudden we tear down all the barriers and become neighbors. People care and reach out and go out of their way to help others like it was easy and natural. Perhaps it is. Perhaps our isolation and cliquishness is really unnatural. If all it takes is a storm to release our compassion and neighborliness, maybe we need to work at keeping ourselves turned outward to the world around us instead of inward. Loving and caring for other folks, even the folks we don't know well, feels good. Perhaps we can choose to reach out to others without needing a hurricane to give us permission.

Finally, how clear our vision becomes about what is important when we are faced with the possibility of losing everything, even life. As the winds increased and the trees swayed closer and closer and the waters rose, all the "things" of life seemed suddenly fragile and we became mindful of those we love and reached out with arms or even a phone call to touch and reassure ourselves of a loved one's nearness. And when the storm is over and we laugh at our fearfulness in the darkness, we know with renewed clarity how precious a gift it is simply to live, to love and to be loved. As paradoxical as it seems, it is at the boundaries of life that we discover the core of life's value and meaning.

The storm is gone and the sun shines brightly in the blue sky again. But let us not forget some of the truths that came to us in the dark and stormy moments of life.

In response to Michael Gruber's letter of Sept. 13, 1984, I would like to clarify the type and scope of services available to disabled students through the Student Development Center.

The Center was relocated to temporary quarters in Alderman Hall in August. Our permanent office, completely accessible to disabled students, will be in the Student Support Building presently under construction. Since Alderman Hall has no elevator, students who are unable to climb stairs should go to room 105 in Alderman and ask the secretary to call us. A counselor will meet them on the first floor.

The Student Development Center serves as a clearinghouse for disabled students' concerns on campus. In addition to individual and group counseling for academic, career and personal concerns, the Center offers many specialized services for the unique needs of disabled students. We can assist students with special learning needs to obtain tutors, readers or equipment to help them in their academic work. We recently obtained a voice synthesizer which allows visually impaired students to use our computer resources. This will be in operation in the coming weeks.

We are currently assisting the disabled students in forming a campus organization to address their concerns. We can also serve as advocates for students in problem solving and planning. As we continue to improve our services we welcome input from disabled students and other interested people. Our telephone number is 395-3280.

Who's Who Rewards Over-Achievers

Tinker Linebaugh
Staff Writer

Just what is Who's Who Among Students in American Universities and Colleges?

According to Pat Leonard, Associate Dean of Students, "This is the only official activity that happens throughout the year that acknowledges students for their outstanding service to the community and the campus, and for their outstanding grade average."

Each year colleges and universities are invited to participate in the national program, and Leonard says that it is "a very selective process" at UNCW. A Selection Committee composed of faculty and students reviews the applications and each candidate is rated numerically. Even if UNCW does not receive enough applications to meet its quota, which is set by a national committee, all of the nominations submitted are not necessarily sent to the national program.

Last February for the first time at UNCW, a recognition banquet was held to honor the 39 students nominated for Who's Who from UNCW. Chancellor William H. Wagoner presented certificates to a number of students who attended the banquet.

Nominations for Who's Who Among Students in American Universities and Colleges are available at the Dean of Students Office, Alderman 110, and may be submitted by faculty, staff, and/or students. A nominee must have at least a 2.5 cumulative grade point average and have completed 59 semester hours prior to the beginning of the fall semester. A student may be nominated once as a junior, once as a senior, and once as a graduate student. Included with the application are two evaluation forms to be completed by UNCW faculty members, and the applications must be returned to the Dean of Students Office by Thursday, October 4.

The President's Corner

Eric Squires

Prohibition. Is it inevitable? Is it going to save lives? Is it the only solution?

Having had spent the summer working on Capitol Hill for our U.S. Congressman, Charlie Rose, I saw the Alcohol Issue first hand. Let me share some statistics I found with you.

Four of the leading states in the reduction of highway fatalities are states with minimum drinking ages of 18 and 19.

1200 lives are to be saved if ALL the states raise their drinking ages to 21, AND stiffer laws are enforced.

Minnesota experienced a fourfold increase in deaths among 18 and 19 year olds when they raised their drinking age.

Maine, Illinois, Iowa and Florida "showed no significant change" when they raised their ages.

The highest highway fatality percentage states are those with the age at 21.

I spoke with several people on this subject. Senator Jesse Helms said that he was going to support offering states special incentives if they reduced their highway traffic fatalities as opposed to raising the drinking age. However, thirty minutes after our meeting he proceeded to vote against the "states incentive" amendment and vote not only for raising the drinking, but penalizing our states highway funds if we didn't.

When I spoke with Helms' assistant and Senator East, they agreed that raising the drinking age was highly political due to pressure groups such as MADD.

I spoke with the President of MADD and she assured me that there should be 380 less nighttime traffic fatalities in our 18-21 age group across the country. That means about 7 to 8 less deaths in North Carolina each year.

Personally, I feel that stiffer laws and education are the only way we are ever going to begin curing the problem of the Drunk Driver. And that's the issue, not just the AGE. There are over 5,000 drivers in N.C. that have had over 5 D.U.I. convictions and still have their license. Furthermore, there are over 200 with over 10 D.U.I. convictions!

Is the raising of the drinking age going to save lives? Yes. Is it the only solution? No, in fact in the long run it shows a weaker case in the light of education and enforcement of stiffer laws. Is it inevitable? No, with over 600,000 voting individuals in the institutions for higher education-we could elect our very own governor or senator if we voted.

Besides, if you've been to any of the BACCHUS events you know that there are many more students wishing to socialize and drink responsible then there are individuals just wanting to drive somewhere to get blitzed and see if they can make it home. Why should the majority suffer for a few jerks! Most of which drink to excess due to deeper problems that are going to still exist whether the Federal Government passes laws or not.

If we're old enough to vote, die, be sent over seas to kill or be killed, enter into contracts, mortgage our life away, have an abortion paid for by the government, or get married- then why can't we choose to drink or not?

If people choose to drink, then shouldn't the institutions for higher education be allowed to not only educate, but set examples for the rest of society on how to drink responsibly? If the institutions for higher education don't, then who will? The family? The church?

If the drinking age in N.C. is raised to 21, there will be a Prohibition on All the institutions for higher education. Universities, Junior Colleges, Technical Schools and others will have alcohol forever banned, and as a result there will no longer be any groups such as BACCHUS and little money for the educational aspects of drinking.

But, this being a political year, who knows what is going to happen. I guess its just cheaper to change the law, and please special interest groups, rather than stiffen the laws and promote education.

It's ironic that the decision makers say that they're changing the law because we can't handle the responsibility. When in fact, it seems that they couldn't handle the responsibility of educating us, so they just changed the law. But maybe this is an example. If you give someone something and they don't use it right, then simply take it away. I wonder how many lives would of been saved if the courts and decision makers had done this to begin with, concerning the license of Drunk Drivers.

ROTC Units Mobilize During Diana

Jack Fryar
Staff Writer

Hurricane Diana slammed into the Port City in the early hours of September 11, but at UNCW plans were being made a full day earlier to lessen the storm's impact on the Seahawk community. UNCW's Army ROTC detachment played a bit part in those plans, and later in emergency maintenance on campus during the storm itself.

At a meeting on Monday afternoon, Army ROTC cadre members and cadet staff began planning for mobilization in the event Diana should make landfall in or around the Cape Fear area. Earlier in the day, Primary Military Instructor Major David Felt met with county emergency officials, to determine the detachments' duties in the days to come. At the meeting, Maj. Felt established the Army ROTC's primary emphasis to be centered on the UNCW campus. However, Felt did volunteer the cadet's services to help in evacuation efforts in the surrounding localities should a worst-case scenario occur.

On Tuesday morning school officials canceled classes at 11 a.m., as it became apparent the Wilmington area was likely to have a brush with Diana. At the Army ROTC office, team leaders began to mobilize manpower, meeting at 12:30 p.m. to set up for the ever growing storm.

After setting up in Trask Coliseum, the roughly forty cadets spent free time brushing up on first aid, and establishing logistics. According to Cadet Major Mike Silver, the volunteers set up in Trask due to the likelihood of its being used as an evacuation center.

The first team went into action at around 5 p.m., as Diana's torrential rains began to seep through the coliseum roof by the girls

Anorexia:

It Could Happen To You

Kathy Chimiack
Staff Writer

In the last ten years there has been a great emphasis on fitness and dieting in the U.S. According to recent studies 75 percent of all women consider themselves overweight. This same culture which also emulates the very gaunt models and dancers has become the breeding ground for a newly recognized disease called anorexia nervosa.

Affecting over half a million Americans last year, anorexia nervosa is just one of several eating disorders. It has been said that one out of five female college students have had some anorexia symptoms, most remain untreated. UNCW's Student Health Service treated 10 students just last year and the number seems to be growing annually. Anorexia nervosa is defined by the Center for the Study of Anorexia and Bulimia as "a complex emotional disorder characterized primarily by an obsession with food, weight, and thinness." Resulting in starvation and malnutrition, anorexia is a disease whose victims are 95% women between the ages of 12 and 23. Although it has a mortality rate of 10% more than 80% of anorexics do recover once treated.

Another associated disorder, Bulimia, often a phase of anorexia, is characterized by the intake of food (usually in large quantities) followed immediately by self-induced vomiting and/or extensive use of laxatives (up to 80 pills a week). The combination of anorexia nervosa and bulimia is often referred to as "bulimarexia."

Some symptoms of anorexia include:

- (1) obsession with dieting and food
- (2) drastic weight loss followed by an emaciated appearance
- (3) loss of menstrual period in females
- (4) hyperactivity
- (5) moodiness
- (6) extreme insecurities, feelings of loneliness, helplessness, inadequacies
- (7) desire to be isolated from friends and family

The adverse effects from starvation, vomiting and habitual use of laxatives are numerous and often serious. Fortunately, most symptoms can be reversed once a normal diet is resumed. In some cases permanent damage is done to vital organs, such as the case with the late vocalist Karen Carpenter. Even though she was cured of anorexia, heart failure, the secondary ailment initiated by starvation, resulted in her death in 1982.

Early detection of anorexia and related disorders can prevent physical and mental damage as well as sparing one from its costly treatment which ranges between $20,000 to $40,000. There are several therapeutic methods which are being used: family therapy, "neurolinguistic programming", and individual treatment. Dr. Hilde Bruch, an expert in the field, believes that psychotherapy is the only way to completely cure the disease. She feels that it is the underlying insecurities and helplessness that drives an anorexic to gain obsessive control of the only thing in his life that he is able to, his body. Bruch's therapy lasts for two years and has a 95 percent recovery rate in her patients. Her objectives in therapy is to build up the patient's self esteem and help them face their insecurities in a less destructive manner. Dr. Arnold E. Andersen of John Hopkin's School of Medicine adds that anorexia is not a hopeless condition and can be detected early by people aware of the disease.

Some early warning signs friends and family should look for are preoccupation with food and diet, isolated behavior, sleeping difficulty, severe exercising programs and extreme weight loss. Sometimes the latter sign is hidden by loose fitting clothes and is not very obvious.

Unfortunately it took the death of Karen Carpenter and others like her to open the public's eyes to the seriousness of the disease. Hopefully with continued research in the field of anorexia nervosa and bulimia, doctors will be able to combat the diseases from both the psychological and medical aspect. And if our society's attitude about weight is partially responsible for the eating disorders, it too should be altered.

locker room. Under the guidance of Athletic Trainer Terry Middlesworth, the cadets worked throughout the night in a successful effort to prevent water damage to the gym complex there and elsewhere in the building.

Shortly after the first team went into action, another team, led by Cadet Captain Bill Dribbens, was sent to the Hinton James Building. Built in 1961, the former financial aid center was in the process of being renovated when heavy rain and high winds threatened to do severe structural damage. When Dribbens' team arrived, maintenance crews were struggling to remove some six inches of water from the second floor of the building. After an hour, the situation was brought under control, and the cadets set up an around the clock maintenance regimen to keep it that way.

Meanwhile, cadets in Trask continued on work details around campus, including duties at the school's Physical Plant. Working in two hour shifts, the teams caught two hour catnaps to ward off the growing fatigue. Meals were brought in by the cafeteria's ARA staff for the hungry crews.

The hazardous nature of the cadets' jobs was reinforced when cadre member Sgt. Mike Carpenter narrowly missed being hit by a falling pine tree next to the entrance to Trask. Diana's winds, reaching 135 mph.

around the hurricane's eye, made movement about campus extremely difficult.

Cadets took advantage of a slight reprieve from the storm Wednesday morning to check on their own families and homes. Pay phones in Trask provided the only outside lines of communication and were in constant use. The work teams also used the time to catch up on much needed sleep. The break was to be short lived, however, as the worst of Diana's attack on the region was yet to come.

Wednesday night brought a repeat of Tuesday night's duties, with the added task of providing food and shelter for some fifty evacuees from the campus and surrounding areas. By

Thursday morning the evacuees had left, and clean-up operations began anew.

On Thursday cadets began to provide maintenance and security to the school's class buildings, providing relief for campus staff who'd been in the buildings all night.

By 10 p.m. Thursday, the weary Seahawk cadets had ended operations on the campus. School officials had nothing but praise for the Army ROTC volunteers, who over the course of three days put in nearly around the clock service to the campus. According to one maintenance crewmember, "... we couldn't have done it without them."

Two students were awarded $500 scholarships by the Port City Kiwanis Club Monday morning, September 10, at a breakfast held at the Heart of Wilmington Hotel.

The two recipients, Julie Buffalo and Judith Kathryn Todd, were selected by their departments and each receive $250 a semester.

The Port City Kiwanis Club supports this program through the sale of 2 pound bags of peanuts. For the past three years, two scholarships each year have been awarded to different departments. The departments which have benefited from this program include Mathematics, Business, Physical Education, and Drama. The Kiwanis Club plans to continue offering these scholarships, which are based on need and ability.

Buffalo is a Junior majoring in English. She is the Assistant Editor for the Atlantis, the UNCW student literary-art magazine, and has had poems published in it for the past two years. Buffalo won a book award last year for the best poem in Mr. Charles Fort's creative writing course.

Todd is a Senior majoring in French. She also received a scholarship last year through the Modern Languages Department.

SEMESTER IN SPAIN

Not just for Spanish majors only, but for everyone: beginners, "in between" students, and advanced. Put some excitement into your college career!

BEGINNER OR ADVANCED - Cost is about the same as a semester in a U.S. college: $3,380. Price includes jet round trip to Seville from New York, room, board, and tuition complete. Government grants and loans may be applied towards our programs.

Live with a Spanish family, attend classes four hours a day, four days a week, four months. Earn 16 hrs. of credit (equivalent to 4 semesters taught in U.S. colleges over a two year time span). Your Spanish studies will be enhanced by opportunities not available in a U.S. classroom. Standardized tests show our students' language skills superior to students completing two year programs in U.S. Advanced courses also.

Hurry, it takes a lot of time to make all arrangements.

Hurricane Diana has come and gone but her destructive force left behind Academic Deans scrambling to meet with Chancellor Wagoner where they decided the ongoing semester's schedule. A mammoth campus cleanup restoration and dear memories of an encounter with a Hurricane are also remnants of the storm.

On Monday, Sept. 17, a meeting of the Academic Deans revealed that the already shortened fall break will not be cancelled to make up for the three-and-one-half days of school lost to the storm. Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs Charles Cahill explained that "all of the academic deans met with the Chancellor and collectively decided to do nothing. There will be no extension of the semester and no change in the calendar." He added that the missed days could put an extra load on the students and create a bad situation.

Diana uncharacteristically hovered off the coast of North and South Carolina and proved to be more of a nuisance than a brutal destructive threat to life and property.

During the storm, Hewlett Hall became more of a enclosed shelter than a home. Half of the parking lot was empty by Wednesday morning. T Lankford, a third floor resident who chose to stay, said "friends of mine who left told me I was going to die."

In a perverse way, many students actually were excited at the possibility of oncoming danger. "I've never been in a hurricane before," said Hewlett resident "Sid" Flaherty. "It's like being in a circus, only this time its free." This attitude was much more prevalent among on-campus students. They don't have to worry about personal property.

Flaherty was one of many who disobeyed police orders not to leave the dorms on Tuesday night and dashed out into the elements. Conversely, two females were not allowed to exit the all-male hall. "This is bull——," said one. The police eventually relented.

For the most part, students spent their time either finding "hurricane" parties or just looking out windows. Especially when a 24 hour blackout oc-cured just before midnight Wednesday.

ARA, food servicers for on-campus residents, delivered 1400 servings at each meal for the students. "I've been through snowstorms and other hazards before," said manager Steve Cummings. "But nothing like this." Despite a 60 % reduction in staff, only Tuesday breakfast was cancelled.

Tree damage on campus was the most visible force of Diana. "Amazingly," said Union Director Linda Moore, "out of the 50 or so trees that fell none crashed into any buildings." Yet there were close calls. Moore added that "two trees were about ready to fall on the Union but campus workers prevented that."

Trask Coliseum, the adjacent Hinton James building and two of the residence halls suffered water damage caused by the 18 inches of rainfall that blanketed the area.

In both Belk and Galloway Halls there was particular problems. According to Margaret Taylor, Assistant Director of housing, "water blew in from the ends of the hall in Galloway and in Belk the water came in through the center brick and around the window frame."

Assorted on-campus apartments were also flooded. Personal belongings were soaked by the intruding water.

Several off-campus housing locations were pummeled by water. At College Manor, the calm water line in the parking lot created an illusion for drivers, many of whom found their cars completely submerged. "I laughed and laughed," said one student who sat on higher ground surveying the scene. At Campus Edge Condominiums, workers spent Friday afternoon hauling flooded carpets and furniture from units.

Meanwhile, at Wrightsville, students were allowed back on the Island and found it to be generally unscathed. Estimated damage was $874,000, a small figure considering the 100mph plus winds that were reported there. For these students, whose evacuation coincided with UNCW's at noon Tuesday, the anticipation of destruction was hard to handle. "I only have everything I own out there," said one evacuee sarcastically.

Some people overcame the storm with a clear, unbending sense of humor. New Dean of students, Dick Mullendore, had actual damage when a tree crushed his brand new truck. His reply? "I was hoping it would fall on my junk car in the backyard."

Dr. Cappell of the Financial Aid Dept. saw the full wrath of Diana. His Wilmington home had a tree topple onto it, and four more crashed into his yard. His private beach house at Ft. Fisher was badly damaged by windblown rain, and his office in the Hinton James Building was also flooded. Somehow, Cappell kept a positive frame of mind. "It could have been a lot worse," he remarked. "When Hurricane Hazel hit it was high tide. I feel lucky. One of the trees missed our chimney by only three feet."

In time of cruel uncertainty, stories and memories are born. Surely, everyone has a story to tell. David King of UNCW is one such person. "I had a friend who waited out the storm at Carolina Beach with his grandparents," he said. They refused to leave. According to King, the grandparents stubbornly remarked, "We made it through Hazel, we'll make it through this."

In the face of adversity, it comes down to just that.

Movie Review

Joan Travis
Staff Writer

Unfortunately, I missed the original "Exterminator", and cannot say how "The Exterminator II" compared with it. If members of the audience were to be believed though, this one didn't quite match up to the first. Should comparisons be made, the most likely one seems to be an extended Billy Idol video.

Set in New York City, the plot revolves around the violent actions of a street gang. As seems typical of modern gangs, this one desires to take over the city-by controlling the flow of drugs. An interesting thing to note about the group is their clothing. Everyone could have walked off the set of "Escape from New York" or "The Warriors" (although there is no make-up here). The gang leader is especially notable for his appearance, as he bears an uncanny resemblance to Grace Jones.

The exterminator is a likeable sort of fellow. For some reason he has taken it upon himself to rid the streets of these evil vermin, and to accomplish this task he enlists the aid of a friend who just happens to drive an invincible trash truck. Yes, there have been souped-up helicopters, motorcycles, and cars; now we have trash trucks! Of course, the trademark flamethrower is here as well.

Audiences attending movies like this have come to expect action, sex, and violence. Whether this is good or bad would make for an interesting discussion, but it seems that these are the very things that made movies such as "Mad Max" so popular. The murders aren't quite as horrifying as viewers have come to expect (a strange statement), but the acting is adequate and a steady pace with a touch of humor is kept throughout. If this is your kind of movie, its probably most enjoyable at the matinee price. Now showing at Independence Mall.

Stun Guns Banned From Campus

CPS

After a number of incidents and reports that about 20 students were walking around campus carrying "stun guns," Grossmont Community College officially has prohibited its 15,000 students from carrying the guns.

"The trustees decided to ban stun guns when they became aware of a potential problem," says Bev Powell, a trustee spokeswoman. "Students were playing with them. We had no serious incidents, but decided we would rather not have them on campus."

The guns emit up to a 50,000 volt electrical charge, and can render a victim helpless for up to fifteen minutes. They sell for $70-$90.

No one is sure why students at Grossmont, whose two campuses are in the San Diego metropolitan area, began carrying the guns.

Powell says one of the students said it was for protection.

"In our large city, there are lots of rapes and muggings," she concedes. But I don't think there are many at Grossmont. We have a campus police force, and the campus is well lighted."

Grossmont seems to be the first campus to report a stun gun problem.

"The weapon is relatively new," adds John Davis, John Davis, Grossmont's security chief. "Frankly, most security departments I've talked with aren't familiar with them."

Davis notes the guns aren't illegal, but stresses students shouldn't be allowed to carry them.

"It's a good weapon," he admits. "But it can be used offensively as well as defensively."

Besides worrying that an attacker can wrest the stun gun away and use it against the student, Davis frets the guns could fall into the wrong student hands. "We had one incident of student we knew was not as stable as we would like carrying one."

Now, students caught with a stun gun will be advised of the college policy. A second incident will lead to disciplinary hearing.

Stun gun distributor LeRoy Cuker says he's sold about 2000 stun guns since introducing them to the area last January. "Some police and security departments are carrying them," he says. "It's the perfect tool to completely defend ourselves, and no one gets hurt."

Cuker isn't happy about the Grossmont banning, but allows that "the (media) coverage has been good advertising for me."

Gun incidents of any kind are rare on campuses. In spring, 1982, authorities found a student at Western State College in Colorado had an Uzi submachine gun, an assault rifle and a dozen other guns in his dorm room, but officials had no legal authority to confiscate the weaponry.

In recent years, Marquette, Tennessee and all public colleges in Washington state have banned guns from their campuses.

Nautilus Room Opens

Steve Hill
Staff Writer

Completed last May as part of the Hanover renovation, the Nautilus weight room located in Hanover Hall is now open to students, faculty and staff. The room was opened during the second summer session. Weight training classes have begun this semester.

Staff members will be on hand during open hours to provide the necessary instruction needed to operate Nautilus equipment. According to Greg Dalton, Athletics Facility Manager, it takes about 30 to 40 minutes to learn how to use the machines.

Dalton said the athletic teams have been utilizing the Nautilus equipment more than anyone. "They're usually in there from 2:00 in the afternoon until 7:00 or 8:00," he said, but he also predicted the facility would open up more for students in the future, saying that in the spring less athletic teams would be using the weights.

But Coach Bill Brooks, Director of Athletics, said the University has no plan to extend the hours beyond their present status, or to hire any more staff members. "I think if someone wants to work out bad enough, they can find the time," he said. "We have already seen less interest and its only been open a week."

Brooks also felt that the hours were long enough to provide students full use of the facilities. "If you go in and work you can run through a program in 45 minutes," he said.

Cross country coach Bill Atwill agreed that one hour is enough time to complete a workout. "You can get a good workout in 30 to 40 minutes on Nautilus equipment," he said. "It's part of the circuit training aspect." He also predicted that interest will fade once the novelty wears off and people realize it is still hard work.

But for those who are still interested, is the schedule liberal enough? "I don't think so," said Troy Overboe, who found time to work out Wednesday. "Sometimes it's hard to work in time around classes and lunch."

Coach Brooks said the facility will continue to be run through the Health, Physical Education and Athletic offices. He said, "I think you should mention that the SGA did not contribute one dime to this project, funding came from state funds for the renovation (of Hanover), from athletics, intramurals, gate receipts and the facility fund, overall funds channeled through this office."

Brooks also pointed out that ample time is given to the weight conditioning classes offered by the Physical Education department. "My advice for those who want to use the facility and learn to use it right is to take the class."

The Nautilus weight room, located in Hanover Hall, is now open to students, faculty and staff. The hours for students are 8:00 to 9:00 a.m. and 1:00 to 2:00 p.m. Monday, Wednesday and Friday; 8:00 to 10:00 a.m. and 11:00 to noon Tuesday and Thursday; and Saturday 10:00 a.m. to noon.

Hours for faculty and staff are 8:00 to 9:00 a.m. and noon to 1:00 p.m. Monday, Wednesday and Friday; and 8:00 to 9:00 a.m. Tuesday and Thursday.

'Hawks Compete At Pembroke

The brother-sister combination of George Walker and Brenda Walker were again the top finishers for UNCW in the Pembroke Invitational Cross Country Meet, Saturday, Sept. 15. On this day it was a case of the race going to the most heat adapted.

Running in stifling heat and humidity, Baptist College of Charleston had a simple plan: get out fast and hold on. Let the other runners try to catch up in the 93 degree air. The tactic worked as Al Dunn and Irving Batten held first and second place throughout the five mile distance. Henry Jones of St. Augustine's hung on to third, followed by George Walker in fourth. Olympic Marathon trialist Dan Ryberg, the former All-America for Pembroke, was fifth.

"I had so much respect for Ryberg that I let the others go," Walker said after the race. "I had plenty left, but I'd given away too much distance."

He finished less than 10 seconds behind Batten and

Jones, leading the Seahawks to a 6th place (out of 12) finish. Approximately 120 runners were entered.

The next finisher for the Seahawks was T Lankford, in 22nd place, followed by Layne Fuller in 40th, John Leahy 42nd, and Ken McCraw in 48th. Ric Olsen and Kip Kiser rounded out the top seven for UNCW. Frank Frenduto, who pushed himself beyond his limits in the heat, was pulled from the race staggering with 500 yards to go. After being iced down and given fluids, he recovered.

In the women's 3-mile race, Brenda Walker held a steady pace behind the lead pack to finish 8th in 21:16. Caroline Brady, not fully recovered from a broken foot this summer, still ran well enough to place 10th. Frances O'Connell and Mary Edwards finished 14th and 16th, while Leah Ashley came home in 19th.

St. Augustine won the meet, followed by Campbell and UNCW in the four team meet.

Due to Hurricane Diana, the soccer team was handed some unexpected rest that haunted them last week at James Madison. James Madison won the contest 3-0.

On Saturday, Sept. 22, the hungry 'Hawks hosted the University of Richmond. Early in the first half the Spiders broke the ice, but from then on UNCW dominated the match. Coach Lane feels that a lot of the early success this team has had is due to hard work and superior leadership, mainly by senior captain Kevin Cox. Cox played aggressive defense and tallied twice to overcome Richmond's small lead. The 'Hawks leading scorer, Brad Dixon, added two goals to add to his running tally. Talented sophomore Billy Hughes has improved tremendously from last season and he now anchors the defense.

The team's defensive talent wasn't tested to its fullest against Richmond, but it will many times over the season. The 'Hawks went on to win this match 8-2. Forward Chris Conway and midfielder Billy Collins contributed goals for the final score.

Coach Lane is very happy with his team's attitude on and off the playing field, and has an optimistic outlook for the tough schedule which awaits them.

UNCW's soccer team travels to Atlantic Christian College this week and will host American University, a strong team, at 2:00 pm on Sept. 29.

Nursing Program

Instituted

James Lee
Associate Editor

It was 3 years in the making and included: a 350 page report and a 4 day survey visit by the State before the North Carolina Board of Nursing finally authorized UNCW to begin a four year nursing program next summer. The new baccalaureate degree program will replace the existing 2 year associates degree program which enrolled its last graduating class this fall.

The new program was given provisional approval, the only kind the board will grant to opening 4 year programs, and the program was accepted without changes.

UNCW is the last institution in the 16 member UNC System to implement a 4 year nursing program.

Common to other B.S. degrees offered by the university, the degree in nursing will require students to first take 2 years of general college courses, with the remaining 2 years devoted primarily to nursing related classes. All students must complete 124 hours of classes and unlike other departments: two sessions of summer school are required.

The program will enroll 40 students in the first class, but depending on area demand for nurses, that figure may well rise in succeeding years.

The number of students in any nursing school depends largely on community demand. According to acting dean of the school of nursing, Marlene Rosenkotter, "if demand for nurses goes up for our service region, our enrollment will go up."

The UNCW service region includes 11-14 counties.

Prior to this program, students from our area wishing to enroll in a 4 year nursing school had to venture to ECU or UNC-Chapel Hill.

There are 3 ways to become a Registered Nurse and that is either through a 2, 3, or 4 year program. The 4 year degree offers training elements the other 2 do not. For example they are trained in mental health nursing, nursing theories, nursing research, advanced nursing practice and a greater emphasis placed on family and community nursing care, just to mention a few.

Ms. Rosenkoether stressed that graduates from the 2 and 3 year programs are still registered nurses. "The graduate from a 4 year program has to take the National Licensing Exam just like everybody else. They just have these additional things."

On the licensing exam, the 2 year program at UNCW had a passing rate of 94% in the summer of 84 and 100% of the students passed during the previous 3 years. "Everybody knows that UNCW has done very well on this exam," Ms. Rosenkoether said beaming.

The next step for nursing at UNCW is the National League for Nursing Accreditation which will become retroactive upon completion of the first graduation class from the new 4 year program.

SGA Unfreezes Football Funds

George Walker
Editor

By a near unanimous vote at the Sept. 27 SGA meeting, the student Senate decided to unfreeze the football club's funds and must decide in October whether to reallocate additional money.

The club's problems point back to the 1983-84 season, a successful one on the football field. Because the club operates on a very limited budget, a playoff game to Appalachian State would have been cancelled if extra funds couldn't be gathered.

Enter the SGA, which gave the football club a loan for $1000.00. The trip was made.

But the club hasn't made any progress toward clearing the debt. "I think that everyone's aware that we've tried hard to repay the loan," says 1984-85 club president John Odom. Indeed, last spring the club took on a sales agreement with a candy company that it thought would make back the money.

Yet, the venture turned almost no profit and the 84-85 school year began with the loan still unpaid. Thus, the football club's 1984-85 allocation, amounting to $1380.00, was frozen.

This only led to more problems. The football club raised money with a car wash, and instead of turning in the revenue (SGA policy), used it to pay for referees for their second game, a 6-0 win over Davidson. Ordinarily, the allocation money would have paid for the referees. One Senator, who asked not to be named, said "We can't let the clubs do what they want. What if all the clubs did their own thing."

But the club does need the SGA's support. "Listen," says Odom, "we can't make it without them. We have a game in Washington in a few weeks and need their money to get there."

Lori Roach, a Senator, feels the football club should be made to turn in its revenue. "We all know they have it, let's ask for it back." "What's the use of having rules if we don't enforce them," said Daniella Sullivan in agreement.

But many club supporters wanted to overlook the revenue raised and consider only the loan aspect of the problem. "We know they spent it on football referees," said Senator Michael Drummond. "If we try to make them pay it back, we're gonna have the same hassles. Let's just be done with it."

The Senate did so, and then voted to subtract the $1000 from the club's 1984-85 allocation of $1380.00. Thereby unfreezing the remaining amount. Edward Troublefield, who voted with majority, said "Why punish this year's club for last year's mistakes?" But Charles Gavins, a Senator who opposed the club's financial transactions, said we needed to make an example of them. The Senate always gives in to these groups.

The SGA has a policy of allocating extra money to clubs that can't make it on what they have. The club must apply for it and be approved.

"We're going after it," says Odom, referring to the allocation. This doesn't please Gavins. "It's a gift. That's all it is, a free loan."

To those who consume drugs:

I was a student the last few years at UNCW. Some of you knew me, others seemed to recognize my long hair. My graduation in May was overshadowed by some difficulties I was having with the law concerning drugs, which is why I am writing.

It's not my business to tell you drugs are bad. Many authorities show a relationship between drug use and lower grades, promiscuity and health problems, both mental and physical. Many authorities disagree. Using drugs has always been a personal decision—that's not going to change. Nor should it. Consider the facts and experiences from your life and from those you trust, then choose carefully.

But please recall one item that is seemingly glossed over—drugs are very illegal. Although tactfully understood, this fact doesn't seem to carry the weight it should. It didn't with me. And I'm currently serving a 3 year sentence in the North Carolina prison system. I graduated from UNCW, turned 25 and found the woman I love—all in time to go to prison.

Oddly enough, I was "fortunate", in the sense that I was facing 30 years. That's longer than I've been around on this green earth. And the grass on the other side of the fence looks greener indeed to me.

Contrary to current thought, policemen aren't particularly snoop, district attorneys vengeful, nor are judges vindictive. Drugs are illegal. It's very simple. Morally correct or otherwise, if you are caught, you will go to jail. Don't think, "Oh, it's my first time," or, "It's only pot," or anything else. The law makes no provision for individuality. All the good grades, momma's money and a bright future mean nothing. They are something you have worked hard for—to lose. I lost a complete scholarship and teaching fellowship already awarded me at a graduate school in Boston. I somehow managed to trade my cap and gown for bars and stripes.

For a closer look at life in here, please check your TV guide listing for the program "60 Minutes" in the future. Southern Correctional Center (Troy, N.C.) is the focus of an upcoming segment, featuring several of the inmates. Until further notice, it will be my home. I would not treat animals the way we are treated here.

As I said, some of you may remember me—others may be merely curious. I invite you to write me, ask questions, or just small talk. Listed below is my home address, my parents will forward any mail to me. I look forward to hearing from you, if only because mail is precious. Any contact from family and friends is desperately needed.

When next you walk hand in

When does more actually buy you less than before?

Everyday if you have a meal card!!!

Last year students with meal cards were allowed to purchase any kind of food, within the price limits, from 11am to 1pm in the snack bar. Then they changed the hours: 1pm to 2:30pm—that was bearable.

This year they raised the prices on most of the food, and kept the original price limits!!! One-dollar and sixty cents last year could buy a super chili dog and a half-pint of milk. This year you can get a super chili dog and a glass of water!! A miniscule salad costs 75¢. But more importantly they raised roast beef and pita bread from 1.90 to 1.99. This means war.

Ok, so you can tell me that I can eat in the cafeteria—and make return trips to the salad bar and even get relatively free ice-cream (I did pay for the meal card!). But...they've made some drastic cutbacks hand with the one who makes your eyes shine, and the time vanishes, gave a split second of thought to my writing. Sitting in class and barely awake, give it another fleeting moment of your life. If you should see someone juggling, perhaps it might recall me to you again—it was one of my favorite there too—the salad dressings are so cut down that all you can taste is mayonaise! They won't turn the juice machines on at any meals except breakfast—how am I supposed to get my vitamin C? And they shortened the hours too. Now you have to eat dinner between 4:30 and 6:30, and if you are an athlete with late afternoon practices, you'd better memorize Domino's number because when they say they close at 6:30, THEY CLOSE AT SIX-THIRTY. Sharpl! (Actually they're halfway closed by 6:00, when there's only one line open.)

And speaking of lines, have you noticed the reason the cafe lines are so long is because there's three people behind the counter to serve, but only one has plates?! The assembly line approach doesn't work well with food. Why don't they divide the plate pile into thirds and let 'em all serve? Nah, that's too easy!!!

pastimes at UNCW.

But when you have the opportunity to get high, try taking a quick walk instead and give it some long hard thought. Consider the beach, the sun, the good professors and sleeping

Did you know that ARA Food Services fed the Olympic athletes this summer? I'll bet they didn't make Mary Lou Retton eat mayonaised salad dressing! They got any kind of exotic food they wanted. And plenty of it!

Meanwhile, here at UNCW—watered-down they're trying to make us absorb the extra cost of kumquats and filet mignon from Los Angeles!!

So remember: eat, drink and be merry—and if you want juice there's a switch under the machine—but do it soon, for tomorrow they may empty them!

Who is that good looking person that walks in the Union everyday around 2:00?

Drop us an add—A Personal Add. It doesn't cost anything, except the time it takes to write it down and stick it in the Seahawk Personal Add Box, (next to the Post Office window.) Or drop by 205E late. Drugs just might not be worth it. If they are, no problem. Do them. You and I will have lots of time to think it over in here.

Stillpoint

By Bob Haywood,

Herman Hesse's story, Journey to the East, tells of a band of men, each having his own goal, on a mythical journey to the East. With them is the servant Leo, who does their menial chores, sustains them with his spirit and his song, and, by the quality of his presence, lifts them above what they otherwise would be. All goes well until Leo disappears. Then the group falls into disarray and the journey finally is abandoned. They cannot make it without the servant Leo. The narrator, one of the party, after some years of wandering finds Leo and is taken into the Order that had sponsored the journey to the East. He discovers that Leo is titular head of the Order, its guiding spirit, a great and noble leader.

Leo portrays at once two roles that are often seen as antithetical in our culture: a servant, who by acting with integrity and spirit, builds trust and lifts people and helps them grow, and a leader who is trusted and has shaped other men's destinies by going out ahead to show the way. In a time when we have been trained to think of leadership in terms of power and control, in terms of becoming "top dog", in terms of dominance and authority by title, it would do us well to discover that the servant-leader is a real and viable alternative. Such persons do not set out to become leaders but emerge out of their own community, relations and community problems. They are more likely to emerge in practice and in the segments of society where the concern is for justice (rather than order), for performance of our institutions (rather than form), and for appropriateness of power and authority (rather than the result). Because of his or her genuine concern for the issues of the community, he or she begins to act in the community places in the role of leader. Leaders are ordinary people who, through the needs of the community, emerge as "special" people. Such a leader becomes more and more trusted because he chances losing his leadership by taking the initiation risks to venture for the common good, because he insists on the hard choices required to build and rebuild an organization or an institution; because he helps others sort out the destructive influences from the sane, moral, building forces and attitudes that enoble human life.

The servant-leader genuinely cares for the community of which he is a part and seeks to act for its welfare. And this community can be anything

The sisters of the Eta Alpha chapter of Alpha Delta Pi are proud to introduce our seven new pledges: Dana Adams, Amy Anderson, Kerl Clark, Denise Evans, Susan Robinson, Shannon Wooten, and Diane Woodard. We want to extend a very special welcome and congratulations to these girls.

One of the activities that the sorority will be involved in this semester is a raffle for the American Diabetes Association. The prize is a TRIP FOR TWO! "The Best of Britain," seven nights in England, Wales and Scotland, plus $500 spending money. Also on Sunday September 30th, Alpha Delta Pi held the third annual Professor Tea for the University Faculty and Staff. We would like to thank all of those that attended. ADPi is also looking forward to the mixers with Pi Kappa Phi, Delta Tau Delta, and Tau Kappa Epsilon this semester. Again—congratulations!

The next Half-Moon production will feature Michael Spiro on Monday, Oct 24 at 8:00pm in the Student Union Courtyard. Admission is free.

The UNCW Surfing Club is off to a fine start this fall with approximately 30 students present at the first meeting. Thus far this semester a number of club surfers have been active in surfing competition. Recently, Walker Golder and Bryan S. Tracy travelled to Cape Hatteras to compete in the ESA East Coast Championships, and more recently a number of club surfers competed in the Record Bar Surfabout at Wrightsville Beach. Bryan S. Tracy placed 4th in the mens' amateur division. Plans for t-shirt sales and surf movies are in the making. Interested students are encouraged to attend contests and social events.

Assistant Professor Susan Isen of the Philosophy and Religion Department and other members of the community attended a demonstration/rally in Raleigh Saturday to protest animal abuses in North Carolina and to educate North Carolina citizens as to what is happening to unwanted animals at such places as the Combat Trauma Management Center, commonly referred to as a "wound laboratory," at Fort Bragg.

Dr. Isen is the local coordinator for the North Carolina Network for Animals (NCNA), a non-profit organization interested in animal rights and animal welfare.

Approximately 400 people attended the rally from Salisbury, Greensboro, Greenville, Charlotte, High Point, Winston-Salem, Asheville, and Chapel Hill. A $50,000 endowment to North Carolina State University was presented at the rally by Claire and Bill Allen to establish the Claire Simmons Allan-Sampson

Memorial Scholarships in Moral Philosophy. These scholarships will be given every year to students of academic excellence who are interested in animal rights. The students will also have to be doing some significant research in animal right.

Also speaking in protest of animal abuses were Tom Regan, North Carolina State Professor; Bill Reppy, Duke Law Professor; and Alex Pacheco, President of People for Ethical Treatment of Animals (PETA). In addition, a former military surgeon, Dr. J. Lee Sedwitz, Chief of Surgery at Eastern Wake Hospital, Wake Medical Center, was an unexpected speaker.

When contacted, Mr. Jerry Steelman, Public Affairs Officer at the J.F.K. Special Warfare Center, Combat Trauma Management Center, at Fort Bragg, said, "No experiments or research is going on at Fort Bragg-only training." Steelman said that goats are anesthetized before being wounded and kept in a "surgical plane of anesthesia"—"knocked out." He also stated that the operations are performed in rooms much like operating rooms in a hospital. Dr. Isen has recently received a tentative invitation from Captain Mike Phillips, Public Affairs Officer at the J.F.K. Special Warfare Center, to tour this facility. No date has yet been set for the tour.

The controversy over vivisection, the use of living animals for medical research, is not new to the United States. Dr. Isen, however, does not consider the NCNA an antivivisectionist organization because "the Network is primarily focused on blatant abuses of animals in North Carolina...finding the obvious cases of animal abuse." Nevertheless, there has been an antivivisectionist organization in America ever since 1883 and the controversy is still with us today.

According to The New York Times, July 27, 1983, Defense Secretary Casper Weinberger halted plans for research on dogs at a firing range in Bethesda, Md. The research was stopped following an article published by the Washington Post which brought protests from the public and members of Congress. At this time, Secretary Weinberger also ordered a review of the Pentagon's use of animals in medical research and said that no animals could be used until the study was completed. Again, according to The New York Times, Jan. 24, 1984, the Pentagon lifted the ban on shooting animals, other than dogs and cats, for training purposes; such animals as goats and pigs could be used. This directive was issued by Dr. William Mayer, then Assistant Secretary of Defense for health affairs, and came after a "review by 21 experts in medical research and training from the armed services, the Defense Nuclear Agency and the medical military university." Even though the directive referred only to training, officials said they would not be using dogs or cats in wound-related research either.

Subsequent articles concerning animal research and animal rights will appear in future issues.

Vice-President Paul Bell will answer any letters any students wish to send. If you have a letter for him, just leave it with Susie in the SGA office or drop it by The Seahawk.

The Fixx

TWIGG

The Fixx are a highly original British quintet, thoroughly modern in their approach to technique and theme. Their attitude is always truly collaborative with no one individual or instrument dominating. Earlier songs like 'Stand or Fall', 'Red Skies', and 'Saved by Zero', resonate inside the mind with power and grace...thanks in large part to the band's use of echos, reverb, stop and start. Another unusual aspect of the Fixx is the use of bass as a lead instrument. This has enabled the band to generate a dance following without jeopardizing their standing among listeners as a progressive group.

Phantoms, the third LP, delivers any fan all they can ask for. The hypnotic singles starting with 'Are We Ourselves' with shades of U2 are there along with the existential themes of isolation and decay ('Facing the Wind', 'Phantom Living'). The considerable arranging skills of harmonic distortion are wound around melody like strands around the Maypole.

'Lose Face' jumps from the speakers reminiscent of 'One Thing Leads to Another' and dares us to drop our facade of self-centeredness. "We all breathe in the same air." 'Less Cities, More Moving People' is a powerful plea for an energized humanity moving against a shuffle beat of plodding time from the redundant depersonalization of urban life. 'Woman On A Train' evokes an aura of hope with a crystalline keyboard arrangement. 'Wish'...A singsong appeal to an audience in search for relevance as artists.

Phantoms, most importantly, signifies continued growth and confidence for the Fixx. This LP is much more consistent than Reach the Beach or Shattered Room. The Fixx's very best songs have always had a way of vibrating. On Phantoms all songs are on the attack daring, and challenging.

'Facing the Wind' on the second side asks yet another question--"Is there someone there I can talk to?" Listening to strands of 'Stand or Fall' in the background one can surmise how crucial that simple question is to the Fixx. The answer becomes communication--how similar we all are and the will to try. The commitment this band shows to that idea is inspiring. They don't want you to take it sitting down either. "This is phantom living."

Playing before a sparse but impressed crowd, Barry Drake brought his versatile act to UNCW last Monday.

Steve Hill
Staff Writer

Something for everyone. That is the best description for Barry Drake's performance in this semester's first Half-Moon Production sponsored by The University Program Board.

A self-proclaimed folk/blues/rock'n'roller, Drake entertained the small audience gathered in the Student Union courtyard Monday night with a solid supply of original material supplemented by cover versions of a variety of old and new tunes.

From the Beatles to Dylan, from Eddie Cochran to the Stray Cats, from the old Blues of Robert Johnson and Bo Diddley to the New Wave of Elvis Costello, Drake lent his personal touch to some classic songs.

Drake's original material drew strongly on his upbringing by an Irish family in the Catskill Mountains of New York State, his college days in New York City, and his travels through the U.S. and Europe since the beginning of his career in Greenwich Village during the early Sixties.

Drake had excellent rapport with his small audience, during the inspired two hour set, constantly joking and talking with the audience to introduce his songs.

He began playing guitar as a college freshman after seeing Bob Dylan's second gig in Greenwich Village in 1961.

"I just went along to drink some beer, I wasn't going to hear music," he recalled. "I was amazed that someone could stand up on stage alone and sing all night."

Drake related another experience with a lone singer on stage one night under different conditions.

"I went up to New York City to see (folksinger) Danny O'Keefe at a little club," he told the audience, "and he wasn't on yet, he had a warm-up act. I was the only person in the club except the guy on the stage. He saw me through the lights and kind of waved, like 'don't go away' and kept playing."

"He played nine songs, all the while just to me. Afterwards we talked; he said he was fed up and he was going back to New Jersey to get his old rock'n'roll band back together. He said at least then he would have somebody to play with when nobody showed up. His name was Bruce Springsteen."

Drake has released three albums and toured extensively in the U.S. and Europe with Emmylou Harris, Van Morrison, Livingstone Taylor, Michael Johnson and many others. Nominated two consecutive years for the College Coffeehouse Entertainer of the Year and named by Newsweek as one of the top college acts in the country, Drake is also a well respected music historian and lecturer on the history of rock'n'roll.

His latest album is Solo Survivor, on Catskill Mountain records. At one point in the show, Drake announced that he had just signed a record deal with Columbia Records. After the air...enthusiastic applause...went on to explain. "Yeah, I pay only one penny and I get 11 records, then I have to buy four more a year."

from a fraternity to an athletic team to a church to a legislature. Martin Luther King and Bishop Oscar Romero of El Salvador are illustrative of the kind of leadership of which I speak. Such people evolve out of the communities of which they are a part, not because they seek to be in charge but because they cared deeply and are recognized by their peers through their servant style of leadership. They are not trained, they evolve. Yet they remain always the servants of those they wind up leading. In a society where most of our models of leadership relate to ambition and personal power, the only hope for communities and societies characterized by love and justice lie in the re-emergence of servant leadership, persons caring deeply for the welfare of whatever organization or community of which they are a part.

Whatever organizations you choose to be part of, care for it, care for the people who are a part of it. Leadership will come later, not because you seek it or even need it, but because others will place you in that role.

TASTES
AS GOOD AS BUDWEISER AT A BETTER PRICE

Movie Review

Joan Travis
Staff Writer

Irreconcilable Differences is a sometimes interesting film that adds a new twist to an old story. Movies such as "Kramer vs. Kramer" have dealt successfully with the subject of divorce and its effects on children, but in this one the difference is that the child is divorcing the parents. At first the film seems to be a comedy, then the focus shifts and its more of a melodrama, and ultimately we're left with the feeling that director-writer Charles Shyer had a good point to make, but forgot how to go about it.

Ryan O'Neal plays Albert Brodsky, a professor of film who goes to California and becomes one of the most successful directors of his time. Shelly Long is his wife Lucy who helps him write the screenplay that takes him to the top. Through a series of flashbacks, we're shown the rise of the Brodskys, the fall of the Brodskys (due mainly to Albert's lust for another woman), and somewhere in there we're also shown the effect of all this on their daughter. Here is where a major problem with the film exists-at the onset, the implication is that this will be a story about problems in the relationship of parents and children. As the movie progresses though, it becomes the story of two good people who go "Hollywood" and make a mess of their lives. The whole idea of the troubled daughter seems lost.

Ryan O'Neal and Shelly Long both do quite well with their roles. As O'Neal's character rises to fame, it becomes harder and harder to like him. Unfortunately, he wasn't given enough time to be likeable in the beginning, and so it is hard to sympathize with him in the end. Long's character is a little better drawn, as we see her go from a happy wife, to a miserable overeater (an image created with too much padding), to an immensely successful writer. Drew Barrymore still looks like she's going to laugh at the end of every line.

Shyer has added some interesting directorial touches. Long's character is seen standing before a blank white wall in the beginning when she is emotionally and intellectually lacking, and in a very similar scene near the end, the character stands before a wall covered with pictures of herself, after her book goes to number one. In other scenes, the family is shown in small, cramped rooms, struggling to be successful; once success is reached and they're in huge, sprawling rooms, they fall apart. What could have been a very interesting film turns into general fare, probably because Shyer and Meyers should have decided on a single direction. Now showing at College Road Cinemas.

Gruber Searches for Acceptance

Ann Bunting
Staff Writer

MICHAEL GRUBER. "I'm just like everybody else. The only thing I can't do is use my legs. That's it."

Michael Gruber is a sophomore at UNCW. A warm, friendly man, he is majoring in Political Science, intending to be an advocate for handicapped people.

Four years ago, Michael was ambulatory. Then he was hit by a truck. He was in the hospital, in a coma for three months, had three heart attacks, and had rehabilitation for a year. Determinedly, Michael began rebuilding his life, adapting to a wheelchair. Three years after the first wreck, Michael was involved in a second accident: while driving his adapted, customized van, a young man hit Michael head on. The young man was drunk, driving a motorcycle, and was killed instantly. As Michael remembers: "His face hit the window as the shattered glass came tumbling down, like diamonds from the sky."

"Right after my second accident, a friend said why don't you come down to Wrightsville Beach and stay with me for a couple of days. I made plans for three days and stayed for eleven."

Michael liked it here. "So I said, okay, it's too crowded in New Jersey. Everybody's in a hurry: time to move. Time to move down to North Carolina where it's nice and relaxed. That's what I want."

On that first visit, Michael "pushed" from Wrightsville

Beach to the college. He said the roads were terrible, but the people were friendly, courteous, and nice on the road. He stays off the roads at night in his wheelchair: it's too dangerous. He pushes two miles to school each day. Michael says it's "good exercise. They wanted me to go to school Monday, Wednesday, and Friday, to give me a break on Tuesday and Thursday, but I said No, it's my exercise. I do it every day."

"I've already been pulled over four times by the campus security for obstructing traffic. They're trying to protect me. But there are no walkways. That's why I wrote the articles in the newspaper. Administration needs to see the obstacles here. They're not in the situation I'm in, so I'm the one to tell them. For instance, the Administration building has a handicap service up on the second floor, but no elevator to get to it. So we need another office, perhaps in the student union. There, also, students can see us and associate more easily with us, not be scared because we're abnormal to them. People see someone in a wheelchair and back off, because they're not sure how to associate with us. But we're just like everybody else: we talk, we have fun together, we go out and party just like everybody else. Don't segregate us."

Females React to Harassment

CPS

Nearly one-third of all female college students are sexually harassed on campus—mostly by male faculty members—but few women complain because of embarrassing, drawn-out grievance procedures, a new book claims.

The harassment, moreover, can cause emotional problems and make victims hostile toward men, says Linda Weiner, University of Cincinnati vice provost authors of "The Lecherous Professor," a book on harassment on campus.

"Students are frightened," Dzeich explains. "They let harassment go on. They endure it, anything but confront it. 'I don't want him to get in trouble, I just want him to stop,' is a common reaction."

Students often feel intimidated or powerless to stop the harassment, although institutions are required to have grievance procedures and programs to support them, Dzeich points out.

"Many of these programs are slow in coming," she states. "But if they're not adequate, students begin to protest."

Few faculty members harass students, Dzeich stresses, but those who do are usually chronic repeaters.

"A million-plus women are harassed each year," she adds. "But it's a small number of faculty who do it."

The authors found three common types of harassers.

The "counselor-helper" preys on troubled students' needs for close relationships. The "power broker" bargains grades and recommendations for sexual favors, and the "intellectual seducer" draws personal information from students in class.

The authors' findings are consistent with those in other harassment studies.

The University of California at Berkeley determined in 1979 that 30 percent of its female students received unwanted sexual attention from instructors.

In a 1982 University of Washington study, 41 percent of campus women claimed they'd been sexually harassed. In 1983, nearly a fourth of Penn State's women students said they had been harassed.

"Our policy on sexual harassment allows students three channels for complaints," reports Vicky Eide of Iowa State University's Affirmative Action office. "Informal complaints go through advisors of department chairs. Affirmative Action handles formal complaints, or students may go through an outside channel such as the Iowa Civil Rights Commission."

But few women ever file charges, she adds.

"They come in and discuss options, but never come back," Eide says. "At this time no cases are under investigation"

The University of California at Santa Barbara handles about 20 sexual harassment complaints a year through its University Grievance Officer (UGO) and a number of other contacts.

Only one formal grievance has been filed since 1981, says Dr. Harleen McAda, the current UGO.

The low numbers of complaints are deceiving, Dzeich claims, and can make colleges complacent.

"An institution can kid itself," she says. "But it may not be an environment in which students are comfortable complaining."

Informal complaints are easier to make, Dzeich adds, but these aren't formally recorded or thoroughly investigated.

A better method, she says, is to confront the harasser non-aggressively. If he continues, complain to a trusted advisor, department head or administrator.

"Keep records of events," she stresses. "Write him a letter and keep a copy of it. Document everything."

The odds are almost always against you in cross-country.

Last Saturday, for example, 105 lean runners representing 15 teams and four states nervously toed the starting line at the Winthrop Invitational in Rock Hill, S.C.

And soon they were off, powering down fairways on the mild, freshly cut golf course on the Winthrop campus. The fastest runners charged furiously ahead and, as they passed the mile in 4:59, it was clear the winner of the 5-mile race would come from this five man pack.

Early on, the lead changed frequently, but senior George Walker of UNCW always maintained 2nd or 3rd. "The cool wind (20-25 mph) was very strong and I wanted to draft and relax as much as possible," said Walker, the pre-race favorite. Walker's race strategy had been set: run with the lead pack for two miles and take command with a strong third mile. "Then," he said, "I hope to leave everyone with a series of surges on the last two miles."

Yet, his plans almost came crashing down at the 1.5 mile mark. Junior T. Lankford of UNCW, who was running surprisingly strong with the front pack at this point, said "Somebody charged right into the middle of the pack and tangled up with George." Walker stumbled but kept his balance. "I planted an elbow in that guy's ribs," added Lankford.

Meanwhile, UNCW's next four talented but untested runners were struggling far back in the field. Any hopes of catching eventual team champion UNCC, which placed four runners in the top 15, were dashed. As were second and third, which went to Pembroke and Campbell. Ken McCraw (25th) and Layne Fuller (31st), a pair of freshmen, ran 3 and 4. Sophomores Chuck Luey, Frank Frenduto and John Leahy helped nail down the no. 4 spot for UNCW.

Walker broke free from a UNCC pursuer at 2.5 miles and won going away in 26:34 (5.1 miles). Lankford, rapidly improving and finally rid of a year-long knee injury, staggered across the tape 6th.

Afterwards, neither was satisfied. "I was happy to win but not with my time," explained Walker. Lankford was frustrated by a draining last mile that dropped him from 3rd to 6th. The crowning blow occurred when Mark Bedenbaugh (Francis Marion) passed him yards from the finish.

After the race, as the UNCW runners jogged a cooldown, Lankford was reminded that he will get a rematch with Bedenbaugh at Charleston in three weeks. "I know I'll get him then," said Lankford. "I just know it."

Such are the hopes that long odds manifest.

With less than two minutes to play, the UNCW soccer team held a 2-1 lead over powerful American University, a nationally-ranked team. Assistant coach Greg Marinich explains "With only a few minutes left I thought we had it under control and that we had the game won."

The Seahawk players must have too. First, American tied the match at 2-2. The thought of losing the game was not a even an entity, minutes before, but now a true concern. The strong and talented American team scored with only 20 seconds remaining to win the contest 3-2.

Sophomore Chris Conway, who had two assists, expressed the team's misery. "Everyone looked up at the scoreboard in disbelief, we played too hard for it to end up like this!"

Coach Calvin Lane was disappointed with the loss but was happy with the way the 'Hawks dominated the physical aspect of the match.

Earlier in the week, Brad Dixon, the 'Hawks leading scorer, came up with the tying goal that sent the game into overtime. Dixon's goal was not only a stimulant for the team but also a means of revenging his old college, Atlantic Christian. Pat Brown scored the deciding goal in overtime on an assist from Billy Collins. Final score: 2-1

Last weekend, UNCW continued its dominance, defeating NC State and Campbell.

Crisp passing and tight defense kept the NC State game close during the first half. Finally, Eduardo Alcala scored and Tommy Carter converted for the first six. Mark Dreyfers intercepted a pass, broke two tackles and outran several defenders for the try.

The Wolfpack came back in the second half but the game was out of reach when Mike Crupi, Mike Seitz and Rob-Shand scored tries. Tommy Carter converted on all three attempts, the last one hitting the cross bar.

The next day against Campbell Tommy Carter converted a 40 yard penalty kick for three points, the only ones needed. Mike Crupi raced 70 yards down the sideline after receiving a kick. Mike Seitz scored and Tommy Carter converted for the final score of 16-0. UNCW travels to ECU this weekend and will be hoping to up its record to 6-0.

UNCW Cross-Country Coach Bill Atwill didn't leave any doubts why the girls team brought home a team trophy in a 3rd place showing at the Winthrop Invitation on Saturday.

"We had a tight pack," said Atwill, in his sixth year at UNCW. "All of the girls raced well."

The statistics prove his point. All of the Seahawk scoring runners (top 5) cracked the top 15 (out of 30). For the 3rd consecutive race, Brenda Walker sparked the 'Hawks with a time of 21:04 (3.1 miles), a minute behind winner Patty Sinclair of Winthrop. Campbell captured the team title.

Frances O'Connell, a junior from West Virginia and the team's most improved runner, scored well behind Walker. Caroline Brady and two newcomers, Mary Edwards and Leah Ashley, ran aggressively in the top 15 and also earned medals for their efforts. Sheila Viola, a freshman from Durham, and sophomore Pat Smith, a Wilmington area resident, lent support from the sixth and seventh spots. Both the men's and women's teams will compete next in the State Championships in Raleigh next week.

UNCW Elevated Academically

James Lee
Associate Editor

Proposals for new graduate programs at UNCW will be reviewed by the General Administration Office of the UNC system as part of an overall elevation in the comprehensive status of this campus.

Every academic department on campus has been notified. If they desire a graduate program, the department must submit a proposal to plan a graduate curriculum. A UNCW planning committee will then review the proposals during October and much of November. Chancellor Wagoner will have final authorization before he sends the proposals to Chapel Hill by December 18.

The departmental proposals are only requests for authorization to plan a graduate program. The General Administration Office will accept or reject any departmental plan by sometime next summer.

Assisting Vice-Chancellor for Academic Affairs, Dr. James McGowan explains, "This is just the beginning of a long involved process." It will be at least 2 years before any new graduate programs are offered.

The UNC Long Range Planning Guide, which is published bi-annually, has been expressing a desire to raise the status of UNCW to a University and College I.

At the present time UNCW is rated a Comprehensive University and College II, with other schools such as Campbell and UNC-Asheville. The move into Comprehensive University College I will rank us with schools like Appalachian State, Wake Forest and UNC-Charlotte.

The desire by the General Administration Office to allow UNCW to make plans for a more expanded curriculum will make post-graduate studies possible.

Isen Examines Animal Cruelty

Tinker Linebaugh

Susan Isen, Associate Professor in the Philosophy and Religion Department, has been invited to tour the Combat Trauma Management Center of the J.F.K. Special Warfare Center at Fort Bragg, N.C. Dr. Isen is the local coordinator for the North Carolina Network for Animals (NCNA), which is trying to stop "wound" laboratories such as the one at Ft. Bragg, as well as, educate the public about mistreatment of animals, and to lobby for legislative reforms.

The facility at Ft. Bragg, she explained, is a laboratory where "animals are used as targets to test the effects of high-velocity weapons on the flesh." At this lab, goats are used.

Dr. Isen will be able to take a small delegation into the facility to see what is happening there as it relates to animal rights.

"They are interested in dialogue," said Isen, "so the situation isn't hopeless."

Jerry Steelman, a spokesman for the Public Affairs Office at the Combat Trauma Center, stated that only training of Special forces Medical Non-commissioned Officers is being done at Ft. Bragg. According to Steelman, the men being trained are not doctors.

"They are men who would be on a battlefield, men who would be on the field first to react to wounds of the type sustained in the training facility here," he said.

Approximately 240 goats are used each year at a cost of about 40 dollars a goat.

"Wounding does not go on every day," said Steelman, "only when the medics are ready for that portion of the training."

Steelman refused to disclose the names of those who supplied the goats, saying it relates to the Privacy Act, but said the testing was conducted as humanely as possible.

Fall Break Falls Short

Mona Franklin
Managing Editor
Contributions by the Journalism class

In past years, students at UNCW have had a full week of fall break to relax, rest or most importantly--catch up on work.

But the administration decided that 1984 will be the year of change. A three day break resulted, and students felt the pressure as they tried to squeeze a week break into three days.

Students hardly had time to unpack before their suitcases and themselves were due back at UNCW.

And some did not make it.

In some classes, attendance was down approximately 30 per cent as students did not return for just a Thursday or Friday class.

In the psychology department, Dr. Lamb reported that about 30 per cent of her Vocational Psychology class was absent, while three out of sixteen were absent from her Psychology Applied to Human Life class.

The education department also suffered a 30 per cent decrease in attendance in some classes. Dr. Grace Burton of the department felt that a few days are not enough for students who live out of town to travel home. Most education professors felt the students should have a longer fall break.

Some departments had even higher absenteeism.

The math and computer science department had 40-50 per cent absent, and in r. class where Dr. Buman gave an announced quiz, 18 out of 75 were not present.

"The last two days were worthless," said Buman. Both he and Dr. Karlof of the department feel that the fall break should either be eliminated entirely or returned to a full week.

The foreign language department reported some classes with 40 or 50 per cent absent. Even at 50 per cent, the professors were not surprised. Mr. Sparks of the department "realistically expected it to be lower" and felt the three day break was "a cock-eyed notion." Many of the other foreign language professors felt the five day break was better than the three day break.

In philosophy and religion classes, there was an average drop in attendance from 10-50 per cent, with at least one class having 100 per cent absent.

Some departments did not see a significant drop in attendance.

In the communications and fine arts department, about a 25 per cent absentee rate occurred, but many of the students were upperclassmen. Several faculty members felt that since the break was cut to three days, the three days should fall on the latter part of the week.

In the English department, absence was considered normal, with an average of 10-20 per cent absent. Several of the professors remarked that they were "very surprised" at the normal attendance.

Dear Editor,
Several years ago I had an abortion. The reasons were selfish: I had been married only a couple of years and had just started a new job.

I tried to rationalize---it really wasn't human life yet; I wanted a career. Eight years have passed, and I have two beautiful children. When I look at them, I realize how blessed I am. Life is a miracle that should be cherished. I've had a lot of time to think about this issue and I believe abortion is murder.

Abortion should not be used to deny "imperfect" human beings the right to life. No one can predict the quality of life an individual will have before he is born. Through working with handicapped children, I've discovered that many handicapped people have a more beautiful productive life than "normal" people.

True, some children are born into terrible circumstances, but they deserve the right to overcome their circumstances, as millions have done in the past. Abortion is one more step in the decay of society.

In the 10 years that abortion has been legal, 12 million babies have been aborted. Dr. David Reagan says we "espouse a philosophy which rejoices over the slaughter of human babies while weeping over the killing of whales."

Those of you who are contemplating abortion, think again. You will have to live with that decision the rest of your life.

On September 28, Residence Life sponsored our first party of the year--a Toga Party; complete with innovative designs in bed sheets, good music, great refreshments, and a fantastic break show. The Toga Party was coordinated by Eddie Salaz (Resident Assistant in Hewlett Hall) and Trey McGriff (Resident Assistant in the Apartments).

When asked about the success of the party, Eddie Salaz replied, "I thought it was a good party, especially since it had been rescheduled due to Diana, and it also rained that night." But despite the rain, approximately 200 Residence Life students attended the Toga Party and were treated to the awesome dance performance of 'Lectro Rock.

"The event came off really well," said Trey McGriff. He went on to add, "we really want to thank the TEK's, the Phi Kapp's, and Jackson Beverage for their donations."

After the success of the Toga Party, Residence Life is looking forward to our next big event, a Monster Bash Halloween Party. The Monster Bash will be held on October 26 from 7:00 p.m. to 11:00 p.m. and is for residence life students and their guests.

Four Letters Spell Trouble

Math: a four letter word we were introduced to in the first grade. Our teachers called it important, a "friend for life."

HA!

To me math is like that runny-nosed kid down the street who really grosses you out, and always turns up when you're trying to have fun!!!

In high school it turned up in the sciences--biology and chemistry and assorted dry stuff, sneaking its way in to spoil all the frog-surgery and chemical-mixing.

But it got worse once I got here! Now math follows me EVERYWHERE and I can't escape it!!

It was bad enough taking Math 115 and Chemistry 105 my first semester, but I also took French 101--and we learned to count and add and subtract in a foreign tongue. Math's bad enough in English--forget français! I also learned a smidgen of statistics in Psych 105! It drove me crazy!

Then last semester I vowed to make a clean break from any math-related subjects. Just easy Liberal Arts stuff for me! But it snuck back in!

I took PE "run-o-run" and had to count calories, plug stuff like my weight and height into formulas and use all sorts of statistic tables and things! Give me a BREAK!

You'd think getting into a semblance of shape wouldn't require math!!

But this semester tops any math experience I've ever had before!! Out of five classes, three are extremely math-oriented, and I think I'm going to die!

Have you ever heard of Rudiments of Music? It's supposedly for non-music majors, but you need a computer science degree to figure some of this stuff out. It's more like Rudiments of (ugh!) Math!!

Then there's "Invitation to Philosophical Thinking"...now doesn't that sound sort of soothing--learning about deep, worthwhile thoughts and how to think them? WRONG! The same people who sat around in their ovens thinking these great thoughts, like Rene Descartes, were some of the greatest mathematicians ever produced. And there's truth tables and conclusions and all sorts of equally thrilling equations.

But worst of all, there's "EASY" Calculus 225. It leaves me just SPEECHLESS!!

But it's one of my required courses, so there I sit in Morton Hall, Room 100, on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays. (It's from 1-2pm. Why don't you drop in, say 1:30 or so and create a diversion?!! PLEASE??!!)

Next semester I'm supposed to take statistics and a computer science course and one or two other courses that'll probably slip some math in on me. I can't wait.

(Save Stephanie from a fate worse than math! If you can factor a derivative, you're hired!!)

By Bob Haywood,

"One of the worst examples of the moral hypocrisy of our day is how the energy and passion of Christians opposing abortion have been manipulated in support of political goals that are often directly contrary to the principles in which a genuinely pro-life position is based. Life must be defended everywhere and anywhere it is threatened. Whether the lives are yet unborn, or enemy populations under the shadow of our missiles, or children of poor families, or Central American peasants facing terror and murder, or prisoners on death row---all these lives are precious to God and must be protected by those who love God.

This consistent pro-life position is very different from the selective morality preached by the Christian right. In place of the Biblical gospel of peace, the television preachers of the right proclaim a gospel of salvation through military might; in place of the gospel of compassion, they preach the arrogance of American power; instead of the gospel that is good news to the poor, they preach a gospel that honors excessive wealth as a sign of God's favor and leaves the poor to fend for themselves.

There is ultimately a religion of the state. They have become like the court prophets of ancient Israel who were employed by the king to pronounce God's blessing upon the king's schemes and ambitions. This year that has come to mean pronouncing an uncritical blessing on the reelection of the president. But in spite of all the attention it has been getting, the New Right does not own the American churches. At stake are the fundamental issues of justice, mercy and peace that fill the Bible from cover to cover."

The above article, on which I feel I cannot improve and with which I totally agree, was written by Jim Wallis, who is a pastor and the editor of Sojourners Magazine.

Face Restrictions

For the most part, the international students at UNCW like Wilmington and the campus. However, there is one area of dissatisfaction: the work restrictions placed on foreign students by the federal government. These feelings were conveyed by the international students present at their first meeting this year, September 21, with Pat Leonard, Associate Dean of Students.

Approximately five of the thirteen students attending the meeting are majoring in Marine Biology. "This is the place to study it," said Sergio Leon, a Senior from Venezuela. Upon graduation, Leon and his wife (who also attended UNCW) will be returning to Venezuela. His government provided a scholarship for his education in the U.S. with the stipulation that he return and work in his country for four to five years.

Hiroyuke Narita, a Junior from Japan majoring in Business, said of UNCW, "It's a good size school and the business school is growing rapidly." He may remain in the U.S. to attend graduate school, but also plans to return to his country later with "American business ideas."

During the meeting, the Host Family Program was discussed. In this program, students are "adopted" by a Wilmington-area families, remembered by these families on special days, and invited to spend time with them. A special benefit of this program is that it provides a place for students to stay during breaks or vacations when the student dorms are closed.

The students were interested in visiting different areas of North Carolina and neighboring states, and future plans also include an International Student's Day to familiarize other students with the different cultures represented at UNCW. Immediate plans are for the students to have a dinner on Friday, October 25, at a restaurant in the Wilmington area.

A college education continues to be a big help in getting a job, according to a newly-released report by the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics (BLS).

As of March, 1984, the unemployment rate among college graduates averaged 2.7 percent, compared to 7.2 percent for high school graduates and 11.6 percent for workers with an eighth grade education or less, the report shows.

The unemployment rate for college grads this year, moreover, represents a significant drop from the 3.5 percent in 1983, and 3.0 percent in 1982, notes BLS spokesman Rick Dedens.

College graduates make up a majority of the workers in most managerial and professional fields, as well as the bulk of workers in technical and sales occupations.

Among professional occupations - health and medical services, law, teaching, engineering, math, and computer services - college graduates comprise 78 percent of the work force, the report reveals.

In addition, college graduates make up 43.5 percent of all executive, administrative, and managerial jobs, 36 percent of sales positions, and 33 percent of all technical occupations.

For the third consecutive year, the number of college graduates in the labor force rose by more than a million, the report also shows, 600,000 of whom were women.

Women graduates, in fact, now comprise 38 percent of all workers with 4 or more years of college, compared to 32 percent in 1970. Over the same period, the report notes, the number of women graduates who work rose from 61 percent to 78 percent.

Black female graduates show an even higher employment rate, according to the study, which shows that 88 percent of all black women grads hold jobs.

And among male graduates, both white and black, 95 percent are active in the labor force.

Since "we don't really ask people their motivations or reasons for being employed," the BLS's Dedens says, the report doesn't explain the increases in labor force participation among women and blacks.

We need your advice.

Your elected representatives in the Student Government Association seem to be up in the air over a couple of probable issues. Therefore, we need your input to see if these probable issues are truly issues, concerns or complaints.

1). Fall Break. Does it need to be lengthened, shortened, or kept the same?

2). Programming space for clubs and organizations to have ceremonies, dances, large group gatherings, receptions, etc. Is there enough or not?

3). Lights for the resident life basketball and tennis courts. Do students use it now and will they use it at night?

4). Raising the minimum drinking age. Should it be and how high?

If you have any opinions on these subjects write them down and send it to the SGA office or the Seahawk office in the Union. If not your representatives will consider these matters not serious and will move on to other matters.

"Nazi" Book Censored

Courtesy/College Press Service

The Cornell Daily Sun has thrust itself into controversy by refusing to run an ad for a "revisionist history book" that claims the Nazi death camps of World War II never existed, and that the war against the Jews is a "Zionist myth."

The book's Ithaca, New York distributor charges the Sun is censoring the book by refusing to run the ad, calls the paper's editor a racist, and threatens to sue the paper for libel.

The book, "The Hoax of the Twentieth Century," is by Northwestern University professor Dr. Arthur R. Butz.

In a September 5th letter to Michael A. Hoffman 11 of Ithaca-based Cobra Press, Sun editor Scott Jaschik explained the paper wouldn't run the ad because the Sun's ad rate card stipulated sexist and racist ads could be refused.

Hoffman responded a week later in a letter accusing the Sun of "political censorship" and calling the staff "racists and book banning bigots."

"The Sun has a policy. We just don't accept any ads," Jaschik declares. "We decided this ad wasn't appropriate for us."

The ad boasted the book has been "banned from college libraries, bookstores and 'Holocaust studies.'"

Butz's lectures on what he calls the "Holocaust myth" have provoked considerable controversy and protest, particularly from concentration camp survivors and their families.

Those lectures, however, aren't given on Butz's campus at Northwestern.

Northwestern, where Butz has long taught engineering courses, has affirmed the professor's right to hold his own views of World War two, but won't let him teach those views on campus, noting he is not a qualified historian.

Jaschik refused to run the ad for other reasons.

"It's a very fine line to make sure we don't just close out unpopular viewpoints," Jaschik stresses. "But on the basis of our study and research, we believe this group (IHR) is a group spreading hatred."

In his volatile response, Hoffman claimed IHR gets support from "numerous anti-zionist Jews" and called the Sun's action "a strange sort of 'truth' that requires censorship and repression to maintain it."

Jaschik scoffs at Hoffman's charge.

"Newspapers make judgements every day on whether or not something is appropriate for them to publish," he maintains. "Is that censorship?"

He may be right, says Lisa Dawson of the American Newspapers Publishers Association in Washington, DC.

She says a recent court decision upheld the right of the Providence Journal to refuse to run an ad. The ruling, however, is being appealed.

Dawson speculated the Sun's ad card disclaimer should protect it from censorship charges, but "that's not to say if it's right or wrong. The question is who decides what's racist and what's sexist."

Hoffman himself could not be reached for comment.

Jaschik, in any case, isn't taking the distributor's threat of a libel suit too seriously. "We haven't done anything libelous. It's my understanding of libel laws that you can't be sued for a personal letter."

Nighttime Dorm Visitation Restricted In Florida

Courtesy/College Press Service

University of Florida students soon may find their indoor nocturnal activities curtailed by a ban on members of the opposite sex spending the night with them in residence halls and fraternity houses.

And if Florida and other colleges are any indication, students everywhere may soon be facing tough new restrictions on what they can do in campus housing.

Florida decided to think seriously about joining the growing number of colleges that restrict visiting hours when a university task force suggested the changes in July.

Student reaction was mixed.

The 13-member task force, made up of faculty, students and community representatives, was reacting to an alleged rape at a fraternity house and a campus hearing into a student's complaint about being disturbed by late-night visitors, says Hugh Cunningham, director of university information.

"Currently, overnight visitation is not permitted," Cunningham notes. "But 24-hour visitation is, so obviously overnight visitation probably exists."

Among the suggestions were in-house monitoring by students and staff of individual residence halls, and live-in adult supervision in fraternity houses.

Most fraternity members reacted "very well" to the recommendations, reports Tom Dougan, campus fraternity advisor, though many feel they have been singled out because of the alleged rape this spring.

"In the coming year we'll start staffing the fraternities with grad students or house mothers," Dougan says. "But most fraternity members don't feel the presence of a house mother would have prevented what allegedly occurred."

Last month, a 16-year-old girl visiting UF claimed she was raped at a pre-rush party at Sigma Alpha Epsilon, which does not have a resident adult supervisor.

UF police are still investigating the incident.

Some fraternity members also say they can't afford the $15,000 a year to hire a house mother.

Student reaction to the suggestions was minimal because of the summer release of the task force's report, but Cunningham expects more feedback as students return to campus this fall.

Florida is one of a number of colleges that have changed overnight visitor policies recently.

While sign in/sign out sheets and curfews are outdated, restricted guest hours are replacing the more liberal policies promoted in the sixties and seventies on many campuses.

In 1980, the University of Pittsburgh revised its 24-hour visitation policy and now restricts overnight guests to the same sex. Kent State, Kansas and Albam, among others, soon followed suit.

The changes at Pitt and Kent State were prompted by dormitory murders.

Administrators there and at other schools cite security as the reason for the changes.

Students themselves are the ones asking for the stricter housing policies, claims Paul Jahr, research committee chairman of the American Association of College and University Housing Officers (ACUHO).

"The nature of college students in general is changing," he explains. "They are making an economic decision to go to college and they want to make the best use of their time."

Dorm visiting policies were a question "way back when," Jahr adds, but as society has changed in the past two decades, so have students.

"Most students now were born after Kennedy was assassinated," he says. "They've grown up in a more permissive society and the question of visitation hours just isn't that big an issue to them"

Some students, however, are unhappy with college administrators' attempts to regulate visiting hours regardless of security or social reasons.

Western Illinois University student Pat Botterman and ex-student Craig Roberts are suing WIU over its attempts to end a 14-year open-door policy.

WIU wants to ban co-ed visits after midnight on weeknights and after 2 a.m. on weekends, with the curfew ending at 8 a.m.

Botterman claims the change violates the student constitution, approved by the university's Board of Governors, which specifies that students will be consulted in every level of policymaking.

"The administration brought out the policy with no debate," he says. "The students protested. The current policy has been in effect since about 1969 and dorm residents vote by floor on visitation hours."

Boo!!! Happy Halloween!!!

Deadheads Rejoice In Charlotte

Joan Travis
Staff Writer

Another evening with the Grateful Dead has passed, and what a fine time it was. Jerry and company played for over four hours last Friday night, and the crowd danced for many more. In times when a lot of bands have sacrificed their sound and art in order to appeal to a wider audience, it's good to know that some things remain the same.

The Dead played through a lot of their best, including "Little Red Rooster," "Feel Like a Stranger," "Black Peter," "Brown-eyed Woman," "Baby

Blue," Johnny B. Goode," and "Sugar Magnolia."

Jerry Garcia drifted up a long trail of sparkling leads, inviting everyone to wonder happily along for the ride. That easy-going, laid-back feeling really is inherent in the music, especially when the band breaks off into its famed instrumentals, leaving the apparent boundaries of the song behind.

Drummers Mickey Hart and Bill Kreutzman worked some impressive rhythm magic, filling the hall with the unique sound of double drums. Phil Lesh wove his bass in and out of the other sounds, and rhythm guitarist Bob Weir played and sang with the interesting passion that is his alone. The newest Dead member, Brent Mydland, played some bouncy keyboards, completing the special sound.

Any Grateful Dead concert isn't complete though, without the audience experience. Walking into the Charlotte Coliseum Friday night was like walking into a bright and beautiful time warp. The gear would probably be about 1968, and the only elements missing in the illusion would be the intense emotional feelings brought out by the war. There were colorful tie-dyes, patched jeans, and beads; there was long hair, and the smell of patchouli everywhere--oh, and drugs, drugs, and more drugs.

These people know exactly what they like, and for many, the music has become the thing in life. They came from New York, California, Colorado, and just about everywhere else to see the Dead. They were going with the band the next night to Richmond, and many were going along for the rest of the tour.

When the band starts playing, and all of the people sway at the same time, know all the words, and take the party on the road from city to city, it becomes evident that this is somehow different from all the rest.

And it's good to see that after all the years they've been around, the Grateful Dead continue to make the trip a great experience.

It's Still Rock 'N' Roll To State

Courtesy/College Press Service

I hanks to student protest and a new student concert advisory committee, it's "still rock 'n roll" at North Carolina State University after all.

A three-week old campus ban on "heavy metal" music was lifted last week when the administration approved a Coliseum Concert Advisory Committee to screen rock music acts, reports committee member Jeff Bender.

The ban followed a Van Halen concert where the young, predominantly non-campus crowd left the university's Reynolds Coliseum strewn with trash, Bender explains.

"The Saturday concert meant there was no clean-up until Monday," he says. "The administration decided 'We don't want this mess anymore,' and reasoned that heavy metal bands were drawing a young, non-student crowd that left a big mess."

Students immediately labeled the ban "ridiculous" and "discriminatory" and complained they'd be forced to go off-campus for rock concerts.

"The biggest contention was with the unclear terms of the ban," Bender stresses. "There were no set guidelines about what music was banned."

Indeed, Athletic Director Willis Casey originally said he'd ban rock music while allowing the Coliseum to host acts like Billy Joel, who Casey apparently didn't see as a rock 'n roll musician.

The adverse student reaction led to meetings between student leaders and university administrators, who proposed the student-run advisory committee to help make rock bookings.

Committee members include the student center president, the director of student union activities, the assistant dean of students and Bender, who is editor of the campus newspaper.

"The committee will help screen talent that appears at the Coliseum," explains Richard Farrell, Coliseum business manager. "They'll determine if students want a particular artist on campus."

Coliseum officials will sign

"family type" acts, he stresses, and will consult the students only for rock concerts.

"It will be interesting to see on what criteria they judge these groups on," he adds.

Bender claims the committee is a better solution than dealing with the administration's "paranoia of any type of music that appeals to a younger crowd."

"They're not interested in entertainment that draws a 15-year-old crowd," he points out. "I understand that. After all, this is a university."

Jazz Great Visits UNCW

Steve Hill
Staff Writer

"Any instrument in a case is just an instrument in a case." With those words, flutist Herbie Mann described how he first began playing jazz music on the flute, an instrument previously associated strictly with classical music.

"I think people have a preconceived idea of what constitutes a jazz instrument," he said, citing the piano and saxophone as typical jazz instruments. "But I've always said any instrument in a case is just an instrument in a case. When you take it out and play it, it can be whatever you want it to be."

Mann, who was in town last week to perform at Thalian Hall, spoke to the History of Jazz class Wednesday on topics ranging from the history of the flute in jazz to the state of modern day video-oriented rock'n'roll.

Mann began playing jazz flute at a time when there were no recordings of the flute as a jazz instrument. When asked if he played jazz flute, Mann, who needed work at the time, replied, "I do now." He first learned the arrangements on the saxophone and clarinet and then worked to adapt the arrangements to the flute.

Mann proved how diverse the flute can be, performing briefly with a rhythm section made up of Duke Ladd on piano, Greg Eavey on drums, and David Kechley on bass. Mann led the quartet on the Miles Davis composition, "Blues", a funky "Memphis Underground", and the bittersweet "As Time Goes By".

Calling himself "strictly an ear player when it comes to improvisation," Mann said, "there are no mistakes in music as long as it sounds good to you."

"Music should be fun," he added. "If you are taking a music and your teacher has you playing scales and exercises and you hate it, you should tell him what kind of music you want to play. He can draw up scales for Michael Jackson music, or Duran Duran, or AC/DC. Music should not be like schoolwork."

On the subject of rock'n'roll, Mann said, "It's fine in it's place, but it provides very little room for the listener to use his brain. There is a limited mentality to MTV, it exploits the violent nature of people. I don't want to be associated with that, it disgusts me."

Mann doesn't consider himself a purist, but he does prefer acoustic instruments to electric ones. He recently experimented with synthesizers, but the problem says Mann, is "the more toys you have, the more thoughts you have about playing those toys instead of playing music. It limits the initial creativity."

School Kids Record Review

TWIGG

The Yes show, a few weeks ago in Greensboro coliseum, soothed some doubts about a middle aged progressive rock band from the dinosaur era: First, was it possible to make vital music again after seven years of abandonment and more importantly, could this band go on without the services of guitarist Steve Howe (cream puffing his way through Asia) or the pompous keyboard work of Rick Wakeman and Pat Moraz. By carefully balancing their existing strengths (the vocals of Jon Anderson and booming left field bags of Chris Squire) with the new contributions of leaner rock guitar by Trevor Rabon, Yes continues as a powerhouse of emotion and finesse. This band truly believes in the naive notion that music can change our attitudes and somehow provide spiritual base for growth. Their concert proved that commitment resoundingly.

I remember watching the Police earlier this year and wondering why this band had lost some of the edge and fire from the Ghost in the Machine tour. Over a years time this band had suddenly become Sting's band. Although still quite good I regretfully watched the predictable guitar work of Andy Summers knowing that his capabilities live were much more than the humdrum of album tracks. The release of Summer's-Fripp Bewitched confirms that Summers was definitely holding back on the Synchronicity tour. A much tighter collaboration than their first, Bewitched features the rhythm of the technocrat Robert Fripp melted to the lyrical synthesizer of Summers. Not a rock LP, Bewitched is closer to classical guitar in its reflections.

A must for serious guitar students!

The No. 1 band from last year in my book was U2. If anyone caught that show in the pouring rain at Chapel Hill last year I know they won't forget it. U2 attacks their audience, daring it to participate without apparent pretensions of faith and belief other than the release that music with power can generate. The Unforgettable Fire does not jump out of the grooves like War; the fire is more restrained, an undertow hidden by layers and texture which producer Brian Eno loves to create. 'A Sort of Homecoming' bubbles with faith and hope and is richer in breadth than anything on War. The single Pride is closer to War in its straight ahead military precision; a fitting dedication to Martin Luther King as U2 relates their American experience. Kudos to this band for continuing to grow and experiment in sound. It may be too early to call this effort better than its previous ones but the bottom line is this band continues to grow and challenge their audience to ride with them. Better take the ride.

Speaking of commitment--advance word is that Prince will play Greensboro, possibly late this year. We all know how mesmerizing Purple Rain is and how talented Little Richard is. The obvious mystery and sexual androgyny that Prince cloaks himself in has certainly helped his career. I'm still waiting to see what, if anything, this guy believes in. I mean if you were lost somewhere in some decadent alley and Prince suddenly appeared, would you be relieved or frightened? In concert when Prince rides the elevator, disrobes, and climbs into bed what will you do?

Psi Chi Activities

Detailed

Psi Chi, National Honor Society in Psychology, has a chapter here on campus. Nationally founded in 1929, our primary purpose is to "encourage, stimulate and maintain scholarship in, and advance the science of psychology."

Locally, our activities include a Bake Sale each semester, the latest which took place September 26, a reception for graduating psychology majors and their families at commencement; as well as other fund raisers and such activities as guest speakers and a Spring Invitational Banquet. Other projects that are being planned this year are a service award for a graduating Psi Chi member for service to this chapter and a plaque for recognition of outstanding students doing research in Psychology, to be placed in the psychology office.

Membership in Psi Chi is open to all psychology majors with a minimum overall Grade Point Average of 3.0 and a minimum psychology GPA of 3.2. Each applicant must have at least 12 semester hours in psychology, or completion of 9 hours and enrollment in 3 hours.

All interested students are encouraged to attend our next meeting-check the Psi Chi bulletin board outside the Psychology office for date and time.

For those students who have a general interest in psychology (majors or nonmajors), the Psychology Club is being reformed. This is a social club that will hold fund raising activities and social events. The first meeting will be Wednesday, October 24, anytime between 6:30 p.m. and 8:30 p.m. in Room 111 in the Social Behavioral Building. Refreshments will be served. So come and join the Psychology Club.

Residence Life Conference Swaps Ideas

The South Atlantic Association of College and University Residence Halls held its annual conference on October 12-15 in Raleigh, North Carolina. Representing UNCW were Troy Richards, Joel Henry, Fran Dixon, Steve Hill, June Nowell, Allan Daniel, Dave Balas, and Susan Smith. Gail Young, Coordinator of Residence Life, also attended the conference.

The Conference included a variety of programs, round table discussions, and social events. Troy Richards, Resident Director of Dorm '79, presented a program entitled, "Msaishutne; the raging social disease," which dealt with enthusiasm in the residence hall. A major benefit of the conference was the opportunity to meet Resident Assistants and student leaders from other colleges and universities. Exchanging ideas and swapping school paraphernalia occurred throughout the three day conference.

All of us who attended the conference felt we learned a great deal and brought back ideas of ways to enhance our Residence Life program.

Future plans include attending the North Carolina Conference and sending a delegate to the executive meeting which will be held in Alabama.

Twenty-three sophomores at The University of North Carolina a Wilmington were inducted into Phi Eta Sigma National Honor Society Saturday, October 6, in ceremonies at the board room of Alderman Hall on the UNCW campus. Dr. Youary Sayad, associate professor of chemistry, was inducted as an honorary member.

Responsibility

Everyone has an idea of what the ideal buddy, or friend, would be like. But it actually boils down to just one thing — taking responsibility for each other. That's real friendship. Please think about it the next time you and your friends are in a drinking situation. Even when you are having a good time, you have the obligation to be responsible for your own behavior, so that you don't endanger or embarrass others. And you have the responsibility to look out for your friends.

It means not getting behind the wheel when you've had too much to drink. Instead, call a friend for assistance in getting home. And it means not letting your friends drive when they've had too much of a good time.

During the next few weeks, Anheuser-Busch will be introducing a new program on your campus called the Buddy System.

We will be talking about using the telephone when you are faced with a potential drunk driving situation. Rugby
Piles Up Wins

Places Well
in Invitationals

UNCW lost a close battle to NC State earlier this season.

The less-than-year-old UNCW rugby club has been competing this semester since September 8. After five outings, UNCW has yet to taste defeat.

Most recently, the rugby club participated in two exhibition matches held in Raleigh. The Seahawks dominated NC State's "B" team 28-8 and Campbell College 13-0. A fierce rivalry is developing between UNCW and Campbell, with current standings at two wins apiece since the series began last semester. Two subsequent matches this fall could make the difference.

Rugby is played in the fall and spring. It originated in 1823, when, during a soccer game, a frustrated player picked the ball up and carried it across the goal line. The object of the game is to cross your opponents goal, the same as in football.

But the means are radically different. No protective gear is worn and only a player with the ball can be tackled. Fitness is crucial, the game never stops as in football and each team must quickly change from offense to defense. A five minute halftime splits the 40 minute halves.

Rugby, because of its multiple setups and passing, is the ultimate team sport. But there is something else about rugby that deserves a lot of attention. Even though it seems like an excessively violent game, it's not. It's marked by a high level of competitiveness that is unequalled by any American sport. And what makes it truly unique is the sense of fair play and comradery shared by the players.

For this reason, every team consists of playing, as well as social members. UNCW is no exception and invites all men and women to contact Scott or Ed at 256-5161 for information. No experience is required, just a desire to have a good time. Practices are at 4:15 Tuesdays and Thursdays and games are played on Saturdays. Beginning in November UNCW will host a stretch of about five home games. Come out and join the fun!

The UNCW cross country teams survived hot, humid weather and rough terrain to earn respectable places in two meets held over fall break.

The first, the State Championships contested in Raleigh, included all four ACC teams (UNC only sent its "B" team) and was run over steep hills that proved to be a hindrance to the UNCW runners.

"We only have flat lands to train on," explained sophomore Chuck Luey, who struggled to 110th out of 129 in the men's race. George Walker, a senior, made the All-State team (top 25) with a 15th place finish.

"It was an incredibly tight pack," he said, adding that third place was a scant 30 seconds ahead. "I ran much too conservatively. A month or two of hill work might have made the difference."

T. Lankford crossed the line in 55th and was followed by Layne Fuller, Ken McCraw, Frank Frenduto and Ric Olsen, who all placed in the 90's as UNCW finished 11th in the 16 team field. NC State won the team competition and Mike Palmer of Wake Forest captured the individual title.

NC State also captured the women's title on the same rugged course.

"Once, I went up a long hill and God, it felt like I would never reach the top," said the Seahawks top finisher, Brenda Walker.

Walker finished 43rd, and was followed closely by Frances O'Connell, Caroline Brady, Mary Edwards, Leah Ashley and Pat Smith. Freshman Sheila Viola missed the meet due to injury.

On Saturday, the Seahawks travelled to Charleston, SC, hoping for fast times on a flat course. But, as the 80 runners lined up at Charlestown Landing Gardens for the start, the humidity from the morning fog and a glaring sun (87 degrees) made running conditions strenuous.

cross-country meet, met with trouble 400 yards from the finish.

"I got lost," he remembers. "It didn't dawn on me that I had taken a wrong turn until I saw runners who had been behind coming out of the woods in front."

The women ran their best meet of the year, upsetting arch-rival Campbell. Brenda Walker placed third, followed by Caroline Brady, Frances O'Connell, Leah Ashley, Mary Edwards and Pat Smith.

The Seahawks won plenty of awards, ranging from running shoes to watches.

The next meet is the ECAC championships at Richmond.

George Walker, running alone in second, passed three miles in a pleasing 14:46. "At that point," he said, "the heat started to weaken me. I caught a cramp at four miles and just tried to hold on."

But Glenn Gorton of Baptist chased him down in the last 200 yards to go and left Walker in third (31:47 6.2 miles). Al Dunn of team champion Baptist captured the title in 30:48.

T. Lankford placed well in 12th, and freshman Ken McCraw surged to 25th. Layne Fuller, Ric Olsen, Frank Frenduto and Chuck Luey all placed in the upper half. Jimmy Lee, running his first ever

Cadets Experience Campus Warfare

Jack Fryar
Staff Writer

The patrol moved almost silently through the sparse foliage. All eyes were on the lookout for "enemy" activity. Suddenly Mike LeBard found it, as two "Aggressors" leaped up from a foxhole, one of them hurling a knife found its mark, but not before LeBard has "neutralized" its owner and his companion.

The cadet wasn't at war, or on some secret mission in some foreign land. He was in the wooded area known as the "battleground" on the UNCW campus, and he was a member of a group of Army ROTC cadets known as the Raider Detachment.

The twenty member group is made up of cadets from UNCW's Army ROTC detachment, as well as several JROTC students from New Hanover High School, who are interested in learning more in the area of tactics and leadership than is normally offered in their Army ROTC classes.

Led by Cadet Captain Scott Toussaint, the Raiders spend each Thursday evening clad in black berets and jungle fatigues training in patrol techniques, waterborne operations, compass, combatives, and leadership.

"Our guys are the guys in the detachment who want to do more than just the normal ROTC curriculum", Toussaint says. "The type of cadet in Raiders is one who's motivated, hard working, military career minded, and has high personal goals".

According to Toussaint, the purpose of the Raider Detachment is to facilitate the building of confident, aggressive, and positive leadership in those who'll one day be leaders of units in the Army, National Guard, and Army Reserves upon their commissioning. To accomplish this, the cadets are put into training situations designed to test their knowledge of and response to combat operations and similarly stressful events.

The group makes use of the Army's "Ranger Handbook" to serve as a reference for their training. "It's almost like our Bible" says one cadet. In addition training manuals used by the Army's Special Forces, and outside instruction supplement the Raider's curriculum. According to Toussaint, one very valuable source of training comes from the cadre members of the Seahawk Army ROTC program.

"We've got a great pool of knowledge right here in the ROTC department," Toussaint says. "Our faculty advisor, MGS Kohlman, served three tours in Vietnam. Captain Fitzpatrick and Major Felt also lend first hand experience to the principles we're studying. They're also very supportive of us. That's a real big help."

One of the things Toussaint stresses is positive leadership among the Raiders. "We want to teach our people to lead in a positive manner. That means leading by example, working as a team, being supportive of each other, and not being negative," he says.

"For instance", Toussaint went on "if, as a squad leader, one of my cadets makes a mistake on a field exercise, I don't call him names or insult his intelligence. I tell him how he goofed, why what he did was wrong, and show him how to achieve the goal properly. By the same token if he does something right, I let him know he's doing a good job. That's how you develop initiative. That's positive leadership."

And that, according to Raider Detachment commander Scott Toussaint, is what Raiders is all about.

According to him, the goats are anesthetized before being wounded and the operations are performed in rooms much like operating rooms in a hospital. Department of defense regulations are followed regarding the use of animals and only appropriate government personnel are allowed in the operating area, Steelman said. Personnel overseeing the operations include a medical officer, a veterinary officer, medical instructors, and students.

A Department of Defense statement says that this type of research is necessary to train physicians in the treatment of wounds which may be sustained by new weaponry--"to prevent unnecessary deaths and incapacitation of combat casualties."

According to Dr. Isen, the NCNA has statements from physicians which favor non-animal alternatives in bullet wound experiments. She also stated that the British Academy of Science has sent a letter to Congress stating that it does not consider wound laboratories or ballistics testing on animals necessary.

Calling it "pointless research", Dr. Isen said several institutions continued their projects because, "they have to research something to remain in operation."

She went on to warn people in the Wilmington area who look for homes for stray animals to investigate the would-be owners before giving up the animals. Particularly, she warned people to beware of "animal dealers" who take free or inexpensive animals, then later sell them to research facilities.

The NCNA is presently collecting signatures to place a referendum before North Carolina citizens:

1. to stop pound seizures, when animals are taken from the pounds and used for research in such places in this state as Burroughs-Wellcome, and the Research Triangle.

2. to sponsor low-cost spay/neuter clinics in North Carolina.

Dr. Isen encouraged anyone wishing more information on the local organization of NCNA to contact her at school or at home.

In the business department, a normal rate of absences occurred, but some students mailed in their papers due on Thursday and Friday. Many of the professors in this department would like to see the break extended to its usual week, but Mrs. Rebecca Sawyer feels that students have just started back to school after the summer and the shortened break is fine. Mrs. Linda Wendal, business professor and a member of next year's calendar committee, would like to see fall and Thanksgiving break put together.

The political science department reported generally normal attendance, as did the nursing department in both first and second year classes. Mrs. Otto of the nursing department felt that high attendance was probably the result of the concentrated program in that field and "very responsible students."

The shortening of fall break did have an affect on attendance on Thursday and Friday, October 18th and 19th, but they were not the only days that felt the effect.

The Friday before fall break was considerably desolate as students began trips and started their shortened breaks early. In the history department, two professors said absences were greater than Friday than the following Thursday and Friday. In one foreign language class, only ten out of a possible twenty-two attended that Friday.

The three day fall break resulted in many absences and even a few cancelled classes as students and faculty alike tried to adjust. Only time will tell whether this three day break becomes a University standard, or if the now-missed week long break returns.

Student Conduct Concerns Neighboring Residents

James Lee
Associate Editor

The UNCW administration has had much to smile about recently, in terms of university growth. The school proudly boasts the most rapidly expanding campus in the 16 member UNC system. However, many residents living in neighborhoods surrounding UNCW don't share in the university's elation.

The greatest growing pain the campus is inflicting on its neighbors is traffic. The Department of Transportation, in a recent traffic count, estimated 4000 cars per day travel down College Acres Drive. The maximum load for a neighborhood street is 1250 cars a day, according to the DOT.

When the Campus Edge condominium project is completed, the 600 units will boost the traffic load on College Acres Drive another 6000 cars per day, the DOT estimates. This will bring the daily automobile traffic of this residential area to a mammoth 10000 cars a day.

Traffic is not the only complaint residents have. People living near Campus Edge report boisterous conduct as late as 2 to 4 a.m. some nights. Vandalism and break-ins are also increasing.

According to area residents, there is a general disregard for private property. Wess French is a homeowner who has joined in a neighborhood task force that is confronting these problems.

"We have put our life savings into our homes. We don't have anything else but this property. We don't have anything against college students; we were all college students, but they have not developed this respect for the property rights of others," he said.

According to French, one 19 year resident of College Acres has reported 7 break-ins since Campus Edge was completed in August. A widow, who lives alone, notified the city police who instructed her to call the Sheriff's office. They informed her to post No Trespassing signs and ask for the often late night intruders' names. There have been other complaints of litter and a general disregard of private property.

French feels strongly that it is the responsibility of the owner or manager of Campus Edge to see that student conduct conforms to "standards of decency."

Better law enforcement in the area is cited as one possible solution, but despite the neighborhood's complaints, it has failed to materialize.

University officials are aware of the problem and have met to discuss possible solutions. So far, no tangible answers have surfaced.

Dr. William Bryan, Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs, met with Police Chief; Joe Johnson, Dean of Students; Richard Mullendore, Director of Development Office; Tyrone Rowell, SGA President; Eric Squires, and Seahawk Editor; George Walker, to discuss the problems presented by campus expansion and growth. Examples of these growing pains are the Campus Edge conflict between students, residents and complaints of area neighbors from the Chi Phi House on Wrightsville Avenue.

Abbie Hoffman, this country's most acclaimed dissident of the 60's, will speak at Kenan Auditorium, Thursday, Nov. 8, at 8 p.m.

Fellow Students:

We, Phi Beta Lambda, would like to take this opportunity to thank you for participating once again in our book sale and also to apologize for the extensive time that the Student Government Association took in disbursing our book sale money.

Once again, the SGA have disappointed us in their attempt to disburse our book sale money. In the past, they have taken their time, but this year was ridiculous. Due to their lack of cooperation and their ever-changing policies, which are arbitrarily without proper and sufficient notice, they have taken a month to process and disburse!

Unfortunately, we are the only club on campus requiring SGA cooperation in this area and since they are aware of this, it would seem that they would give us their support. Because of this situation and other similar reasons, we are entertaining the idea of leaving the SGA.

For those students who sold books through our club, we apologize and hope you understand our past dilemma. We hope you will continue to participate in our book sale as we work to correcting this present situation.

And to you, SGA, let's get it together! This is a university, not a Mickey Mouse Club.

Editor,

I have been attending the University of North Carolina at Wilmington for two months. One thing has come to my attention. We have no track. This is an issue, I feel, that is often overlooked and ignored by our athletic department. I have been told that a track is in the planning stages. From those I have talked to, this planning stage seems to accomplish nothing but discussion. I have developed an attitude that our athletic department is all talk and no action. A track would not only aid a non-existent track team, but would be of great use to the students and general public.

Every day, students can be seen jogging down Riegall Road dodging traffic. A track would be a welcome sight for a jogger. Events ranging from Master track meets to the Special Olympics could make use of it.

I also noticed in my registration handbook that the P.E. department has a class in track and field. How can you teach such a course without the proper facilities? As a member of the cross country team, I have found it difficult doing workouts day after day, running around the soccer field. It's time for our athletic department to face the issue. We need a track at UNCW and we want it now.

Stillpoint

By Bob Haywood,

One characteristic of persons leading positive lives is that they dare to dream dreams. They are visionaries, people who look into their future and create images of how their life ought to be, or even, how the world might be if things were as they should. Such visions and dreams serve two significant functions in our lives. They help us break out of our "small town" kind of thinking that creates so many boundaries for our feelings, our thinking and our behavior. They also are sometimes able to motivate us to risk breaking out of our small worlds to try something new.

I am intrigued by our explorations into space. Every time the space shuttle takes off, I am reminded of an image and a resulting vision that comes from the early days our reaching into the unknown regions of space. The first time I ever saw a picture of the earth taken from space, my life was altered. I felt a sense of awe as I looked at our blue planet, standing in bold relief against the black backdrop of space. I was struck full in the face with the awareness of what a miraculous and integrated life support system that it is. Further, to see earth from space is to realize how totally interconnected and interdependent we are on this tiny, delicate biosphere suspended as a jewel in space.

From space there are no human boundaries evident, only the natural boundaries between earth and sea, and those sometimes obscured by clouds. Our minds and our lives have become too bounded by the human invented lines of nation-states. We have created a world that focuses on our separateness, on us versus them. From space it is abundantly clear that there is only "us". As Archibald McLeash said, in reflecting on the same picture, we are all "riders on the earth together, brothers in the eternal cold."

I believe that our future on this "tiny" raft in space is dependent upon our rediscovery of our interdependence. Our welfare and our fate, even as participants in such a small entity as UNCW, is inexorably linked to the welfare and fate of people all across this globe. We need to understand that and believe that and accept that.

Yet another news piece has seared into my consciousness. On an evening news broadcast it was reported that in one tribe in Africa where starvation is the norm, just this past week a group of older persons in that tribe committed mass suicide in order that the limited food available could be saved for the young. Those are our brothers and sisters who live on the same globe as we who struggle daily with overweight.

The politics and economics of our geo-political world sometimes bring me to my knees in frustration, but I believe we must hold on to the vision of our inter-relatedness. We need to find ways to actualize the reality of being global citizens. Even if we can not affect immediate change to prevent such tragedies, we at least have the freedom and can hang on to the vision of being "riders on the earth together", so as to mourn the tragic loss of such lives, dream of a better world and perhaps to seek ways, with all our limitations, to work for it.

By Stephanie Loftus

The parking sticker price went up this year, and I'm stuck with less places to park!

The freshman class is one of the largest ever, and all 1500 or so of them must have brought their cars, because if you come back to the dorms after 9:30 at night (unless of course, it's Ladies' Night at the Monk) you have to park at the end of the apartments' parking lot. That's practically next door to the Behavioral Sciences building.

But they're not the only causes of this problem.

The construction workers building the new Student Support Center were allotted 20 or so of the spaces designated for on-campus student parking--the ones nearest the campus of course--in addition to tearing up an existing lot. It seems like they're paid to create a lot of dust and dirt, to stare at all the girls, and to take up space. But they are building the center.

The faculty, also, are granted special privileges as employees of the university. I'm sure you've seen the signs that say "Faculty and Staff Enforced 24 Hours a Day"---now what professor is going to park in the Kenan Auditorium parking lot at 3:30 am??! (Or, for that matter, what student will?!) But those spaces would come in quite handy near the library during exam time.

But have you been nosy like me and noticed that there's a new parking lot behind the Behavioral Sciences building?

At first I was overjoyed. The sight of a vacant space sends me and my Bug into a state of blissful euphoria. (I jump up and down and clap my hands. Inside a VW. Try it sometime!)

But alas! All the lines were yellow!!!! Boo!Hiss!!!

It seems like you have to be paid by the university in order to get any goodies.

I hate to break it to the administration, but without students, UNCWilmington becomes UNCWorthless. Who are you going to administer?

However, I DID hear that they have big plans for a shuttle bus system to cart us around--you know, like the ones they have at Chapel Hill and State. (Not bad for a school with half a library, huh?) But until then, (like 1987 or so) everyone is going to have to keep cruising the parking lots.

And the gas prices are going up.

Happy Motoring!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!

ROTC Recognizes Cadet Phoebe Jeter

Jack Fryar
Staff Writer

In a move to recognize outstanding cadets from its ranks, the Army ROTC detachment at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington has begun a "Cadet of the Month" program. The first winner of this award is MSIII cadet Phoebe Jeter.

A native of Sharon, S.C., Jeter is a junior transfer student majoring in geology. The daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Carlson Jeter, Phoebe comes from a family of eight, including three sisters and two brothers.

Jeter previously attended Baptist College of Charleston before transferring to UNCW for the Fall '84 semester. A 1982 graduate of Chester Senior High School in Chester, S.C., Phoebe enjoys reading, cooking, and working with school organizations such as the UNCW Gospel Choir, and the Black Student Union. She is also a member of the Zeta Phi Beta Sorority, Inc. of Charleston.

Phoebe Jeter hopes to work with the Army's Corp of Engineers upon commissioning, and may go for her Masters Degree in geology as well.

The "Cadet of the Month" is selected based upon criteria including a nominee's leadership qualities, physical fitness, motivation, and proficiency in the Army ROTC programs offered at UNCW.

Announcements

The Chi Phi Fraternity would like to wish all students a successful academic school year.

We are proud to announce the completion of our new chapter house. The dwelling houses 14 brothers, and is well suited for our needs. The house, located at 5004 Wrightsville Avenue, has many useful assets. We would like to thank all those who came to our open party. Look forward to socializing with our fraternity throughout the semester.

We would like to congratulate our newly elected officers for this school year. They are: Ron Kelley-President, Joe Barker-Treasurer, Scott Taggart-Secretary, Bert Fussel-Sgt of Arms, and Joe Keffer-Historian.

Appointments with recruiters should be made in the Career Planning and Placement Center, 106 University Union. Sign-up sheets for recruiting interviews are available beginning Monday mornings, three weeks in advance of the scheduled interview. ## Recreation Majors at Work

Leisa Brown

Half the semester is complete and what a semester it has been, especially for the UNCW Recreation Majors' Association. In the first half of the semester they have been working hard on a number of projects.

For six weeks they were busy selling World's Famous Chocolate candy bars with almonds, to raise money in order to help with costly projects.

On Nov. 11, 12, and 13, for example, the recreation majors will load up on a chartered bus headed for the NC Recreation and Park Society Annual Conference, which this year is held in Greensboro. The recreation majors will be hosting a session at the conference dealing with poolside games. They will also be hosting the "Opportunities Job Mart." The job mart provides an opportunity for seniors to get job interviews, and prospects for a good job once they graduate. They have worked hard on correlating letters to public, private, and commercial recreation agencies to set up interviews at the conference.

On October 28, the recreation majors hosted a party at the Patio. Recreation majors and non-majors alike showed up for an evening of socializing with friends, playing pool, throwing darts, and playing video games. Admission was $2.50 with all the free beverage you could drink.

On October 20-23, the recreation majors helped send Marjorie Fredrick, as a student representative, to the National Recreation and Park Association Congress in Orlando, Florida.

On September 19, they set up a booth at the Club Fair sponsored by the student Government Association. For the Club Fair, members baked goodies for a bake sale and raised $36.00. At the booth they displayed awards which they were honored with for having 64 students, which was the highest membership in the North Carolina Recreation and Park Society. Also displayed were scrapbooks filled with memories of semesters past.

The UNCW Recreation Majors' Association has started the year off right. They have worked hard and their accomplishments show it. They look forward to another successful year!

Are you having difficulty deciphering the error messages given you by VAX? Trying to find the correct code to get that program running? Well, at the present time, the only set of VAX MANUALS resides in the office of Academic Computing Services (S222). Sets of manuals have been ordered for distribution in H117, S221, and B215. Until they arrive, anyone may use the manuals in ACS.

Who would possibly work on a computer terminal at 8:00 a.m. on Saturday or Friday night at 10:00 p.m. or Sunday at 10:00 a.m.? Student consultants report considerable activity on terminals at virtually all open hours in the public terminal cluster rooms.

For user convenience, each of the public terminal clusters is open for 112 hours during the week. The schedule is simple: The clusters open at 8:00 a.m. each day of the week and close at 12:00 midnight. The only exceptions to this schedule are weekly Friday backups, holidays and breaks. With this timetable, the clusters will have an average of more than 380 terminal hours per day. When TUCC was our primary source of computing services and due to limited equipment and personnel, we had approximately 560 hours per week of computer time. The availability of computing time is clearly evident when one realizes that the VAX and D-II computers can be accessed 24 hours a day if one has a compatible home computer and modem.

Baud, the rate of change of transmission signal per second, originated with the 19th century French inventor J.M.E. Baudot. The PDP and VAX can both be entered by 300 and 1200 baud lines. To use a 300 baud line, your modem (semi-acronym of modulation/demodulation) should be Bell 103 compatible; 1200 baud requires a Bell 212A compatible modem. The low speed modem link can be accessed by dialing 395-3700 from off campus and ext. 3700 on campus. Similarly, the 1200 link is 395-3757 or ext. 3757. More information about MICRO-VAX compatibility will be forthcoming.

Places in the Heart

Joan Travis
Staff Writer

First, her husband is killed; next, she must figure out how to come up with the money needed to keep her house, then tornadoes strike and blow everything away, and finally she has to find a way to get a huge amount of cotton picked in no time at all. And you thought you had problems! These are just a few of the trials to be overcome in Robert Benton's newest film, Places in the Heart. If nothing else, it certainly is an incentive for women to make sure that they can function independently; should anything happen to their husband.

In a very highly publicized role, Sally Field plays the lead character. She appears in just about every scene and does a fine job. Managing to maintain a very hurt and naive look most of the time, she makes the transaction to brave and independent as smoothly as possible. As good as she is, though, I couldn't help wondering if this wasn't just Norma Rae moved to the mid-west. I want to see Sally Field play a terrorist, a drug addict, or a child molester --- she could certainly do it as she's proven in the past. But for now, fans of Field can watch her do work in another fine performance.

Several small, undeveloped subplots exist in the film as well. A wandering black man named Moses comes onto the scene to aid Field's character, suggesting she make money by planting cotton. He becomes a very endearing presence, and serves as the means for presenting racial attitudes of the times. Another important character is the blind man who becomes a boarder at Field's house---his physical limitations seem to present a contrast with Field's emotional limitations. He could become a romantic interest, but that too is undeveloped. A final subplot belongs to Field's sister. Her husband cheats on her;

she kicks him out; she takes him back. The theme of forgiveness is important throughout the film, and this is probably another example of that.

Robert Benton has created a film with a lot of religious overtones. His skill with making socially important movies has been seen before in Kramer vs. Kramer and "Norma Rae". Nestor Almendros, Oscar winner for his cinematography in "Days of Heaven," is at the helm here, and the excellent look of the film indicates his talent. In fact, Benton has worked very successfully with both Field and Almendros in the past, and it would seem that this team effort might have produced a really great film. Instead, it produced a good film, with very strong lead character who would prove even more interesting if more had happened with the other characters in the movie. Now showing at Cleander Cinema.

The Creek

is Rising

Although reviewers, critics, and countless others are referring to Sugarcreek as an "overnight" success the band's roots actually date back to 1971. Over these thirteen years the group has performed nearly 3000 engagements--an average of 230 nights a year! However, until the release of their first LP "Live At The Roxy" in July of '81 Sugarcreek had been virtually unknown outside their home turf of the Carolinas, Virginia, Georgia and eastern Tennessee. The Roxy album exposed the act to the rest of the southeast with the single "Speed Limit" being well received by AOR and campus radio. Their second album, "Fortune" containing ten original compositions was released late in the summer of '82 immediately catching national attention, including a Mainstage slot on the famed National Association for Campus Activities (NACA) National Convention in Baltimore in February of '83. The single "Suzie", a ballad with exceptionally strong vocal harmonies and catchy lyrics, was programmed on 200 plus Top 40 and CHR radio stations. Videos of the commercial rockers' "Soothsayer" and "Everybody Knows" showcased their high energy and personality plus show on numerous PBS, commercial and pay TV stations. "What A Night", their next single, was released in August of '83 and it too received national attention including a review on American Bandstand's "Rate A Record" in December plus chart action in several states as far west as California.

All along the band continued to build perhaps one of the strongest grassroots fan and friend bases. Their shows are not short of "the best" with most people comparing The Creek to recording artists of superstar status. By early summer of '84 the group was putting the finishing touches on their third album with twelve original tunes, "Rock The Night Away" and finalizing a record deal with Ripete Records, a viable independent with national distribution ties. "Rock The Night Away" hit the streets in mid-July and proves to be the group's strongest entry to date. Billboard recommended the title cut single "Rock The Night Away" "as a record with potential for significant chart action" in their August 4, 1984 edition.

Success is happening for this sextet daily. More radio stations are adding Sugarcreek cuts to their playlists, "Rock The Night Away" is selling at a brisk pace showing up on many retail Top 20 sales charts, record chart action is potentially around the corner, a video is underway for submission to MTV and other video shows, the group continues to draw capacity crowds in the southeast with a show that carries you away from the moment they hit the stage, and promoters in other areas of the country are taking note particularly those who can expose Sugarcreek to new markets and utilize Sugarcreek's state-of-the-art production. The future is very bright. "The Creek is rising!"

The Razor's Edge

Claire Fitzpatrick
Staff Writer

Somerset Maugham's story of an American veteran of the Great War who seeks peace in spiritual enlightenment beyond the conventional types, would seem in the past a perfect satirical plot for a clownish Bill Murray to display his usual antics. Murray takes a revolutionary approach to this scene, however, and attempts a serious portrayal of the role played by Tyrone Powers in the 1946 adaption.

Surprisingly, the typecast comedian handles the role with ease, convincingly presenting the sensuality and emotional distress called for in the script he and director John Byrum wrote. He does give periods of familiar mischeviousness, though, that serves as a reminder of who we're dealing with. Catherine Hicks, cast as Murray's ex-fiancee, is a crisp addition to the tale. Appearing sharp yet vulnerable, she has married a rich friend of his but attempts to win Murray back when he arrives in Paris after his Indian retreat.

James Keach, Threasa Russel, Denholm Elliot and the rest of the supporting cast also fare nicely; making for a beautifully acted, though somewhat slow paced, story. The Razor's Edge rated PG-13, is now showing at Cinema 6 on Oleander Drive.

Students Pick Cyanide Over Nukes

Courtesy/College Press Service

Attempts by students at Brown University and more recently at the University of Colorado to stock cyanide pills for use after a nuclear war may be doing the fading campus freeze movement more harm than good, some activists warn.

Last week—in the largest student vote turnout in six years—Brown students voted 1044 to 687 in favor of a measure asking college officials "to stockpile suicide pills for optional student use exclusively in the event of a nuclear war."

At the same time, Colorado student leaders voted to hold a similar referendum on that campus in late October.

Officials at both schools point out that the student referenda are not binding and steadfastly refuse to consider stocking the lethal pills.

One Brown administrator declared the referendum would be enforced "over my dead body."

The students, of course, admit they're after headlines as much as they are an easy out from doomsday.

"Our motivation is purely educational," says CU student Kyra Grossman, co-director of Students for a Sane Nuclear Policy, the group which drafted the student referendum.

"Even if people say, 'This must be a joke,' then at least they're talking about (nuclear war), and that's what we're trying to accomplish," she adds.

Brown students, too, were trying to convey "the feeling of fear" of nuclear war, says Jason Salzman, a junior who originally got 700 students to sign a petition calling for the suicide pills.

"There's been a tremendous increase in discussions on disarmament," Salzman says.

"People have been able to personalize the issue by thinking about their options."

But thinking about suicide could foster a defeatist attitude and actually drive students away from the campus freeze movement, warns Sanford Gottlieb, executive director of United Campuses to Prevent Nuclear War (UCAM).

"I think (stockpiling suicide pills) is a very poor idea because it doesn't offer hope," Gottlieb says.

Instead, he argues, students should work to educate each other about the horrors of a nuclear confrontation and "discuss solutions to the arms buildup."

While the Brown student "were sincere in wanting to raise consciousness" of the imminent dangers of nuclear war, he says, "they miscalculated what effect it would have: It makes people feel more hopeless."

"But nuclear war is suicide," counters Brown's Salzman. "If I'm not dead, I want to be able to kill myself. Life after nuclear war is a fate less than death."

Cocaine-The Drug of the 80's

Courtesy/College Press Service

The teenage cocaine experimenter of the seventies has taken his cocaine habit to college, experts say, and he may be in trouble.

Cocaine—once labeled the drug of the rich—is now becoming so popular on campuses around the country that researchers call its rapid growth the nation's number-one substance abuse problem.

"Obviously, cocaine use is growing on campuses," says Dr. Ronald Linder, UCLA health science professor. "And the problem is getting worse."

"There didn't used to be any problems with coke. Now there are lots," concurs Dr. John Jones, University of California-Davis senior student health physician. "Use has increased in the last two or three years for sure."

About 25 million people have tried coke, the annual U.S. Government Survey on Drug Abuse reports. Five-to-six million use it monthly, while one-to-three million are severely dependent on the drug.

Just how many of them are on campus is hard to tell.

Though few studies are done on college cocaine abuse, Jones believes the influx of cocaine abuse patients at his off-campus clinic probably reflects an increase among college-age abusers similar to the national averages.

"Four years ago, there were none (cocaine abusers). Now 12 to 13 percent of our patients have cocaine problems," he reveals.

And a 15-year analysis of cocaine use at Arizona State University by ASU Professor Thomas Dezelsky shows the number of students who have tried cocaine once has rocketed from three percent in 1970 to forty four percent in 1984.

Coke's new popularity may stem from recent college-bound high school graduates, claims Dr. Lloyd Johnston, University of Michigan researcher.

Johnston's yearly surveys of high school seniors chart a rapid rise in coke use among college bound seniors from 1976 to 1981.

"Colleges may be reaping the casualties of this period of increased incidence," Johnston says. "There's a lag time between when people become involved in coke and when they get in trouble and wind up in a clinic. Follow-up studies show coke use continues to rise after high school."

"It's a recreational drug," says UC-Davis' Jones. "There's a casual attitude about it. Students use it to study instead of amphetamines."

Once thought harmless, cocaine is a strong reinforcing agent, drawing people to pursue its effects, Jones adds.

Along with its euphoric high, cocaine users experience paranoia and irritability, often feel depressed, socially isolated and unable to deal with stress and pressure.

Physiological effects can include high blood pressure, convulsions, and eye and nasal problems.

At UCLA, coke abuse ranks just behind alcohol and marijuana use, says Bonnie Leibowitz, UCLA health educator.

Tuition Rates to Escalate

Courtesy/College Press Service

By the time the babies born this year get to college, they may have to pay $45,000 to $180,000 for their degrees and face a huge post-graduate debt, according to a recent accounting firm study.

"We've witnessed an increase of more than 330 percent in tuition and required fees over the past 15 years in the public sector alone," says Clark Bernard, chairman of higher education planning for Coopers and Lybrand, which conducted the college costs study for the American Association of State Colleges and Universities (AASCU).

If such rapid tuition increases continue through the turn of the century, as many financial experts expect, "families who have a child this year will probably have to spend $45,000 for a public college education in 18 years," Bernard says.

The cost of sending a child to a private college, moreover, will run from $140,000 to $180,000, the study predicts.

"The implications (of the study) are extremely serious," says Allan Ostar, AASCU president.

"We may well be creating a debtor class of students" by charging so much for tuition that students will spend decades paying back their education loans, he says.

Currently, the cost of attending a public college averages $15,000, Bernard says, while four years at a private institution runs about $37,000.

A recent University of Wisconsin study, Ostar says, shows that today's average college student already has a debt of $8200 upon graduation.

Compounding high tuition rates is the federal student aid programs' shift from giving students money through grants to a greater dependence on loan programs.

Two decades ago, Ostar recounts, about 70 percent of all federal student aid was in the form of grants and other awards. Today, 70 percent of all aid money is in loans which students must repay after graduating.

If tuition rates continue to soar and the balance between grants and loans remains lopsided, he warns, "a student's ability to purchase consumer goods, a car, clothes — just the things it takes to get started in life — will be seriously impaired."

And future college students facing such momentous debts "may well be influenced in what kind of career they go into based on how well it will help them repay their loans, rather than choosing the field they really want to go into."

The teaching field, he notes, could be "drastically" affected by big education debts, as more and more graduates are forced to work in the private sector, where salaries are significantly higher.

Winning Season Hangs in Balance for Polo Team

James Lee
Associate Editor

The UNCW water polo team had to float before they could swim and this year they have been swimming better than in previous years. They currently boast a 9-6 league record, which is the best seasonal performance in the infant team's three year history.

Head coach Marc Ellington claims that his team has more depth and talent than any team he has coached since his arrival three years ago. The fact that UNCW offers its players no scholarships enhances the seasonal success story. They often compete against other league teams with scholarship athletes on their roster.

Last Wednesday the team competed in the final round of the Southern League Tournament hosted by Washington & Lee University in Lexington, Va. There they beat Virginia Commonwealth, 11-7, Lindberg 13-7, and Virginia, 12-6. They lost to Washington & Lee, 12-5, George Washington, 6-2, and Richmond, 12-3. Richmond is currently ranked fourth in the east and 18th nationally.

Leading scorers for the Seahawks were sophomore Art Hall, in his first year with the squad, with 10 goals. Next is team captain Brett Higgins, a junior from High Point, with nine goals and Don Hosier, a New Hanover graduate who had eight goals. The two alternating goalkeepers were Billy Cottam from High Point and Walter Steele from Jacksonville, Florida.

These players lead the team to their 3-3 split in the tournament, the best away tournament record in UNCW history. The league finals will be held this week in Richmond. Coach Ellington said, "we're looking forward to improving on our 7th place finish from two years ago and having a winning record on the season." The Seahawks didn't qualify for the tournament last year (only 8 of 12 do).

The team has only five returning players from last season. Coach Ellington said, "they have improved dramatically since the first day of practice with talented swimming and a willingness to improve their skills and work together as a team."

He said his two most aggressive and consistent players during the season have been senior Jeff Siggins, who leads the team in assists, and junior offensive coordinator Paul Thompson. His best sprint swimmer was senior Chris Moore, who was lost for the season with a broken arm.

Spikers Upgrade Schedule

The UNCW women's volleyball team, off to a 9-13 start after defeating ECU and losing to Coastal Carolina Friday night, now looks to tough invitational to close out the season.

This weekend the Seahawks travel to Williamsburg for a tournament and then wind down the season with a trip to Harrisonburg, Va. for the ECAC South conference Tournament.

Senior co-captain Sara Womble is the leader of the young squad which has only one senior and three juniors on the current roster.

Womble, a native of Sanford, made honorable mention All-NAIA last year and is the team's most effective spiker.

The Seahawks, who come off fine seasons of 21-7 and 25-13 in 1982 and 1983, are now thrust into a tough Division One schedule.

Coach Jackie Bartlett, who is in her fifth season as head coach, is a graduate of UNC-Chapel Hill.

Other than Womble, key players for UNCW are June Benton, the teams "cheerleader", co-captain Stephanie Wall, Sophomore Martha Byrd, and Junior Mollie Odom. Other key participants include Susie Sineath, Kay Baker, Kim Jones, Doreen Nowicki, Karen McFayden, Antonette Foust, and Karen Barrett.

"Tuition will probably increase," says Vice-Chancellor

Steve Hill
Staff Writer

UNCW students may be in for another tuition increase next fall, as a result of the proposed elevation of the University's academic status.

Robert Walton, Acting Vice-Chancellor of Business Affairs, said "tuition will probably go up because of the change from Level Two to Level One. Exactly what the figure will be, we don't know; it's set by the Board of Governors."

The move into Comprehensive University College I would place UNCW on the same academic level as Appalachian State, Wake Forest, and UNC-Charlotte. Walton said that the tuition increase would probably be aimed at putting UNCW on the same tuition level as those schools also.

The current tuition for Appalachian State University is $410 per semester for in-state students and $1484 for out-of-state, compared to the $355 for in-state tuition and $1300 for out-of-state tuition currently paid by UNCW students.

Walton stressed that the proposed elevation of the University's status would effect only tuition. "Student's fees may go up," he said, "there may be new recommendations by the SGA, but we just don't know yet."

Although it will be at least two years before any new graduate programs are offered, Walton said the change from Level II to Level I would theoretically be complete on July 1, 1985. He pointed out that the General Assembly, which meets in the Spring of 1985, still has to approve funds for the proposal. Walton predicted that if there is a tuition increase, it will come in the Fall semester, 1985.

Drinking Programs Fail

Courtesy/College Press Service

Most of the student drinking abuse prevention programs on the nation's campuses aren't working well, a University of Pittsburgh psychology professor contends.

A thorough review of the programs presents "no evidence that anything that has been done works in changing attitudes, knowledge or behavior," asserts Howard Blane, a professor of education and psychology at Pitt.

Blane's criticism of existing campus programs caused a major stir at the recent convention of the American College Health Association in Atlanta. If only because so many campuses have begun abuse prevention programs in recent years.

Almost 80 percent of the nation's colleges now have some kind of program, a Radford University survey recently found.

That represents an increase of some 300 colleges between 1978 and 1982.

Blane, however, questions whether the programs are doing any good. He says they are often directed at the wrong people.

"For every 100 youngsters in college, 70 to 80 percent drink in ways that are not hazardous," he says. "You want to focus on the other 20 to 30 percent. But all college programs focus on the student body as a whole.

LIGHTS OUT!!!

Steve Hill
Staff Writer

Students on campus Tuesday evening celebrated Halloween a night early as the campus electrical system played trick or treat with the lights.

According to Robert McCarn of Carolina Power and Light, the partial failure of the UNCW substation led to a "single phasing" condition. The resulting improper voltage flowing from the station into the campus electrical system caused a partial blackout.

Beginning at 6:30, some areas experienced a total loss of power, while in others the lights were only dimmed. Some areas were unaffected by the initial blackout, that left fully lit rooms on one side of the corridor in Morton Hall, while rooms on the opposite side were dark. In the Student Union, the Snack Bar was plunged into darkness at the height of the dinner rush, but the rest of the Union maintained full power.

Some classes were cancelled, while others continued in the dim light. Teachers also moved their classes from dark rooms to lighted rooms in an attempt to evade the partial blackout. Their efforts were soon frustrated however, as the blackout became campus-wide at 7:00.

The total blackout lasted about 20 minutes, while a CP&L maintenance man switched the system to an alternate feed. Full power was restored before 7:30.

In the Library, the Fire Department was called after smoke was discovered on the second floor. The smoke was attributed to a motor in the air conditioning unit which burned out by the electrical malfunction, and the library remained closed for two hours.

According to the Physical Plant, the substation is now operating normally, but several motors burned out by the malfunction are still being repaired. The library is still without air-conditioning, but all classroom buildings have been restored to full power.

Stillpoint

By Bob Haywood,

It is incredible! The forces of darkness seem to be sweeping across the world like the black cloud from Tolkien's Mount Doom! Father Popieluszko abducted and murdered in Poland, Indira Ghandi assassinated in India, hunger and death in Ethiopia, and we watching the winners of our election standing victorious in the muck and mire of some of the most negative campaigns in our lifetime.

One of the common ways of coping with such a negative scene is denial, blocking out thoughts and concern for these things for fear of being overwhelmed and centering even more time and energy on our own personal well-being and happiness. Caring beyond our own small interpersonal world takes a lot of energy and the time seems pointless and futile. So let's go to the beach or to the bar or both and forget it all!

I would remind you as I remind myself that turning in on ourselves is a sure path to despair, anomie and unhappiness, whether in the turning inward of a person or of a nation. The visual perception that we are individuals who are separate and distinct from other persons is, in part, an illusion. We are more connected to others than we see. If we would allow ourselves to move beyond sight and into perception, we would discover again our interconnectiveness to all. You and I are part of the Family of Mankind and we all live in the same garden named Earth. Our sense of separation and isolation, our need for enemies and superiority is demonic and evil.

We should hurt when we hear of murder and assassination and starvation and the signs of linguistic nationalism emerging in our own nation. Our hope for any long-term sense of well-being and meaning lies in working through despair to active involvement in the battle for life-affirming values and policies wherever it is in the battle-line that we find our niche. We must first insist on claiming a vision of the world as it could be, a world of peace and wholeness. Then we need to see ourselves as persons called as co-creators of such a world. We are not helpless pawns. We are unique and gifted beings with abilities to be discovered, developed and used in some specific place in the battle for life on this garden Earth. So look for your skills and abilities and open yourselves to all of the challenges this world throws at us in its need and pain, for out there is that particular spot where you are wanted and needed. Go for it!

Editorial

The future of man is on fragile ground.

The reason is the massive stockpiles of nuclear weaponry that exist today. Since the timely invention (for the US) of the atomic bomb, a neck and neck race for global supremacy has been fought.

Many of the greatest minds on Earth, instead of attempting breakthroughs in fields such as cancer, are eagerly setting their sights on developing a weapon that will annihilate everyone, everywhere.

The reason for this is fundamentally rooted, really. People are geographically divided into separate, distinct units called countries. We speak different languages, live diverse lifestyles and most importantly, ignore that it is only chance that we are different like we are.

From birth, socialization grips us and we pridefully believe that we are superior. Competing groups have this type of effect. Religious and racial rivalries are prime examples. The lack of individuality ultimately represses human compassion and growth.

While the destructive technology in the last 40 years has reached morbid heights, the emotional control of people is still the same as always. Can anyone say that we will erase conflict and irrational behavior? Of course not. Only now, we have the capabilities to make these in-bred human shortcomings lead us to our downfall.

And that is just the point.

Closing The Gap

Seasquawk®

By Stephanie Loftus

Student Government is experiencing a shortage of resources these days, mainly students.

Recently five elected offices have been vacated by people who resigned saying they didn't have enough time to fulfill their responsibilities and duties.

"And just what are these duties?" you may ask.

To represent and protect the rights of the students at UNCW, as outlined in the SGA constitution. UNCW's Student Government is one of the few in North Carolina which enjoy the extensive privilege of student representation on almost every board and committee running the University. It is a shame that the student body is losing this right due to lack of dedicated people who are willing to work hard for the sake of accomplishing a common goal.

So many SGA elects are involved in other organizations, and it is hard for them to support the Student Government 100%. And there isn't anyone else to take up the slack!

There is a great deal of work on finance, constitutions, research, art, etc., that doesn't get done because of a lack of people who can volunteer some time and expertise.

Well, I've brought this to your attention, student body. What would you suggest to your elected Vice President to help SGA fulfill its purpose???? I'd like to know!

Paul W. Bell
Vice President
UNCW SGA

"Closing The Gap"

In an attempt by the Student Government Association to better inform and address student concerns, the SEAHAWK has granted space to the SGA for a Dear Abby type column. The Student Government will relay information on current events and answer questions the student body may have. Closing The Gap is not intended to handle personal problems, only those that concern the student's interests at UNCW.

Stephanie's crying in Dorm '79 because she never gets any mail! Through her tears she will manage to write next week's column on--(you guessed it) Mail-day Blues. In the meantime, The Seahawk proudly presents Mona Franklin, guest squawker.

Readers: pull up a chair, get a beer out of the 'fridge--or a glass of your best chablis--and let's consider an issue one more time.

Yes, once again, it's the 21-year-old drinking age issue.

The only problem is...it's no longer an issue. It's the law, and pretty soon, every state (including NC) will adopt this law, and that beer or wine you're drinking will no longer be in your 'fridge (if you are under 21, and it's a casualty of life that most college students are).

Most people have heard some of the arguments:

"If I'm old enough to be drafted, I'm old enough to drink." (Maybe you should just go ahead and join the armed forces and get sent overseas--then you can drink).

"Young people are not responsible enough to drink." (Yet we are responsible enough to vote for you, Mr. or Ms. Senator or Representative!)

"Why pick an age arbitrarily as the drinking age...why 21?" (Well, why not? All the officials and Congressional members are over 21, so it works just fine!)

"In states where the drinking age is 21, the number of accidents in the 18-20 year old age group has decreased. (Of course--there were less 18-20 year olds driving to and from bars or their friends' houses where they used to go for drinks. Besides, according to one source, Driver, in cases where the 18-20 year old accident level decreased, the 21-45 year old accident level increased.)

But there are two arguments I've thought of that some people may not have heard.

First argument: a) If people are going to drink and drive, then they are willing to break the law, or at least, they have little respect for the law. b) If these people have little respect for the law, then they will continue to behave in a manner that carries little respect for the law. In other words, even when it's illegal for them to drink, they'll still drink, and of course, they'll have to drive home. c) It seems, then, that only the law-abiding 18-20 year olds will refrain from drinking--those same law-abiding young people who didn't drink and drive when the drinking age was 18 or 19. d) And, inevitably, those law-abiding, young people will be hit or killed by the unlawful young people who will continue to drink and drive. The law, therefore, would be hurting the law-abiding, not the law-breakers!

This argument can also be used on gun control, and shows a narrow-mindedness on the part of the lawmakers.

For, once again, officials thought that by eliminating the antecedent, they can eliminate the unfavorable consequences. Sadly, the results will fall short of their expectations--for it is not the alcohol that injures or kills another human, it is the intoxicated person in the driver's seat!

The other argument is really more of a projection into the future, and goes as follows: a) Recent 19 and 20 year olds that have been drinking will soon have that right taken away. b) If 18-20 year olds abide by the law, they won't even get to begin drinking until they are 21. c) When these groups finally get the chance to drink (or regain the chance), they will probably take full advantage of this new (or regained) privilege. Then we'll probably have a sharp increase in 21-26 year olds involved in drinking and driving accidents--possibly even as many drinking and driving accidents as before, when the drinking age was 19!

I'm not blasting the 21-year-old drinking age law because of a personal desire to consume all the alcoholic beverages I can get my under-21-year-old hands on. Quite frankly, I can do without a drink. Easily. If all alcoholic beverages were eliminated from the face of earth, I wouldn't shed a tear. (Just as long as I can still get some Coca-Cola or Sundrop).

It's just that it is so frustrating and aggravating to have to sit here in Wilmington, NC, and see those Senators, Representatives and Mr. President himself take away a privilege (or should I say, right?) so quickly and easily!

Can't they see we need stricter, stronger enforcement of penalties for drunken driving--not a 21-year-old drinking age.

I mean, let's face it, this 21-year-old drinking age is downright unfair!

We supposedly came to this country to gain our freedom and establish a fair government. It looks like our only choice now will be to sail back to England to find some freedom.

Maybe I'm being overly sentimental.

But what can you expect from a person who just isn't responsible enough to drink...yet.

Bit Bucket

Once upon a time, you were sitting at a computer terminal, grinding away on a lab problem, when all of a sudden, the terminal says "where's the Beef?", or it goes blank, or maybe MTV appears featuring "Twisted Sister". Well admittedly, this is rare, but it does occur and needs to be reported to consultant. It might be a glitch (i.e. unexplained presence of gremlins) or a symptom of a larger problem.

After logging on the VAX, a bulliten board rolls by containing, among other announcements: "Down for SYSTEM BACKUP- Fridays 17:00-21:00".

Computers have transmissions, but not reverse. Ahem, anyway, if you've ever questioned "SYSTEM BACKUP", here's the answer. Computers use many mediums to store information outside the main memory of the computer. These peripheral devices consist of hard disks (about the size of a thick LP phonograph record), floppy disk (generally only used on microcomputers), and reel to reel tape. Our System Backup assists users and operators by placing a copy of important information from hard disks to tape or another disk. It is a very rare occurrence that data is lost or destroyed, but Backup assures us of another copy. Backup also performs disk compression or concatenation, a method of copying data using the smallest possible physical area. All of this is a precautionary measure insuring users that they have what they want when they need it.

Cecilia Miller

The students at UNCW regret the recent death of fellow student Cecilia Miller. Ms. Miller, a 21-year-old junior, was killed in an early morning automobile accident on October 12 near NorthKerr Avenue and Smith Creek.

"Ms Miller was very involved in the UNCW Recreation Majors' Association," said Robert Wolff, Recreation Curriculum Coordinator. She and five other students from the recreation department were chosen to do a tourism study of New Hanover County. Ms. Miller was from Beulaville, N.C.

Yet most students, rightly, don't see themselves as problem drinkers."

Problem drinkers often don't see themselves as problem drinkers, either, and aren't likely to benefit from programs that "say, 'Call the counseling center.' Research shows that students with substance abuse disorders don't use counseling centers very much," Blane adds.

As proof, he points to a federally-funded program at the University of Massachusetts-Amherst.

"Individual reported drinking behavior didn't decrease," he concedes, "but in the dorms, there were changes."

The kinds of refreshments served at dorm parties changed, students confronted drinking students more frequently over disruptive behavior, and traffic at the counseling center increased, he points out.

Trips to China and Tibet offered

"Come join us on our trips to China and Tibet; it's cheap, and you don't need a passport," says the enthusiastic Gerald Shinn, Professor of Philosophy & Religion.

The "trips" are being sponsored by The Museum of World Cultures at UNCW. "Departure time" from the Library Auditorium is 7:30 p.m. on Monday evenings,

November 12 and 19.

"In China", on November 12, you will hear special music, view a film from the People's Republic of China (pre 1977), and hear special speakers. Two faculty members will discuss their (real) trips to China this summer, Grace Burton, Associate Professor of Education, and Carole Fink, Associate Professor of History. Also on the "trip" will be Kathy Walker, Lecturer in Asian Studies from the History Department, who lived in China.

On November 19 "in Tibet," you will again be treated to special music and view another film from the People's Republic of China. John Buesche, Professor of Philosophy and Religion, has lived in Tibet and will be the speaker for this "trip"

Candidates Debate the Issues

Charles Gavins

A forum was sponsored by the Political Science Club on Friday, 2, 1984. The guests were Mr. Prochnow, the gubernatorial candidate of the Libertarian Party, Mr. Schell, Chairman of the New Hanover Republican Party, and Miss Ellen Servetnick, a representative of the Democratic Party.

For about an hour, a small audience questioned the guests about their respective parties' philosophies and issue stances on the tobacco program and the consent decree between the University of North Carolina and Federal Department of Justice.

All the guests were generally supportive of the tobacco program and the consent decree. Mr. Prochnow expressed his opinion that the government had infringed on the rights of ordinary citizens to decide themselves what should be done with these issues and that both Democratic and Republican parties practiced socialism and state control of the individual while advocating capitalism and democracy.

Night of the Shooting Stars

Joan Travis
Staff Writer

"Night of the Shooting Stars" is an Italian film from Paolo and Vittorio Taviani. It's another in the series of foreign films that Cinema 6 offers weekly.

The story takes place during World War two, and involves the plight of a small group of Italians who flee from their destined-to-be destroyed city of San Martins, and go off in search of American help. Narrating the tale is a woman who at the time of these events was only six years old. The little girl of that time is wonderfully precocious and playful. As the group listens to the bombs that destroy their city, some question where their future lies; others dwell only on their losses; the little girl merely thinks to herself, "let 'em bomb everything, I'm having the time of my life."

This attitude of innocence contrasts wonderfully with the film's serious overtones. In the midst of despair, the elusive freedom that the Americans represent comes across as some pointless hope that only children may hold. In fact, only two little girls ever see American soldiers during the journey, and their meeting climaxes in a face making match. The bitter ironies that war seems to present come into focus when opposing sides borrow one another's water, and upon realization of who they are, shoot each other. Those uniquely human emotions of love and despair underlie everything, beautifully culminating in the relationship between a fatherly, older man and a broken widow.

What makes films like this so interesting is, I think, the emphasis on humanity and emotion. The camera work isn't nearly as exciting as "Star Wars" or "Days of Heaven," but that causes our attention to focus more on plot, people and situation. The story line is gripping; the people are real; the situations are intense.

War is easy to glamorize—it has been done over and over again. That is not the case in "Night of the Shooting Stars,"—these are pitiable people in a truly terrible situation. I'm unfamiliar with any of the actors, but they all do a wonderful job. The names may not stick with you, but the faces certainly do.

Those unacquainted with foreign films, or who would just like to see a good movie should catch "Night of the Shooting Stars;" if it's already gone, try whatever is in its place—they're often quite good. Now showing at Cinema six.

November 12 is the deadline to sign up for the UNCW pool tournament. There will be a division for men and women, and trophies will be awarded. Entry fee is $1. Play begins November 14 and winners will advance to the Regionals at East Tennessee State University on February 14-16.

Outdoor Adventure Club Offers Thrills

Jack Fryar
Staff Writer

If adventure to you strikes up images of Indiana Jones, or visions of something from a Jack London story, then UNCW's Outdoor Adventure Club is probably a bit too mellow for your tastes. But if you enjoy things like backpacking, camping, rappelling, and skiing, then the group is definitely right up your alley.

Oriented towards the outdoor minded, the club recently changed its name from Ranger Club to Outdoor Adventure Club. According to club president Danny Hayes, the name change was an effort to erase any military connotations the word "ranger" may have had to the general student body.

"We felt the name 'Ranger' gave the club too much of a military affiliation" Hayes says, "when in actuality all we do is outdoor adventure type activities. We have nothing to do with ROTC."

According to Hayes, the club is designed to allow members to enjoy outdoor activities they may not otherwise get to do. Club members all participate in the planning and coordination of all activities.

"We've already been rappelling, and we plan to go again as often as the members want," Hayes said. "We also plan to go skiing this winter, and we're trying to go on a scuba trip to Key Largo over spring break."

Other club activities include camping, canoeing, sailing, hiking, and backpacking.

The Outdoor Adventure Club has shown a marked increase in interest this year over last.

The group has an active membership of twenty-seven, and have already done more than last year.

Despite popular belief, club members aren't necessarily the most physically fit people around. "No particular level of fitness is required to be a member," Danny Hayes says, "but the better shape you're in, the more things you'll be able to do. It's almost the same way with experience. If you have some, we'd love to have it. If you don't, we'll be glad to give it to you."

The Outdoor Adventure Club meets each Wednesday at 5 p.m. in Hoggard 104, and everyone's welcome to attend. For more information contact Danny Hayes at either 392-7821 or 392-5532, or drop by and see him in room 123 in Dorm '79.

Seahawks Battle Against Inexperience

George Walker
Editor

Coach Jackie Bartlett has left the better part of her afternoons to her coaching duties. After all, the preparation that goes into building a winner takes time.

In team sports such as volleyball, the individual must work diligently to refine her own skills, then is taught to blend in with the others to become a unit. There are no shortcuts in this process.

So it is with this year's volleyball team, one that practices three hours daily. The Seahawks have only one senior, co-captain Sara Womble, and are paying the price with a 10-15 start. UNCW, which concludes its season with the ECAC South, Division 1 tournament this weekend, comes off 21-7 and 25-13 records after competing in the NAIA the last few years.

"I've had to spend a lot of time explaining techniques and fundamentals," says fifth year coach Bartlett. "Half of our girls haven't played regularly on the college level before." The limited 2-week pre-season made the adjustment even harder, added Bartlett. There have been bright spots this season, though. Two convincing wins over ECU and one over UNCC were particularly impressive. Bartlett mentions Womble, Sophomore Stephanie Wall, Junior June Benton and Junior Mollie Odom as impressive figures in the Seahawk's matches.

Wall and Odom have spent time on the injury list, as have Antoinette Foust and Doreen Nowicki, reducing the squad to just 12 players at times.

Because the 1985 team roster will almost be duplicated, the hours of sweat and toil will enable the volleyball team to start the next season where it left off this year, in good shape and court wise.

Senior Sara Womble was to have been the only departing person from this year's volleyball team, but coach Jackie Bartlett has announced she will move to Durham next year.

Bartlett, whose husband has a position with a CPA firm there, is a Greensboro native who received her undergraduate and masters degree from UNC-Chapel Hill. She is disappointed that her last team didn't go out a winner, but leaves behind a cluster of sophomores and juniors to carry on.

Senior George Walker earned all-conference honors and the next six Seahawk runners all blazed to personal best times to highlight the first annual ECAC meet in Richmond, Va., on November 3.

The season ending meet, run in sunny, cool weather on the grassy Richmond campus, was won easily by Navy with 21 points. UNCW finished fifth of eight with 115 (low score wins).

But the individual competition was hotly contested as ten runners, including five who wore the gold and blue of Navy, followed Kevin Black of George Mason through a swift first mile of 4:45. The pack eventually split and Black emerged at the finish line first in 24:20 over the rolling five mile course. Walker finished 200 yards back, in eighth, to close out his collegiate career with a school record 24:51 and received all-conference status. Yet, after four tough years, Walker feels it's just a beginning.

"I'm going to keep training," he says. "I've improved more over the last six months than in the previous two years." Walker gives a lot of credit to sixth year coach Bill Atwill and his teammates, but also to his training partners from this past summer as valuable factors in his success. Dave and Stephanie Agosta (Bowling Green) and Marla Daniel (UNC) were top runners during their college days. Dave Agosta has run a 4:03 mile and exposed Walker to new training theories. He also "dragged him along during workouts." Daniel and Stephanie Agosta ran with Walker and provided encouragement. "I don't know what I would have done without them," Walker says.

Atwill was pleased that the team's number 2 through number five men were only 49 seconds apart. "I guarantee you we had the best freshman-sophomore pack out there," Atwill said to freshman Ken McCraw (27:32), freshman Layne Fuller (27:37), sophomore Frank Frenduto (27:42) and sophomore Ric Olsen (28:22) after the race. Atwill was also happy to see first year men Jimmy Lee and Kip Kiser improve their times from earlier meets. Junior T. Lankford, who was a significant factor in UNCW's 33-30 season, missed the meet because of class conflicts.

"MAYBE WE'LL GET LUCKY AND NASA WILL PICK MISS BLITHERS TO SEND INTO SPACE"

The women's cross-country team concluded their season with a bunched pack at the ECAC meet held in Richmond.

Senior Brenda Walker led the Seahawks to a fifth place showing over the 3.2 mile course with a 21:17 clocking.

Caroline Brady, Frances O'Connell, Leah Ashley, Mary Edwards and Pat Smith rounded out the scoring.

"It's the most balanced team we've had here," sixth year coach Bill Atwill says. "They all have the potential to be very good runners."

STUDENTS REBEL AGAINST RULES

Courtesy/College Press Service

In one of the most violent episodes yet this fall of nationwide student resistance to strict new drinking policies, as many as 1000 Illinois State University students took to the streets in a seven-hour riot last week.

The young people, mostly ISU students, flocked from campus to city hall on October 4th, pelting police with rocks and breaking store and office windows, officials report.

Other protestors staged a sit-in at a downtown theater and threw rocks at police attempting to remove them.

Traffic on a nearby highway also was disrupted by partying protestors equipped with a keg of beer, observers say.

Local and state police broke up the seven-hour disturbance with tear gas about 2:30 a.m. following three arrests and a plea to students from ISU President Lloyd Wallace to stop demonstrating. Officials report no serious injuries.

Officials note new city laws governing the use of alcohol and making students get permits for parties are being enforced for the first time this fall.

"There have been reports of a number of spontaneous parties with 2000 or 3000 people who take over whole neighborhoods," explains Steve Mahrt, the city lawyer. "And there are thousands of students out at night, roaming neighborhoods, drinking beer. Occasionally, a few get drunk and vandalize property."

Similar crackdowns are occurring on other campuses this fall as civil authorities move to curb off-campus partying, and enforce new drinking regulations and laws.

At the University of Texas at El Paso, disorderly conduct charges were filed against Phi Kappa Tau fraternity President Dan Sosa when the frat's neighbors complained about a noisy party.

The fraternity, which is appealing a prior disorderly conduct conviction as well as the current charge, plans to relocate.

More frequent Southwest

Missouri State University police patrols are enforcing drinking regulations with a new law allowing them to arrest students on suspicion of a misdemeanor.

Thanks to recent hikes in the minimum drinking age and new regulations designed to minimize campuses' legal liability for student behavior, milder protests have erupted at Wisconsin, North Carolina State, Indiana, St. Bonaventure and Florida, among dozens of schools, in recent weeks.

The ISU crackdown netted over 300 violators in August and September, says Normal City Hall spokesman Mahrt. There were only 17 in May and June.

But all the violators stemmed from the city's public possession of alcohol ordinance, not the new mass gathering law which requires permits for public gatherings of 300 or more, Mahrt reports.

"We haven't had a single party disturbance this fall," agrees Richard Godfrey, ISU director of institutional advancement and Normal mayor. "And the frats have had no problem with the ordinance. It's very easy to comply with."

Some students questioned the ordinance's summer passage, claiming few students were on campus then, but Godfrey recalls ISU student leaders joined discussions of the measure last spring.

And the demonstration, advertised through leaflets and the campus newspaper, was not endorsed by the student government, he adds.

Most protestors had no idea why they were there, he maintains.

"I went into the crowd to talk to the protestors," he says. "An extremely small percentage of people were there to be destructive. Lots were around because it was something to do on a warm October night."

Officials are prepared for more demonstrations, but "we don't anticipate any," Godfrey says. "Some students have even suggested taking up a collection to pay for damages."

Got a worry or complaint?

Let us handle it.

Just write down the problem, along with your name and telephone number (or where to get in touch with you), and drop the note by the SGA office, Room 200 in the Student Union. Then sit back and let the Student Research Committee take care of the problem.

Problems can be sent anonymously, but on each note, be sure to address it "Student Research Committee", and if possible, even put it in an envelope.

Thank you in advance for your cooperation.

Porn Movies Cause Controversy on Campuses

Courtesy/College Press Service

Several campuses once again have opted to approve using campus funds and facilities to run pornographic movies during the last month.

Most recently, University of Virginia President Frank Hereford has refused a National Organization of Women (NOW) invitation to view the movie "Deep Throat."

NOW wanted to enlist Hereford's support in banning the film from UVA, where it was shown as a fundraiser for the Phi Sigma Kappa fraternity two weeks ago.

Hereford, in a letter to Cynthia Taylor, president of the Charlottesville, Va., NOW chapter, said that while he "personally abhors this kind of thing," he feared banning the film would violate the First Amendment to the U.S. Constitution, Taylor reports.

Also fearing it'd quash free speech, an Indiana University dorm student government last week approved a motion to let students keep showing X-rated movies in the dorm.

The week before, 25 University of Iowa protestors tried to disrupt a campus showing of a movie called "Peeping Tom."

The anti-pornography forces have won a few times. The manager of a University of Texas at El Paso campus pub recently ordered the pub's pay TV channel turned off at 10:00 p.m., when SelecTV switches to blue movie programming.

And soon after the Indiana dorm council approved showing pornography, the campus-wide Indiana University Student Association passed a resolution condemning pornography and offering to work with the dean of students to teach students "about the effects of pornography on our society."

Generally, however, students and administrators reluctantly go along with the screenings, which are usually staged by fraternities or campus film societies.

"This situation," observes William Fishback, an aide to Hereford at Virginia, "is not a winner in any respect."

Fishback says Hereford finally decided that "we're talking about an issue of freedom here. We will not ban movies because this could lead to book burnings and such."

"This is a very complex issue of values," NOW's Taylor replies. "Hereford claims the school won't do anything that is against community standards, but in Charlottesville, this is against community standards."

She maintains "the cost of human dignity is too great to show this type of film on public ground of a state school, especially as a fundraiser."

Taylor also sees the issue as "the last bastion of men against women at a university."

The courts, however, have been quick to rule against those who would ban movies, books or other forms of popular culture.

In a May, 1983 landmark case, a Michigan federal judge forced Grand Valley State College administrators to pay the $250 rental fee for a X-rated film a student group wanted to show.

The college routinely had paid film rental fees in the past, but didn't want to fund a pornographic film.

Even student groups have shied away from outright bannings. In the last six months, student politicians at Penn, Hawaii, Arizona State and even Virginia rejected measures that would have barred X-rated films.

Hoping to steer a middle course, the Cal-Santa Barbara student government in 1983 voted to allow showing pornographic films, but to require they be preceded by a 10-minute educational program on the subject.

Private Marquette University last fall banned "Porky's" because it included "excessive sex" and "Monty Python's The Meaning of Life" because it was "anti-Catholic." Administrators received no legal challenge, a Marquette spokesman says.

And in spite of administrators' reaffirmation of its right to show any movies it pleased, a University of Cincinnati film group cancelled its June, 1984 plans to show the X-rated "Vixens" after a local community prosecutor threatened to press obscenity charges.

Announcements

The UNCW Jazz Fusion and Jazz Combo, under the direction of Frank J. Bongiorno, will perform an informal concert at 3 p.m., Sunday, November 11 in Kenan Auditorium.

The National Science Foundation has awarded $9,419 to UNCW and Dr. Courtney Hackney of its biological sciences department to purchase a differential respirometer and accessories for use in teaching and research projects.

Dr. David Kechley, assistant professor of creative arts-music at UNCW, traveled October 22-24 to Minnesota as one of eight guest composers from across the country invited to participate in a reading-rehearsal session presented by the Minnesota orchestra.

Dr. Gerald Shinn, professor of philosophy and religion, has received information on applying for Rhodes Scholarships and Harry S. Truman Scholarships. Contact Dr. Shinn at 395-3411.

Auditions for the solo parts in this year's production of "Walk in Messiah" will be held between 9 a.m. and noon Saturday, in Kenan Auditorium. Call 395-3390 to schedule a time.

On Friday, October 26, the Monster Bash took form on the tennis courts behind Galloway Hall. Ghouls and Wolves, tramps and vampires, Ronald Reagan, and the Road Warrior-all came by for four hours of fun as the Office of Residence Life sponsored its second major social gathering. To the echoing top-40 and beach music sounds of Rio, a six member band, about 250-300 costume clad partiers danced and mingled under warm star-lit skies. That evening, a panel of judges selected the best male and female kissers in "The Great Campus Kiss-off." The best male and female also were crowned; male and female categories were hard to guess! The winners received a variety of gifts, thoughtfully donated by local businesses. The Office of Residence Life would like to thank all who attended and the RA's who worked hard to make the Monster Bash a success. Our next event will be a country hoe-down on Friday November, 16. We would like ya'll to stop on by!

Cheating Rampant at Registration

George Walker
Editor

Master Thieves Use Master Cards

Students using false master cards again made the rounds in heavy numbers at last week's preregistration and left secretaries hoping that a new computer system will replace the current card system next semester.

Murrie Lee, Associate Registrar, says the new computer system will be in use next semester and will be "virtually impossible" to cheat on.

"It's the state of the art in education," he notes, adding that UNCW will be the first in the state to use it.

"For the people who have been cheating, this is their last swansong--their last hurrah."

Ideally, the present manual method provides for students to preregister for classes in chronological order, beginning with seniors and ending with freshmen. Each student takes a master card to a designated department to pick up individual course cards. The master card allows the secretary to give the student whatever class he or she desires.

Every master card has a name on top, but few secretaries require identification. Thus, all a freshman has to do is borrow a senior's master card and sign up early. The scarce upper level courses close out that much quicker.

"We want to give the students who are nearest to graduation the first shot at getting a course," says Lee. "Unfortunately, many have abused the system. They're only hurting their older classmates."

And the secretaries who work the booths at registration. Many are tired of playing detective and of being told the new computers will be in use soon.

"They (the registrars) said that last year, too," says modern languages secretary Rita Fortune.

One secretary, who asked not to be identified, caught a student with a false master card only to have him grab it from her and flee. "Countless students are cheating," she says. "It's just a mess."

Negligence Prevents Students From Voting

By Gloria Benson
Journalism Class Contributor

Voter turnout was heavy for last week's election, but at least 40 UNCW students did not participate due to confusion concerning their eligibility to vote in New Hanover County.

These students, along with about 210 others, registered to vote during a voter registration drive at the Student Union the week of Oct. 1.

According to SGA Senator Chales Gavins, who assisted in the registration, the special registrars only required students to show a local ID before swearing them in.

Gavins said this was in accordance with a directive sent down by the State Board of Elections which said that written questionnaires could not be used to establish residency.

Dorothy Harrell, Supervisor of the New Hanover County Board of Elections said that students cannot register and vote "just anywhere" and that any information indicating they can is false. Her office sent out 40 to 50 letters to students Oct. 17 informing them that they were not properly registered at the Union, and more information was needed from them.

Richard Calvert, a junior from Charlotte, NC, was one of about 6 students who responded to the letter. Calvert said the board inquired about his income, among other things, and also whether or not his parents help to support him and to what extent. He was eventually deemed eligible to vote in New Hanover County, despite having only one day's notice from the board to come in and straighten matters out.

Complaints about the local board's action reached as far as the State Democratic Headquarters in Raleigh. Joe Sinshemer, an official in that office, said the voter registration laws concerning students were "extremely clear--students can register and vote in the county where they attend school."

He added that the New Hanover County Board of Elections "blatantly violated" student's rights by questioning them arbitrarily. He also said that he tried to contact the chairman of the local board, James O. Carter before Tuesday's election, but Carter never returned his phone call.

Riders Escape Injury

Edward Troublefield
Contributor

Ten UNCW students escaped serious injury when the jeep they were riding in overturned Sunday morning while attempting to make a right turn off South College Rd. onto University Dr. at Wachovia Bank.

The freak accident occurred about 12:30 a.m. on October 28. According to a witness, Terry Henry, an employee at Zip Mart, all he saw was the jeep turn over as it was turning onto University Drive.

The Wilmington Fire Department was called to the scene to wash away glass, and someone also had reported smelling gasoline.

The victims at the scene were identified as Karala Tharin, driver, Mary Seely, Kim Lyons, Valerie Skipper, Besty Sowers, Kim Yates, Harriet Gordon, Susan Ross, Ken Conly and Ray Gillian, owner of the vehicle.

According to Wilmington City Police Officer G.A. Lockamy the accident could have been more serious. No charges were filed because no real fault could be found. Police estimated damage at $300 to the Jeep CJ8.

Mail-day Blues

Every day I faithfully enter the Student Union, with my mailbox key held tightly in my grubby little fist. Every day I hold my breath and open P.O. Box 3423, hoping that a friend or relative (even Aunt Petunia!) has sent a morsel of mail.

Every day I get a little more dust in my mailbox. White, powdery dust. "Air" mail.

I don't understand! I write letters faithfully--sometimes two or three in a day! (yeah, I know it's hard to believe.) Anytime I ever complained about not getting mail at home, my mom said, "You have to write letters to get letters." Thanks mom.

So I did.
I wrote everybody! My friend Elizabeth in Chapel Hill, Maureen in the Coast Guard, my grandma in Boston, my grandmother in California, my multitudes of aunts and uncles and cousins (especially LOTS of cousins) in Boston and spread out across the country. I've even had pen pals.

And still no mail.
I give up!
Finally, in sheer desperation, I began parking my Bug in unclassified parking spaces across campus. I parked in Faculty spaces, Staff spaces, on the grass, in that Bank Courier space in front of the Union and in the Construction places on Riegel Road. I even parked in nonexistent places!

Now I get mail from the parking administration.
I even had to get my phone hooked up so that Southern Bell could send me phone bills and late notices even when I was paying my bill on time. And I asked for a subscription to Time magazine so they could send me threatening letters when I couldn't pay the bill.

When I walk into the Union now, sometimes I'm afraid to look in my box...because either I have no mail, or because there's a letter threatening to beat me up if I don't pay.

I've noticed a lot of off-campus people don't EVER look in their boxes.

How can they stand the suspense?! I've just GOT to know what's in my box, threat or no threat.

So I guess I'll continue to check the ol' box and see what the collection agencies have in store for me.... I don't think I'm going to pay the bills (except for the parking tickets!) because then I'll get nothing.

You have to write letters to get letters. PHOOEY!!!!!!!!!!!!

Guidelines for letters

1. Letters must be typed, double-spaced, and no more than 250 words. The Seahawk reserves the right to withhold any letter that is single-spaced, handwritten or more than 250 words.
2. All letters must include signature, date, phone, and social security number. If you need to withhold your name for an appropriate reason, please see the editor.
3. The Seahawk also reserves the right to withhold any letter deemed obscene, vulgar or libelous.
4. The Seahawk does not edit or correct letters to the editor.
5. The Seahawk cannot guarantee date of publication of letters submitted. The Seahawk also cannot return submitted letters.

Stillpoint

By Bob Haywood,

A week from today we will use the ritualistic dismemberment of the lowly American fowl--the turkey--as an occasion for counting our many blessings. For many of us it will be a familiar process of giving thanks for home, freedom, health and lives filled with possibilities. Let's expand our sense of thankfulness by looking at some elements in our lives that we normally see as being negative in hopes of finding, even there, reasons for giving thanks.

Take failure for example; failure usually means that some plans or effort that we have undertaken have come to naught. We don't like to fail and don't think of it as having positive value. Think about it. For anyone who is growing and developing, one of two positive things usually happen when we fail. We examine our efforts, determine that we did not approach the project correctly and find ourselves motivated to seek more effective ways of working the next time or simply put more focused effort into the project or we see in the failure a closed door that helps us move out in another direction. Failure is a challenge and if we stop and reflect on failures that we have experienced and the results that have come from them, perhaps we can see this as a part of our life for which we can give thanks.

How about insecurity as a cause for thanksgiving? A lot of us have periods in our life when we are confronted with a deep sense of insecurity. Leaving home and coming to college, breaking up with a boyfriend or girlfriend, going through a midlife crisis or struggling through the crisis of a divorce; all of these things leave us really insecure. But they can also cause us to discover a wealth of inner strength and personal power that we never knew we had. These hard times often force us to turn to other people and lead us into deeper levels of friendship than we would have expected possible. For many, these situations lead us into the deeper channel of God's grace and discovery of an inner security that we might never have known. All of these are possible outcomes of insecurity that are worthy of thankfulness.

And then there is doubt. Most of us humans struggle, at times, with doubts about ourself, our relationship with significant others, as well as doubts about the power, or even the reality, of God. I am convinced that doubt is the first step in the process of growing and changing. In the timid or lazy, doubt often leads to disbelief and abandonment. But in those who realize that all of life is a dynamic process, doubt leads to searching questions and the exploration of new avenues of understanding of whatever the issue is with which we are dealing. From my perspective, rather than being destructive, doubt is part of the dynamic creative process that allows life and relationships to become more and more of what we want them to be.

Have a good thanksgiving! And as you ravage that poor, defenseless turkey, see if you can't find occasion to give thanks for the failures, insecurity and doubts in your own life.

James Lee

Associate Editor

Last Thursday night a lot of rhetoric was regurgitated by a man who lived during an era of great social change. Even though a radical tone is a largely unpopular lecture among conservative present day college students; one particular attitude Abbie Hoffman conveyed is to be passed along. It concerns a moral responsibility that each one of us must confront.

Our life at this school is limited. Abbie Hoffman tells us that the administration here reduces us to animals on an increasingly difficult treadmill that leads toward graduation. He says the administration sees us only as pawns in a diploma factory and that after a period we too adopt this attitude. According to Hoffman, this causes us to retreat inside the boundaries of the University and, to the delight of the administration, we concern ourselves only with procuring this often elusive diploma.

We are at this institution of higher learning for at least four years. Abbie Hoffman stresses that if we would cease to view ourselves as just students and start realizing that we are citizens of the community--then we can make a difference.

Change does not come from the top. Abbie stresses that only when the people become involved in grass roots issues, on the local level, do the leaders take notice and pursue change. (Just look at what happened to the drinking laws in this country when Mothers Against Drunk Driving (MADD) united on the local level. Radical changes concerning the laws and drinking are being passed by our leaders and Mothers are behind it!)

Students were at the polls on November 6 soliciting signatures for a voter referendum on the existing Blues laws, but I question their loyalty toward the issue in light of the fact they were paid a dollar a signature. What ever the reason, it was refreshing to see them out taking part. I think Abbie Hoffman would have approved, for the some 11,000 signatures they took part in collecting will make a difference. Stores in the future will open on Sunday in Wilmington, just wait, look beyond our campus walls and see.

Closing The Gap

This past weekend UNCW students were represented at The University of North Carolina Association of Student Governments (UNCASG) meeting held in Chapel Hill, N.C. President Squires, myself, Freshman Jenny Cato, and Student Karen Flynn were appointed UNCW's representatives to the State General Assembly while I was elected State Treasurer.

Some of what was discussed at the UNCASG meeting were the increasing number of arrests of club and fraternity presidents at NC State and other schools across North Carolina by Alcohol police detectives. The presidents are being held responsible for organization functions where alcohol was served and underage were let in. Arrests have spread to other campuses, although we at UNCW have not had any problems yet.

The Association voted on alcohol policies to be brought back to all the campuses to be recommended to help organization avoid hassels. The Association members are also drafting letters to Attorney General Rufus Edmisten and Governor Elect Jim Martin to get their view on the fairness of the laws towards organization presidents concerning their personal liability at group functions.

Last week I mentioned how our Student Government is involved in all areas of the administration of UNCW. That doesn't mean we have the final authority, but do influence decisions. The student body holds the power to decide for itself what it wants, and SGA is the organizer, representative and sometimes mediators on your behalf.

In light of the past national elections, I hope there is a revival of students participating in SGA, simply to belong to a group, serve your school or gain valuable experience towards your major, anything to enjoy your college life. Sometime in the near future, SGA will conduct a survey to get your opinion and support on issues such as: (1) A college Football team, (2) Acquisition of the bookstore building to use as a meeting hall (pub) (3) track facilities (4) General student concerns on different issues.

It is your right to know what is going on and what your elected representatives are doing on your behalf. Don't loose that right by lack of interest. The SGA meetings are always on Thursdays at 6 p.m. in Chemistry-Physics Room 114. Bring your opinions to your representatives and make them work.

Secretary Linda Seal caught numerous students trying to pass false cards in the Business Dept., where 18 upper level courses had filled as of Thursday.

As a safeguard, Seal had displayed a sign that required students to show identification with the master card.

"A lot of 'em just walked out of line when they saw it (sign)," she says.

Seal also tells of a student with a philosophy major's master card (junior) who wanted an upper level accounting course. She became suspicious and demanded identification. He came back the next day---with a sophomore accounting card.

Some reported cases have a humorous twist.

Seal says one, fairly large guy came in line and handed her a master card with a girl's name on it. "He couldn't find his I.D.," she adds, laughing.

Mrs. Johnston, a chemistry registration worker, found herself holding a master card with a friend's name on it. The only trouble was the student in question wasn't that friend.

"I told her she had better wait her turn," says Johnston.

Conversely, an English Dept. secretary said Friday she doesn't believe anyone has ever cheated on her.

"I don't ask for identification," she says. "But I do take the name that is on the top of the master card and write it on a sheet of paper. If they're cheating I can match the names."

"Not so," says one upperclassman who had just received a course card from Johnson.

"It's easy to get away with," he explains. "I've already registered classes for four people. All a freshman has to do is give his schedule card to a senior and there's no way to stop it."

"If they ask for I.D., I show them my master card and my I.D." Schedule cards do not have names on them.

The upperclassman also said he knew of many students who had gotten hold of stolen, blank master cards from the computer office.

"All they have to do is type in their name and use a punch card machine to put the holes in."

Dorothy Marshal, head of the registrar's office, says these students are in for a surprise.

"Anybody who has used a stolen card would probably like to know that the computer won't accept cards that have been tampered with." But what if the student gets all of his desired courses with a stolen card, then turns them in with a legitimate one?

You get the point.

Marshal doesn't seem too phased by the multiple violations of the card system.

"We're aware that it goes on," she says, "but there's not much we can do to stop it."

Marshal went on to say she "hopes" the computer system will be instituted by March.

If various outbursts from victimized upperclassmen and beleaguered secretaries are any indication, they too hope it comes soon.

Dungeons and Dragons

James Dallas Egbert III was a distraught, confused, highly intelligent 16-year-old advanced student at Michigan State University when, one day in 1979, he gathered a blanket, some cheese, crackers and a handful of Quaaludes, and literally dropped out of sight.

Where he really dropped was into a tiny room off the steam tunnels running under the huge MSU campus.

What followed was a media circus as a detective unearthed clues Egbert had left behind, and the world speculated that the troubled all over East Lansing, pressuring people to tell all they knew.

In fact, Egbert just was laying low in friends' houses, recovering from the effects of the Quaaludes before contacting Dear himself.

"We just knew he was dead or something bad," Dear recalls in an interview. "I'd exhausted every lead. I think if I hadn't put out the threats, we never would have found him alive. He would have committed suicide."

Egbert ultimately did commit suicide a year after his "rescue."

◀ Detective and now author William Dear went to Michigan State and "came on like James Bond."

student was playing some fatal version of Dungeons and Dragons, then a full-blown national campus fad.

And though there were many alarmed calls to ban the game from campuses, a new book reveals the truth was nowhere near as spectacular as a real-life D&D game. It was, however, a sad example of what can happen when an underaged, smart kid is left on a college campus to make--or not make--his own way.

In "Dungeon Master," William Dear, the detective Egbert's parents hired to find their son, reveals previously-unknown details about the case.

But most of the book, released the last week of October, could be subtitled "Sam Spade On Campus," as Dear describes how he left a trail of crumpled lapels

While Egbert's story--complicated by his intelligence, difficulty in relating to his older classmates and sexual preferences that undoubtedly made social adjustment even harder--probably was similar to others in the current national teenage suicide epidemic, Dear emphasized Dungeons and Dragons' role.

"He was very involved in Dungeons and Dragons," Dear says.

"Many of the kids who play this game don't realize it's a fantasy, they become so involved," he adds. "I've heard since this case from two other women who say their children who were involved with the game, committed suicide."

"I'm not saying the game is inherently dangerous," he says, but kids "with emotional problems" shouldn't play it.

It's still highly popular on campus, but college sales aren't as high as they once were," reports Dieter Sturm of TSR, Inc., the Lake Geneva, Wis., firm that manufactures Dungeons and Dragons.

"We've lived with the rumor [that Dungeons and Dragons contributed to Egbert's death] for five years here," Sturm says. "Certainly it's a tragic story. But the truth is the game had nothing to do with his death. He wasn't playing it the whole time he was missing."

"This is a game that has death as a constant factor," Dear replies. "I think parents should keep an eye on children who are involved in it to make sure they don't lose touch with reality."

Dear also has harsh words for Michigan State. He quotes one of his detectives saying he wouldn't send a child to MSU if it was free.

"Wouldn't you think a university put in charge of a treasure like [Egbert] would take care of him?" Dear asks. "He'd been invited to attend several universities, so the college knew what they had."

"His parents told us it was okay for [Egbert] to be in the residence halls," recalls Ed Zabrusky, MSU's media projects director who was with the school's news bureau in 1979.

"The whole thing was very tragic," recalls Ferman Badgely, who as a member of MSU's security force directed the school's investigation of the Egbert case. "I looked at this whole thing as a missing persons case. I think it got blown way out of proportion."

Dear's feelings for MSU, moreover, are reciprocated.

Dear, Zabrusky remembers, was "coming on like James Bond. He's very flamboyant, and I'm not sure he's shedding any light on this case."

Badgely, now MSU's police commander, remembers Dear as "a TV-type private investigator with a very high opinion of himself. I think he's good, but I don't think he's as good as he thinks he is."

Fonda's Talent Misused

Richard Viguerie

During World War II, the great poet Ezra Pound could be heard on Italy's short-wave broadcasts to North America, praising Hitler and Mussolini and criticizing the United States. When he flew home to the U.S. at the end of the war, he was arrested in anticipation of his trial for treason—which never took place, because a panel of psychiatrists decided that he was not responsible for his actions during the war.

Whether Pound was actually mad or whether the psychiatrists declared him insane only to spare his life is a question that is still debated nearly 40 years later. But at least Pound paid a price for his support of tyranny: He spent almost 13 years at St. Elizabeth's, a mental hospital that is currently the Washington home of John Hinckley. In 1958, he was released on condition that he leave the country, and he spent the rest of his life in exile in Italy.

Twelve years after Pound's death, an event in Washington underscored how tolerant this nation has become of propagandists for the enemy.

It was a party at the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners' building in Washington—a fundraiser for the Democratic Party's Congressional candidates. Jane Fonda and her husband Tom Hayden auctioned themselves off: $225 for a half-hour jog with Jane, $250 for a jog with Tom, $765 for a group breakfast with both, $155 for an autographed copy of Jane's latest exercise record. Auctioneer Jane herself spent $550 for a drawing by Los Angeles Times cartoonist Paul Conrad. Altogether, the party raised about $20,000.

As The Washington Post reported, "Out of the adoring crowd someone yelled, 'If the Democrats had six more like her, we wouldn't be in such trouble.' Fonda, in her best 'Make it burn!' voice, said, 'We're not in trouble. We're going to win!' And the Fonda-lovers were ecstatic."

Jane Fonda's support is a mixed blessing. The Black Panther Party did not survive long after Fonda endorsed it; the Reverend Jim Jones and his followers committed suicide within a year after she told an interviewer that "the church I relate to most is called the People's Temple [which offers] a sense of what life is all about." Still, the Fonda endorsement did not seem to damage the communist cause in Southeast Asia. In 1972, she was photographed sitting in the gunpointer's seat on a Russian aircraft cannon, used to shoot down American pilots. On Radio Hanoi she declared, "We have a common enemy—U.S. imperialism" and asked U.S. servicemen, "How does it feel to be used as pawns?"

Back in the U.S.A., she described Air Force officers as "professional killers" and claimed that American POWs were treated kindly by their captors. When the prisoners returned home and told how they had been tortured, Fonda called them "hypocrites and liars." In 1979, when fellow "anti-war" activist Joan Baez asked Fonda to join her in denouncing human rights violations by the communist Vietnamese, she indignantly refused.

Today, Jane Fonda is one of Hollywood's biggest stars; her friends run the Screen Actors Guild, the union once headed by Ronald Reagan; and her "Campaign for Economic Democracy" is one of the most powerful political machines in the country, with financing from such diverse sources as Fane Fonda exercise programs, Jane Fonda movies, the Rockefeller Brothers Fund, the Ford Foundation, and the Carter Administration. A decade after the end of the Vietnam War—five years after the boat people—she is treated as an important, respected figure within the new, radical Democratic Party.

Fonda is not alone in the misuse of her talent. In 1970 and 1971, David Ifshin, then the president of the National Student Association, traveled to North Vietnam, where he went on Radio Hanoi to declare that "the U.S.

government does not go to South Vietnam to fight for democracy or to defend the right of the people, but they go there and send us to murder the people of Vietnam in order to make South Vietnam into one large U.S. military base, not to defend the United States, but to aggressively threaten other countries." Today Ifshin is the chief legal counsel for the Mondale-Ferraro campaign.

When reports of Ifshin's visit to Hanoi appeared recently, he called the trip "a serious mistake" made when he was 21 years old, and said, "I regret it." If the Vietnam War were like World War II, though—and if Ifsshin, like Pound, had been deemed an artistic treasure that must be saved at all costs—he would be getting out of St. Elizabeth's about now. Upon his release, he would be put on a plane to Vietnam, where he would have plenty of time to consider the wisdom of his words. But then, if the Vietnam War were like World War II, Vietnam would be free today; millions of Southeast Asians who have been murdered would now be alive; and, instead of holding political power, the Ifshins and Fondas of this country would consider themselves lucky to have escaped the hangman's noose.

Thursday night in Kenan Auditorium, one of the most well-known activists of the 60's told the audience about himself. Abbie Hoffman came to talk.

He told of his past, when during the 60's as a radical activist he was arrested by the FBI over twenty times and accumulated 26,000 pages of files.

He told of his life as a fugitive from the FBI, during which he led an activist group under an assumed name and was praised by the same government that considered him a criminal.

He told his audience of his current involvement in a half a dozen environmental activist groups concerned with issues ranging from toxic waste to water conservation to nuclear protest.

Abbie Hoffman came to talk, and he had plenty to say. Hoffman told the audience about himself, but more importantly, he told them something about themselves as well.

Calling UNCW a "hotbed of social rest" and "about exciting as TV bowling," Hoffman refuted the characterization of the 60's generation as disillusioned failures who abandoned

A few "quit tips"

Hide all ashtrays, matches, etc.

Lay in a supply of sugarless gum, carrot sticks, etc.

Drink lots of liquids, but pass up coffee & alcohol.

Tell everyone you're quitting for the day.

When the urge to smoke hits, take a deep breath, hold it for 10 seconds, & release it slowly.

Exercise to relieve the tension.

Try the "buddy system," and ask a friend to quit too.

"Body Double"

Joan Travis
Staff Writer

"Body Double" is the latest offering from Director/Screenwriter Brian De Palma. Like his previous efforts, "Dressed to Kill" and "Blow Out", this one continues in the vein of suspense, terror, and sex. Interestingly enough, as biased as De Palma seems to be in his treatment of women, his movies usually work, and this one is no exception. The plot is a strange one involving a story within a story. Craig Wasson plays Jake, a struggling and claustrophobic actor. After leaving his girlfriend, Jake meets a fellow actor who conveniently offers him a place to stay. From the windows of this wonderful apartment, Jake watches a beautiful girl perform an erotic dance in a nearby house. He quickly falls in lust with the girl, realizes that she's being followed by an ugly Indian, and decides to follow her himself and warn her of the situation. Because of his interest in this girl, Jake ends up witnessing a murder, and finds himself linked up with the queen of porno films nicely played by Melanie Griffith. Sound bizarre? It is, but it makes sense in the film.

One of the scenes in this movie that has received a lot of attention occurs when a woman is drilled to the floor. Some say that it's another grizzly example of De Palma's treatment of women on screen. I found the scene very intense, but as in most good horror and suspense movies, the intensity is brought about mainly in the editing-the drill is never really seen going through the woman. De Palma has said that he typically chooses women as victims, because they are the most believable in such roles. Well...does he also believe they can only be brainless housewives, cheating girlfriends, or sweet but simple prostitutes?

All disagreement aside, "Body Double" is interesting and works well as a suspense movie. The sexual element is very heavy, and if anyone finds that offensive, he might want to pass on this. Now showing at Cinema 6.

their radical ideas to sell out to mainstream success in the 80's.

Instead, he said, "My generation has stuck to its guns, it's the younger generation who are asleep at the wheel."

Hoffman said today's students are not concerned with social issues; their attitude centers instead on the selfish Darwinian idea of survival of the fittest, "looking out for number one." But as he pointed out, "We're not making it one at a time."

Instead, today's students are seeing rights gained by their predecessors slipping away; one by one, rights won by protest are lost without a fight.

As Hoffman pointed out, the apathy of college students doesn't suggest that everything is perfect in the world. Besides rising tuition rates and higher drinking ages, today's student faces a variety of social, environmental and political issues. There are plenty of things to think about. North Carolina is fast on its way to becoming the toxic dumping ground for the entire east coast, and has just elected a senator who favors cutting financial aids to college students. The federal

"If you believe things can't change you've internalized this police state. If you believe you live in a police state--you do," Hoffman said.

"Don't think things are inevitable," he said, "schools should teach disrespect, not obedience."

Though there is bound to be a considerable amount of debate on that idea, most would agree that by this time, schools should have at least taught us to think for ourselves. The rest is up to us.

The Miller Brewing Company has announced that The Producers have joined the roster of 15 bands to be sponsored under the Miller High Life "Rock Network" program.

"The signing of The Producers represents the latest addition to our list of aspiring young bands that will receive tour support through radio and print advertising as well as promotional merchandise," said Kevin Wulff, Miller's manager for young adult marketing.

"Through our 'Rock Network' program we are able to showcase exciting entertainment at local nightclubs and music complexes across the country which increases the visibility of these talented musicians," Wulff added.

The program is currently in its second season and is designed to introduce young adult audiences nationwide to some of the fastest rising attractions in the music industry. As an added benefit for the bands, Miller has announced that four Pro-Audio manufacturers will supply the groups with their products. Audio Technica, Gauss, MXR, and QSC Audio will provide all 15 bands with microphones, speakers, signal processing equipment, and amplifiers respectively.

"Miller's involvement with the 'Rock Network' program includes providing the bands with the type of support that will eventually propel them to stardom and a national following," Wulff said. "The music equipment companies' involvement will also enhance the performance and sound quality of the groups."

The 1984 roster includes: Chameleon, Pat McCurdy & The Men About Town, Jack Mack & The Heart Attack, The Look, DC Star, Deluxury, The Sheiks, The Entertainers, The Fabulous Thunderbirds, The Fleshtones, Skip Castro, Rail, The Waitresses and The Mighty Invaders.

Basketball Team Wins Scrimmage

George Walker
Editor

At the conclusion of UNCW's 71-67 victory over the South Carolina All-Stars in Trask Coliseum, Don Sims, South Carolina's vibrant coach, milled and talked, offered an accepted congratulations. The 19th hole of coaching.

Sims was asked who impressed him most from the Seahawk squad. Was it sophomore Brian Rowsom, a 6'9" center who scored 17 points and hauled down nine rebounds? Or was Mark Gary, a 6'2" freshman from Indiana who can bury it from the outside? Another good candidate might be senior forward Terry Shiver, who chipped in with nine points and nine rebounds.

"It was everybody," said Sims. "I was impressed with the talent and the team work. And they have a very good bench."

Brotherhood has not been a common adjective around basketball circles the past few years.

As a result, sloppy ballhandling and badly-timed miscues were trademarks of the last four teams, all losers.

Sims was most impressed with Bobby Joe Springer, a composed 6'1" point guard from Gulf Coast Junior College in Florida.

"Springer did a good job of recognizing and reacting to our defense."

Springer also excited the home crowd with a repertoire of playground jukes and roles on the fastbreak.

Paul Newman, a 6'8", rough-tough sophomore transfer from Marquette, only knows one speed. All Out. His soft high-arching jumper is a pleasant surprise and bespeaks his blue-collar work ethic on the court. He connected on 4 of 5 jumpers from the wing against S.C.

The Seahawks next game is against Radford on November 24 in Trask Coliseum.

UNCW Captures Title

Edward Troublefield

Journalism Class Contributor

Saturday, the UNCW Club Football team defeated NSCU Club Football team 14-6 to win the North Carolina Association of Club Teams (Eastern Conference) Division Title.

UNCW scored on two runs by Johnny Odom and two extra point kicks by Bill Roach. The UNCW defense stopped several drives by interceptions. Robert Hines made two key interceptions in the 4th quarter to stop NCSU. Stuart Lewis made an important quarterback sack and fumble recovery to stop another NCSU drive. Jeff Hunnan was also part of secondary that intercepted NCSU seven times, and also sacked the quarterback five times.

Coach Jack Bowman said the team played good but was getting too many penalties. State was a tough team and without the support of the fans the outcome could have been different. Jack welcomes everyone to come out Saturday at 2:00 p.m. to cheer them on as they enter the playoffs against the Clemson Club Football Team.

Swim Team Successful in First Outing

The Seahawk swim teams, getting strong support from freshmen and upperclassmen, swept past Emory and Georgia State University last weekend in Atlanta.

The men's and women's teams each has eight talented newcomers to bolster the already strong squads from last season.

Winners included Scott Stokes, Jeff Siggins, Colin Kueny, Eric Pundock, Don Hosler, Robert Sealey, Art Hall, Mike Bitzenhofer, Brad Sekulich, Bill Herring, Sid Flaherty, and Walter Steele. The UNCW men defeated Emory 79-32, and Georgia State 78-33.

For the women Lani Driscoll, Diane Hall, JoAnne Brown, Kathy McWeeny, Dee Ann Nichols, Phyllis Wesesku, Lory Dillner and Colleen St. Ledger were victorious in wins over Emory and Georgia State.

"This team has a lot of potential," says Coach Dave Allen. "This can be a very successful season for us."

Beach Living Proves a Sanctuary for Some

Rebecca Fish
Journalism Class Contributor

Life at UNCW is different from most campus life for the simple reason that Wrightsville Beach is minutes away. Most students succumb to the lure of the beach at one time or another, but some have formed a more permanent attachment. Many UNCW students have made Wrightsville Beach their home, and commute to campus each day. The students seem to enjoy beach life although it does seem to cut them off from campus life, somewhat.

Many surfers prefer to live at the beach as a matter of proximity. The closer they are to the waves, the better.

Other students have varied reasons for beach life. Two students, who asked not to be identified, said they first moved to the beach three years ago for the social life.

However, they said that after the initial partying wore off they remained at the beach because they had come to love the small town atmosphere and "just being able to walk on the beach whenever you feel like it."

Some students, who moved back to Wilmington after living at the beach, said they got "tired of the hassle" of driving back and forth to jobs, shopping, and school. Although it is only a seven minute drive to school the miles can add up. Some students chose to live at the beach after discovering that UNCW did not have room for them. The university's enrollment grew before its housing capacity did, so for some students it was limited choice.

Now that developments such as Campus Edge have begun to grow, students will have more options. Most of those who live at the beach say that's where they'll stay.

As one senior says, "everybody always dreams of living at the beach, when I think about the people who have never seen the ocean, it really makes me see how lucky I am."

Finding a house at the beach is not much of a problem. But finding one that is a year round rental and winterized can be a problem. Prices of houses at the beach are very reasonable, usually less than apartment housing in Wilmington.

However, heating bills for un-winterized houses can be high, and water/sewer bills are an unexpected extra to a student's budget. The best arrangement for a student is to find a house which is rented on a flat monthly rate, which includes all bills except phone bills. Beach realities say the wintertime population has risen at the beach due to student rentals.

In the next issue of The Seahawk we will examine how these realities decide rent rates, how they feel about the student population, and what the relationship between the more permanent beach community and the students is.

Library in a rare moment of uncluttered solitude. A new addition to the building will give students more elbow room. Construction and renovation will occur simultaneously.

Library Expansion Planned For Feb. '85

Stephanie Loftus
Editorial Page Editor

Students squirming and struggling for study space will be less cramped when the 7.7 million dollar addition to William Randall Library doubles the building to 102 thousand square feet by May, 1987.

The addition, approved by the NC State Legislature in mid-August, will seek construction bids in the last part of November, with construction set for late February, 1985.

Plans by Boney Architects of Wilmington, who planned the original library and recently completed the ten-story Davis Library in Chapel Hill, call for the addition to be east-oriented towards the Student Union and the newer buildings on campus.

E.W. Huguelet, Director of Library Services, expects construction to begin in late February, and renovations on the current building to be completed during the last part of the 22-month construction period.

"We expect a rather difficult year," he said, referring to the period when students and construction workers would inhabit the building simultaneously, "but the end will be worth it."

Huguelet, who came to UNCW in June, 1977, began planning the addition in 1978. The current facility seats 480 students and holds 250 thousand volumes although it was designed for just 200 thousand. The new library will hold 840 students and 440 thousand books.

Filled to overflowing recently, the library's noise level has risen partly because of overuse, partly due to the lack of carpet upstairs, and partly because it is an undergraduate facility. The new structure will be less crowded, completely carpeted and spaces for graduate studies to correspond with the university's new graduate programs.

Huguelet plans to hire new staff and student workers as the library grows, but hopes to retain a comfortable atmosphere.

"When a building gets large, it's hard to keep it cozy," he said. "We want it to be easy to use, too."

Huguelet expects the building to be comfortable through 1994, but will begin new plans for an addition as soon as construction is completed by 1987.

"It's an exciting time for the library and campus," Huguelet said. "It's been the number one priority on campus for a long time."

I guess money can buy an election, especially in North Carolina where voters were bombarded with slanderous, invalid, neofacist advertisements until we could hardly take them anymore. For a while, I believed the ads, until I decided to look through the t.v. screen and find out if Jim Hunt was really voting for a federal tax increase at the National Governors Association Conference. After research, I found that Hunt voted on a resolution denouncing current record breaking deficits when someone snapped a picture of him reaching his right hand towards the sky.

Crying is not what I'm doing, I only want to bring to light some of Helms' archaic, and lopsided, thoughts and actions.

Mr. Helms is a vehement opponent of the Equal Rights Amendment, social security, abortion, and certain forms of birth control. He has supported tax increases for the working and middle class and huge tax cuts and loopholes for the rich, while at the same time voting against clean water, clean air, and pollution research. If Jesse is so eager to cut wasteful federal spending, (i.e. Aid to Mothers with Dependent Children, College Loans et.al.), he should stop giving blank checks to defense contractors for $400 hammers and $36 screws.

Ah, but Jesse Helms is a deeply religious and morally righteous man. Do morally righteous people support right wing (or left wing) dictators whom purge their opponents?

Thanksgiving Turkey Takes Its Toll

OK, all you fat-conscious people out there—dig out your leg warmers and spiff up your sweats—Holiday Heaviness is upon us!

The calorie season really began around October 15th when we went home for Mini-Fall Break, and mom made us ALL our favorite meals because, "I KNOW how awful that cafeteria food is, dear!" Thanks mom.

But break wasn't the only problem...16 days later, Trick-or-Treat time rolled around and we stole M&M's, candy bars and candy corns from younger siblings' bags.

This face will no longer hound your every waking moment...Boy George's American Tour has just ended! This may be the last time you see him in the media for at least a month. (Wonder what color his hair will be next time!)

Mmmmmmm, all that caloric goodness without the annoying chocolatey mess!

Well, I don't know about you, but Thanksgiving just does me in!! All that FOOD!!

And you HAVE to eat it!

No wimpy, "I'm on a diet" is allowed during this day-long gorge. Friends and relatives turn on you and wheedle, "Aw come on, it's a HOLIDAY for crying out loud! Have some gravy on your mashed potatoes!"

Then plop goes the potatoes and glop goes the gravy, and they add tons of turkey(white or dark meat, dear? Here, have BOTH.), green beans, broccoli, biscuits, muffins, rolls, cranberry sauce, dressing, (am I making you hungry?) olives, pickles, sweet potatoes, pumpkin pie, lemon meringue pie, apple pie, pecan pie, mincemeat pie, chocolate pie, banana cream pie, cheesecake, Cool Whip, AND ice cream!!!!!! Death by calorie.

Do your clothes still fit the same? If you're a freshman, you might as well hang it up—the Freshman 10's gonna get you sooner or later.

And it's not even Christmas yet...just think, more turkey, more veggies, more bread and more dessert...and (oh yeah!) CANDY CANES!!!

Happy Holidays.

Stillpoint

By Bob Haywood,

The commercial enterprise that we call Christmas has gotten off to a roaring start. The stores are full, we can shop seven days a week, and our list of things to buy is longer than time or funds allow. Yet somewhere in the middle of all this shopping spree there is, at least for some of us, a reality different than that touted in all the stores and media. For some of us this coming Sunday, the first Sunday of Advent, marks the beginning of our journey toward the celebration of the birth of the Prince of Peace

With all of the hassle around Christmas plus the realities of famine in Africa and the constant threat of a nuclear holocaust, peace does not seem to have encroached very far upon our human consciousness, has it? We seem to be surrounded more by forces that make for conflict than those that make for peace. I think we might do well to redefine our understanding of what peace is all about. Peace does not mean the absence of conflict. If you look at the life of the Prince of Peace, as an example, you will find that he is constantly in conflict with the people and the powers he came to serve. He was more a disturber of the peace than one who brought a kind of social and religious tranquility.

Those of us today who want to be "makers of peace" find that in our search for the roots of violence and hatred, we are forced to begin with a journey into our own selves. The roots of global war can be found in the insecurity, frustration and greed that live in me and you. The journey towards world peace, therefore, must begin with a journey toward peace at the very center of our own individual being. If we develop a deep sense of inner security within ourselves, then we become less and less vulnerable to the forces outside that are so disturbing. Such inner security creates a center of peace within and allows us to control how outside circumstances affect our attitude and behavior.

Such peace through centerness is not easy to come by and does not mean that we avoid active involvement in areas of conflict that life brings to us. Indeed, the most effective peace making comes from those people whose lives are deeply rooted and grounded in an inner security. People seek such security in many ways. For me it comes from my understanding of and relationship to the Prince of Peace. I hope to keep my mind and heart fixed on the manger scene in Bethlehem during these pre-Christmas days in the hope that the peace promised in this season will not be destroyed by all the lists and rush of the holiday season.

May you find and be at peace in spite of the hassle of exams and the hustle of the holidays.

Medallion Prize Offered

Joel Smith

Journalism Class Contributor

In mid-February three bronze medallions will be cast on the UNCW campus for the winners of The Albert Schweitzer International Prizes. The casting will be the final stage of the Albert Schweitzer 1985 Prize Medal Competition.

The competition is open to all former and current UNCW students and carries with it a respectable dose of prestige. The medals, designed by a student, will be presented along with a cash prize to three outstanding persons in the fields of medicine, music and the humanities in the only program of international prizes in North Carolina. The award ceremony is to be held in UNCW's Kenan Auditorium.

Professor Stephen LeQuire of UNCW's Art Department said he hopes for a wide range of entries to provide a "better base to choose from." LeQuire stressed that student involvement is the key to this rare opportunity adding that "more than one student could conceivably work on an entry." The winning medal's designer will receive a $115 dollar prize for the effort. Second and third place winners will also receive cash prizes.

Entries are due by January 14 and entrants may submit as many as three drawings. Four finalists will be selected from these. The winners will be notified February 11 and the medals will be given during the awards ceremony, March 21.

More information can be obtained in the Creative Arts Department.

The President's Corner

Eric Squires

This past month the UNCW state delegates went to Chapel Hill to meet with President Friday, the Board of Governors and the delegates from the other 16 public campuses.

Items that were discussed included the harassment of state law officials concerning alcohol on UNC campuses, the institutions, and the roles and responsibilities of the delegation with the Governor, legislator, General Administration and the respective Chancellors. All resolutions and information concerning these items are available in the SGA Office.

Some special concerns that were brought up centered on needs of individual campuses, and the recent trend of destruction by university students.

The individual need of UNCW was SPACE. Space for classrooms, and space for programming. At present the campus is short two classroom buildings and several programming rooms. A classroom building, an addition to the library, a new dorm, and a student support center are all in the works. However, since the University moved into the Union in the spring of 1983, the demand for programming space has increased dramatically. At present, the faculty reservations make up about 35%, the students averaging around 61%, and Special Programs making up the rest. This extensive use has caused hardships for many organizations needing meeting space. Normally, the union has had to turn down around 20 - 30 programs a month due to unavailable space. And since there are only two large rooms available, it is quite understandable.

The destruction caused by students was voiced to be arising from frustration. Frustration from coming to a University and not being treated as an individual. Frustration from the legislators passing laws on our individual rights and morality. Frustration from Universities, being institutions created to help mold individuals, ignoring the pleas from extra-curricular activities such as clubs, organizations and intramurals.

President Friday concluded the meeting on a positive note saying that he appreciated our responses to his inquiries, and he went on to assure us that he would be looking out for our individual concerns.

Culture Exhibited

Tinker Linebaugh

In addition to the library, there are various exhibits and a special resource center on campus where information about other cultures may be obtained.

The Resource Center is located in Room 202-B of the Social-Behavioral Sciences Building and is for students and teachers who need materials for papers or lectures.

According to Mr. Ira Kersh, Volunteer Curator, information is available that may be difficult to obtain in other places. The materials available include books, artifacts, and information on music from different countries. The resource center is open on Tuesday and Thursday from 1 p.m. - 3 p.m. and Kersh may also be reached for assistance by calling 392-4808.

Kersh said that exhibits dealing with different cultures are placed in various buildings around campus since there is no museum building at UNCW, and he encourages people to "stop a minute" and look at the exhibits.

Kersh has been involved with three current exhibits in the Social-Behavioral Sciences Building. On the Pat Leonard, Associate Dean of Students, and the Rape Awareness Task Force is presently preparing a brochure on sexual assault awareness and prevention to be published by the Spring, '85 semester.

In order to ease the trauma which results from sexual assaults, a victim will soon be able to decide if she wishes the incident handled entirely by campus personnel (Health Services and campus police), by other facilities, or if she wants it investigated at all. The victim may also choose to have a female advocate from the Rape Awareness Task Force with her. Leonard said, "It's very important that assault

Every year the Speech and Communications Club holds a contest to come up with a new slogan for their T-shirts. This year, Mitch Butts, submitted the winning idea.

When asked how he came up with the slogan, he explained that he just kept writing ideas down and out of the fourteen he submitted, his favorite was selected.

The University of North Carolina at Wilmington has been designated as one of eight centers being established across the state to improve teacher training and instruction in mathematics and science.

By summer 1985, UNCW hopes to be offering courses for middle and high school math and science teachers in Southeastern North Carolina who wish to strengthen their skills or to become certified in a subject they may be teaching but for which they do not hold certification.

The center at UNCW is part of the UNC Math-Science Education Center Network, a $750,000 program funded by the 1984 General Assembly. This allocation continued and expanded work begun by the 1983 General Assembly which established the network and two pilot projects, one at UNC-Chapel Hill and UNC-Charlotte.

Teachers in Southeastern North Carolina who are interested in learning more about the center or who would like to sign up for courses as they become available are urged to contact Dr. James K. McGowan, director of graduate studies, UNCW, 601 S. College Rd., Wilmington, N.C. 28403

The UNCW Rugby team finished with a perfect 8-0 record, the winningest team in UNCW history. This weekend they won a very physical game against Myrtle Beach, 23-12. Tries by Mike Crupi, Josh Taylor, Maurice McGuire and Middy Middleton put the game away early. Tommy Carter converted twice and had a free kick. Josh Taylor scored later on an eighty-yard run, but it was called back on a controversial call by a linesman. The team would like to thank social members, coach Bob Bogan and advisors David Webster and Mike Sheehan and welcome everyone to the "killer" Victory party after Thanksgiving. Anyone interested in playing next semester should call 256-5161.

"Garbo Talks" Should Maybe Be Silent

Joan Travis
Staff Writer

"Garbo Talks" is a movie about dreams. Dreams are those things that make people strong and give them incentive; they bring people to life.

The central dreamer in this movie is played by Ann Bancroft. She's a strong, independant woman, willing to take action, for what she believes in, much to the dismay of her son and ex-husband. Frequently arrested for her actions against social injustice, she missed her own son's wedding because she refused to cross a picket line blocking the church. It's very appropriate that Bancroft chooses Greta Garbo as her idol; she too was a bit of a fighter. Once Bancroft's character is diagnosed with a fatal brain tumor, she asks her son Gilbert to find Garbo and bring her to the hospital.

From this point, the rest of the movie involves Gilbert's search for Garbo. It's a search that takes him three months, and during that time, Gilbert goes from being a wimp to a semi-interesting individual. Unfortunately,

Gilbert, played by Ron Silver, spends too much time in the wimp stage to make the majority of the movie interesting. He's married to an equally one-dimensional wife, Carrie Fisher, whose only concerns seem to be her bank account and her tan. Luckily, she leaves town midway through the story, to be replaced by a new love interest played by Catherine Hicks. Hicks does a fine job as a bizarre actress type, but her relationship to the rest of the movie isn't made clear. I suspect that she represents the same kind of liveliness and strength that Bancroft's character emanates, and that Gilbert needs to become a real person, but she's not developed enough for us to really give her that much credit. Small cameo appearances by other actors are well done, but seem only to add to the disjointed, flat feeling in this part of the movie.

"Garbo Talks" is interesting, funny, and good when Ann Bancroft is onscreen; for the other two thirds of the movie, it falls a little short. Now showing at Independence Mall.

Thieves Lift Laundry

Edward Troublefield
Journalism Class Contributor

Thursday night was a cold night, but how cold was it. Apparently it was cold enough to bring out some clothes thieves.

The thieves or thief struck in the apartment laundry room between 7:30 and 9:15 pm. Sophomore Lindsey Parker of Greensboro, N.C. reported clothes taken from a dryer.

Lindsey said she left the laundry room for about an hour and when she returned her clothes were gone and someone else's clothes were in the dryer. The clothes that were in the dryer then belonged to Wendy Crowson.

Ms. Crowson, a junior, said the dryer was empty when she put her clothes in. She said she didn't see anything out of the ordinary when she was in the laundry room.

Autry Clegg, freshman, said she saw Lindsey put her clothes in the dryer around 7:30.

Nat Brookhouse also had some jeans stolen around the same time.

Ms. Parker clothes were valued at $400.00 by campus police.

Officer Elizabeth Reid said there wasn't much they could do but fill out a report. She said if the thief or thieves were caught they could be brought up on larceny charges.

This is only one of many thefts of clothes from the laundry rooms that happen. The apartment laundry room is used by many students not living in the apartments.

One way to help to prevent this kind of theft is to stay with your clothes and put your name in your clothes also.

Job prospects for this year's college grads look great, the national association of campus placement officers says.

In its annual survey of Fortune 500 companies, the College Placement Council found the firms plan to hire eight percent more new grads than they did last year.

Sixty-five percent of the companies anticipate more economic growth in 1985.

Even the current economic slowdown won't dampen spirits, CPC spokeswoman Judith Kayser claims.

"1985 will be a better year to be coming out of college than 1984," she affirms.

"We're expecting the expansion to continue. We think the slowdown is health, and the economy will begin to accelerate again at the beginning of 1985."

While 1984's spring campus recruitment showed health gains over 1983, the worst recruitment season in 25 years, career and placement advisors are delighted with the predicted hiring upswing.

"It's good news," Victor Lindquist, Northwestern University's director of placement exclaims. "It's almost like a return to the days of old. Like five years ago, anyway."

Lindquist, author of the annual Endicott report, another survey of graduates' employment opportunities, notes Northwestern's recruitment calendar is booked far into spring, 1985.

"Companies heavily into recruiting are showing up with more recruiters," he adds.

"Recruitment is definitely up," agrees Gery Taneuf, the University of Nebraska's career placement director. It's not so much in the number of companies, but in the number of positions being offered."

The best opportunities exist in computer science, accounting, and electrical and mechanical engineering, where hiring should increase seven percent, the CPC survey shows.

Science, math, and other business and technical categories should increase as well, the survey says.

"Engineering and technology were hit last by the downturn, but were the first to recover," Kayser explains.

Retail and service industries also expect to increase hiring significantly.

But firms in banking, finance and insurance industries say they'll hire five percent fewer grads, while electrical machinery and equipment firms expect hiring to drop nine percent, the report found.

There are other anomalies in this year's job outlook.

Though job prospects in the South recently have been better than in the rest of the nation, Liz Hill of Manpower, Inc.'s quarterly Job Outlook Survey finds "it's no longer head and shoulders above the rest."

People in the Northwest, hardest hit by the recession, can expect a 25 percent hiring increase this quarter, she adds, while hiring in the West.

"More companies are wanting to come here to recruit," reports Laure Paul of Drew University, which emphasizes liberal arts.

Campus Radio Plagued By Red Tape

Mona Franklin
Managing Editor

Walking around campus, the student union, or the dorms, you may have caught yourself wondering a strange thought.

"Whatever happened to the radio club?"

Stephanie Loftus, the new acting-president of the radio club, has the answers.

"Well, we've been having a few problems," she said.

A "few problems" involves a lack of an advisor, lack of a room for the club, lack of a control board, and lack of abundant help.

But Ms. Loftus remains optimistic.

"We're hoping to get the old equipment fixed, and it's possible that even the old control board can be fixed or used," she said.

Acting-president Loftus hopes to be "on the air" by the end of April, or by the beginning of May.

"We'll be on cable at first, but cable hook-ups will be free -- like MTV -- because Vision Cable will be donating the hook-up," Ms. Loftus said.

"We've come a long way, but we've still got a long way to go," she said.

Got a gripe?

Got a worry or complaint?

Let us handle it.

Just write down the problem, along with your name and telephone number (or where to get in touch with you), and drop the note by the SGA office, Room 200 in the Student Union. Then sit back and let the Student Research Committee take care of the problem.

Problems can be sent anonymously, but on each note, be sure to address it "Student Research Committee", and if possible, even put it in an envelope.

Austin and Pickard Lead 'Hawks Against New Conference

George Walker
Editor

The prevailing mood in Seahawk women's basketball these days is that of unguarded optimism. The women are leaving the NAIA for higher acclaim and solid competition in the NCAA's ECAC South Division I conference.

The implications of the move can already be felt with this year's recruiting crop, one of the best in school history.

Seven newcomers join three returning starters from last year's 22-6 team in hope of receiving an NCAA tournament bid in March.

Despite the attention the freshmen have received in preseason drills, the basis for Coach Marilyn Christoph's confidence lies in the production of two seniors, Gwen Austin and Sonya Pickard.

Austin, a laid-back 6'2" center, has a deadly turn around jumper. An intimidating factor inside, Austin gives the defense more opportunities to overplay and create turnovers.

"Gwen's the key," says Christoph. "You can always count on her for double figures in points and rebounds. She is more aggressive this year. How we do will be determined by how she does."

Pickard, a point guard, possesses a fluid jumper and always seems to find the open player on the fastbreak. Pickard is equally adept at picking up "garbage" baskets in the lane. Last season, she banked in a loose rebound to defeat nationally-ranked Pembroke State at the buzzer.

"Sonya's a leader," says Christoph. "The players respond well to her."

After a recent scrimmage win over NAIA power Francis Marion, Christoph raved over the showing of freshmen Phyllis Edwards, Elizabeth Bell and Sharon McDowell.

Bell's size (six foot) will help take some of the rebounding load off of Austin. Edwards, a 5'11" swing guard, is deceptively quick and loves the running game. McDowell is what Christoph calls a "raw talent."

"She's one of the best athletes around," says Christoph.

Jenny Owens, Sue Dean, and Wanda Carroll are three veterans that have seen plenty of action in the past, and will add depth to the team. Dean missed most of last season due to a broken foot. Owens started last season but might get nudged out by Edwards.

Christoph feels the preseason period will make or break most teams. "Everyone has the will to win," she says, "but very few have the will to prepare to win."

Christoph happily adds that "we have looked good in early drills."

Rowsom Sparks Seahawks to Radford Victory

Sports Information Dept.

UNCW, fresh from a season-opening 58-42 win over Radford University, now faces three games in a four-day span as the Seahawks host Coastal Carolina on Wednesday and then travel to the UNC Charlotte Classic Friday and Saturday.

The Seahawks used a swarming defense to smother Radford last Saturday, while sophomore center Brian Rowsom provided the offensive punch with 23 points and 14 rebounds.

"I don't know when we've played better defense," UNCW head coach Mel Gibson said. "I think that effort was as good as any I've ever had here. Radford averaged 66 points per game last season and returned four starters and we were able to hold them to just 42 points."

UNCW held Highlander forward James Cooke to just four points on a one-for-nine shooting performance from the field.

"It was a concentrated defensive effort in holding James Cooke to one of his lowest point totals of his career," Gibson said. "We had six different people guarding him and they all responded well."

Coastal Carolina was 2-1 with victories over Pfeiffer (75-74) and Morris (118-82) and a loss to UNC-Asheville (59-57). The Chanticleers, entering their first season as members of the Big South Conference, play Monday (Nov. 26) at Charleston before their contest with the Seahawks.

The biggest test for the Seahawks in the early portion of the schedule will be the UNC Charlotte Classic, which will pit UNCW against Western Carolina and Appalachian State against the host 49ers in the tournament's first round.

Last season, George Durham and Terry Shiver scored 20 points each in the opening round of the same tournament to upset UNCC 82-77. The Seahawks lost to tournament champion North Carolina A&T 65-54 the following night while UNCC defeated Appalachian State in the consolation game.

"This is a great chance for us to again lay claim to some bragging rights in the state," Gibson said. "It was a big boost for our young team last year to beat Charlotte on their home court and now this year we face another tough opening round game with Western Carolina."

The Catamounts lost three starters from last season's 15-13 team, but they return the Southern Conference's preseason selection for Player of the Year in guard Quinton Lytle. The 6-2 senior averaged 21 points and five rebounds last season.

The Intramural Flag Football Champion for this year is Milwaukee's Best. They defeated Pi Kappa Phi in the finals. These are the playoff results.

Swimmers Improve Performance

George Walker
Editor

The Seahawk swim teams improved on past performances on the way to weekend splits against N.C. State and College of Charleston on November 17 and 18.

For the last few seasons, N.C. State, a perennial ACC power, has shown no mercy against UNCW by winning nearly every event in the dual meet. Worse yet, State's depth turned second and third places into easy points. The two teams just weren't in the same league.

"Our goal going in was to be positive and competitive," says Coach Dave Allen, himself an extreme optimist. "This should give us a lift in two crucial upcoming meets against Duke and VCU."

But things have changed for the better this season. Bill Herring finished first in the 50 yard freestyle, and later won the 200 yard backstroke. Colin Kueny, a senior, and junior Mike Bitzenhofer powered to wins in the 200 yard breaststroke and 200 yard butterfly. Herring, Robert Sealey, Jeff Siggins and Walter Steele won the 400 yard freestyle relay on the way to a 72-41 loss.

Kathy McWeeny, a junior from Jacksonville, Florida, captured the 100 yard breaststroke and 100 yard freestyle. Freshman Joann Brown of Bogota, New Jersey won the 200 yard backstroke. State won 93-38.

For their efforts, Herring, McWeeny and diver Phyllis Wesesku won Seahawk of the Week awards.

UNCW defeated College of Charleston prior to the State meet. First place finishers were: Lani Driscoll, Kathy McWeeny, Joann Brown, Phyllis Wesesku, Kathleen Flaherty, Dee Ann Nichols and Diane Hall. For the men, winners included: Bill Herring, Mike Bitzenhofer, Paul Thompson, Greg Magdanz, Colin Kueny, Jeff Siggins, Scott Stokes, Eric Pundock, Don Hosler, Tim Flaherty and Doug Schulz.

Upcoming meets are at Duke on December 1 and home against Virginia Commonwealth on December 8. Starting time for home meet is 1:00.

Come out and see the Seahawks in action in Trask Coliseum.

Friday Praises UNCW Campus Edge: A Lingering Problem

James Lee
Associate Editor

Saying that UNCW will be research university by the year 2000, UNC President Dr. William Friday confirmed that UNCW's growth spurt will continue through the coming decades.

Dr. Friday visited the campus Thursday night, November 19, as part of a series of regional meetings to inform the citizens of North Carolina about the University of North Carolina System. The program, billed Partners in Progress, featured a multimedia slide show that provided insight into the activities and accomplishments of the 16 campuses of the university and reported to the people how the university is addressing the state's present and future problems. An estimated 600 persons attended the event held in Kenan Auditorium.

During an informal interview in the Student Union, Dr. Friday indicated that most colleges across the system will experience a slow down in growth over the coming years, but called UNCW, "one of the most popular campuses we have." He said, "there's opportunity for a good education here and a happy community. Where else would a person choose to go for their education?"

Dr. Friday lavished the university with praise and called UNCW, "a special place." He stated that the school is "doing all that an institution can do and it will continue to get support from my office."

At least part of that support materialized when the university's status recently was raised to Comprehensive University I. A move that will mean additional funding for the school and create an opportunity for more graduate programs in a wider variety of departments.

He stated that he is against the federal government's plans to make further budget cuts concerning student loans. He said, "we have to get more of our college age youth enrolled in college." As a state, North Carolina ranks below the national average in this area. You can't cut back on funds and increase enrollment," he charged.

Often regarded as the largest single factor in bringing the UNC System to its present level of success, Dr. Friday is scheduled to resign his post in July, 1986. He will then conclude, after nearly 30 years, as the system's first and only president.

"To see the system move from 3 institutions to 16," he said was his greatest sense of accomplishment, and to "keep the university free; a place where students can express themselves and find themselves is what it's all about."

The Board of Governors is currently in the process of selecting a successor and Dr. Friday is remaining a neutral factor in the decision.

Students living adjacent to UNCW will not be forced to alter their lifestyle in the near future as city, county, residential and university officials study options to alleviate the current problems of increased traffic, vandalism, and property values, all caused in part, by the anticipated potential of UNCW's future growth.

Randall Drive, the campus's border from Hardees to the Marine Science Building is overloaded with traffic. Residents and students from College Acres are forced to use the campus as a thoroughfare because of the lack of access that exists between College Acres and South College Road. Also, College Acres is currently absorbing the commuter traffic from Wrightsville Beach students.

The New Hanover County long range plan for the area calls for a thoroughfare the size of South College Road through the campus from Randall Drive to Hooker Road (see map), which would then connect to Wrightsville Avenue and on to Wrightsville beach. Neither the University nor the County Commissioners want to see a UNCW thoroughfare, but because of residential complaints, the county commissioners are pushing the issue.

Karen Gottovi, the outgoing county commissioner, has tried to act as a mediator to get the county and the University working together in order to reach a solution. "We wrote a letter to the Chancellor," she said, "asking if the college wouldn't be interested in participating." A meeting has been tentatively set for next week, but so far, the University has failed to respond.

The administration's sluggishness in responding is due largely to a lack of knowledge concerning the problem. Dean of students Richard Mullendore explains that Ms. Gottovi will "get in touch with someone here to open the discussion. The University will then study

During the course of UNC president William Friday's visit to UNCW last Thursday night, Friday found himself surrounded by curious journalists and cameramen carrying bright lights. His appearance at a regional meeting of an estimated 600 persons coincided with the recent announcement that UNCW will be elevated academically to Level one next year. Friday was under the microscope.

But not for long. Instead of remaining behind a wall of generalizations, Friday spoke of UNCW's future and of his long affiliation here.

"I brought my family here for 18 straight summers," he said. "Were you there," he then asked a cameraman.

Everyone laughed, and the show was on.

When asked if he was surprised at Jim Hunt's decision to turn down consideration for the position that Friday will vacate in 1986 after 30 years, Friday answered, "not really. He doesn't want to work that hard."

Particularly amusing was the moment when Cathy Grant, a Star-News reporter, asked Fri-

Jay how old he is. Before Friday, who is 64, could answer, UNCW Chancellor Wagoner cut in and said, "old enough to have signed my diploma." It went on and on.

Personality aside, Friday thoughtfully discussed the issues at hand. He criticized Reagan's cutback in aid to students, and said North Carolina's small enrollment of minorities would be hard to increase because of it.

Friday praised UNCW's Marine Biology program, and most of all, Wilmington itself. "It's a beautiful, special place to be," he said. "I'll always come back."

Campus life at UNCW leaves a great deal to be desired.

Every Friday evening there is no problem finding a place to park because most of the students leave right after classes are over. This is due to the fact that there are no extra-curricular activities for the students to become involved. Sure there are sororities and fraternities but not everyone is financially able to enter them. Students need activities that will help them to meet their classmates and allow them to participate in social interactions.

The Residents Life Association (RLA) Committee could be a first step, but, out of 6,000 students only 12 went to the first meeting decreasing to four at the second meeting. What is the problem? Everyone wants something to be done as long as it is taken care of by someone else. Monday mornings arrive with talk of weekends at ECU, UNC, NCSU, but never UNCW. Why is there such a difference in our social lives and theirs? With the campus growing at the rate it is there will definitely be a growth in the number of students. The present students need to establish some type of foundation for the future students. There should be some other activities other than classes to encourage students to attend school here.

The additions of the buildings, roads, and parking areas should carry over and have some influence on the social life of the students and campus. These are supposed to be the "best years of our lives" so its time we make them just that.

Wishy-washy Weather

I've learned to dress in four-season layers. I shouldn't have to, but the weather changes from one hour to the next!

I wake up and the dorm is hot. But the radio says it's 35 degrees outside with a 30% chance of rain.

OK...clouds plus coldness equals a warm sweater, a long-sleeved shirt and raincoat over jeans, and socks with shoes. I get outside and it's sunny and too warm for the sweater, but not warm enough for just a shirt.

So off comes the sweater in my car, and I'll wear the raincoat. Off to class.

At twelve I emerge into a cold, steady drizzle. Phooey. It's sweater time. Dash to the bug.

By the time I get to the car...soaked and miserable...the sun has emerged, and I may not need the sweater. I can't be sure, so I stuff it into my bookbag and zip to the cafeteria for lunch.

After lunch, more rain. The ground is all puddled, and a cold wind is driving sheets of it directly into my face. What I really need is some mittens because there's ice forming on my hands! Back to class!

After this one, the sun's back out, but it's freezing cold so I DO need the sweater, but I DON'T need the raincoat. I scoot in the bathroom to redress and undress and I mess up my hair and smear what little makeup remains after being pelted with icy rain. This is NOT an attractive sight! But onward I press, in search of academic achievement.

If I were as smart as I'm supposed to be, I would have stayed in bed, and none of this would have happened!

BUT, it rains too much here, and no professor will accept an excuse like, "Well, uh, you see, it was sorta raining this morning...and well, uh, I suffer from arthritis...no, I mean, extreme hypochondria...and my hair would get all messed up...and so, can I, uh, take the quiz tomorrow?"

Don't you think we need to establish "rain days"? Maybe we could take a professor's regular attendance policy and maybe add 5 days in case of rain?! So, if you were allowed 5 cuts and 5 rain days, you could miss class 10 times!! Sounds good to me!

This would also be a good way to cut down on the backlog of patients in the lobby of Dorm '79 for the Student Health Services office. These people get sick because they've got to trudge around on a low, mucky campus, without walkways...and because the weather changes so abruptly!

So, stamp out sickness! Stay in bed on cold rainy mornings!

And remember, don't take your summer clothes back with you during Christmas vacation...you never know when you might need 'em!!!!!!

By Bob Haywood,

Most of us are looking forward to finishing up with exams and the responsibilities of this semester and getting on into Christmas. For many the shopping lists are already being made and used. We know that a part of the whole Christmas experience is giving, but many already are remembering what a burden the shopping and preparing to give has become in the past. Unfortunately, the challenge of Christmas often becomes trying to stretch the financial resources to cover the Christmas lists. And, unfortunately, too often the joy of giving gets lost in the chore of shopping.

Step back and put giving in a larger perspective. We tend to live on a scarcity principle. We think that when you give something away you have less. The diminishing balance in our checkbook is our primary evidence for this. But in a larger sense this is not true. From a spiritual perspective, real giving is one of the major sources of our receiving an untold measure of blessings. Father Henry Novwen, a contemporary spiritual writer, gave up a teaching position at Yale to live with the poor in Peru and has written much about how his life was blessed and enriched by giving away the security of his job. Untold people tell stories of blessings received from adopting a needy family during the holidays and adding to their possibility of enjoying Christmas. Most of you, if you think about it, can think of times when you chose to give your caring concern in various ways to people who needed you. Whatever the cost of giving yourself, the blessings you received were far more important.

The simple reality is that we neither lose nor are diminished when we give ourselves, our time, or our worldly goods away. I hope that you will not let the joy of giving yourself and what you have get lost in the frustration of working through your Christmas shopping lists. Open yourself to all the possibilities of giving yourself away and you will find this Christmas season filled with joy and peace and love.

the proposal and respond to her."

"Over the next few weeks there will be meetings toward our long range plan, her proposal, the citizen's response and our relationship to them as well as the residents of Campus Edge."

According to Mullendore, "there is concern that students, living in Campus Edge walk across lawns on their way to Hardees; they deposit beer cans on the side on the street and there is excessive noise there at night."

He added that, "on Monday mornings my phone or the Chancellor's phone will be ringing from residents expressing concern that they were disturbed late at night. They complain about litter in their yards and students who are failing to abide by the laws. They are concerned, but we don't get a hostile tone from them. They realize that the students are residents too."

Richard Collins, one of the developers for the Campus Edge Project, does not feel that the residents complaints are fully justified. "There should have been no complaints since the third week we opened," he said. That was when the Project hired full time security and according to Collins, "since then there has been no action to speak of." He feels that much of the problem come not from Campus Edge, but from rented houses along College Acres Drive.

Another Campus Edge developer, Robert Knowles, said that, "homeowners in College Acres lived in a nice quiet neighborhood for a long time. Since then, it has become a thoroughfare. Then Campus Edge comes along and it's a good scapegoat."

Concerning complaining residents, he said, "I've only had two occasions when residents approached me with problems concerning Campus Edge being there and their concerns could be taken care of right away."

He went on to say, "we will work with UNCW anyway we can. We want to be good neighbors. We want Campus Edge to be a classy place. I'm sure things like that occur, but not on a large scale basis."

Both men stressed that the rules of Campus Edge are as strict, if not more so, than the rules placed on students living on campus. They feel students choose Campus Edge, in part, to escape the loudness commonly associated with typical dorm living.

Campus police chief Joe Johnson doesn't feel that students are loud in the dorms. "It's quiet here at night," he said, "but right off campus, it's very loud. Why is that? Maybe it's because we have the student code book. Going to the Dean might be more severe than going to the district courts.

Opinions from students living in Campus Edge vary.

One student, who asked not to be identified, said, "the lease is very one sided toward the Campus Edge management, but as far as enforcing these rules: I haven't seen any enforcement."

Vic Sheffield, an Environmental Science major, said, "It is pretty noisy here at times, especially on weekends." Sheffield, a senior, lived in Galloway and the on-campus apartments. He moved to Campus Edge because he thought it would be quieter there and he says it's a "much nicer place to live than on campus."

"Everyone who lives here is from a family who can afford to send them here. They are not vandals, thieves, or peeping Toms," he said. "I've seen 13-year-olds pull fire alarms here," he added. "Part of the problem might be in their families controlling their own kids."

All people involved: the county, residents from College Acres, developers at Campus Edge and the administration at UNCW have expressed the desire to be "a good neighbor," but so far, they have all failed to come together.

Closing The Gap

The past two weeks, I've had people complain that they don't know what Student Government does. I hope to shed some light on the subject. SGA truly wants to be successful for you!

Student Government is structured as three branches: Executive, Judicial, and Legislative. The SGA receives a student fee to distribute to clubs and organizations and itself to help all organizations express their special interests. SGA's special interest is to make sure the money is spent effectively, to have students control the money, and also voice student views on all areas of operation at UNCW. "So," you say (at the risk of being redundant), "what's in it for me?" While your asking that question, ask yourself what you're doing to see that it does things for you, rather than gripe in your livingroom!

There are approximately 30 senators elected to represent you. You elected them, you control their actions. Well, what are their actions? If I told you, I personally would be harassed for letting the cat out of the bag because not all of them are at their potential. One article is not going to "Close the Gap" between us, so I'm going to print the names & numbers of your representatives. Call them.

Constructive---and I mean constructive criticism--- will be valuable for everyone.

Steve Traut

The "Authorities" of UNCW have confidence in the students' abilities to govern themselves. It says so in SGA's constitution. It says it on the very first page. Even Chancellor Wagoner said it. He signed the constitution.

It must have been quite a gamble, that move. It puts the students in control of about $144,000. In some cases, it puts the students in high places (Our president, for instance, is a member of the Board of Trustees).

Students---that's you and me---in high places.

We want your view! With your support, maybe things will improve on campus to everyone's liking. I personally love UNCW; too many others don't. Our campus has the potential to be academically superior, and to have a major collegiate place in sports if we, as a body, work to make our representatives be more responsible to why they were elected. Clubs & Organizations will improve their performance if more people would help out.

For example, Program Board contracts entertainment for the university. I would say the 10-20 (maybe less) people do a good job, but most people gripe they don't like what is being brought here. Well, it's like this. When there is only a few people available, there is only a limited amount of input into what goes on.

I wish we had a collegiate football team on our campus. The benefit I see there is the camaraderie of the school; the stuff you see at Chapel Hill.

I wish you guys out there would start demanding the things you want and make the people you elect work for you. We all would benefit. Student Government is asking for your help!

I wish us all luck! Merry Christmas!

We are represented by senators who are supposed to be at a meeting every Thursday at 6 p.m. in Chemistry-Physics 114. In the SGA office, these senators have mailboxes in to which we can put our own complaints or advice. We can leave a number and supposedly they will call us back. Supposedly, they will look in the boxes.

In three years at UNCW, I have not voted in a student election. It's a shame, considering that of all the universities in the UNC system, we're the only kids on the block who have such

Abortion: A More Personal View

Pete Morris
Appalachian State

Pete Morris is a writer for the Appalachian State newspaper. After reading this stunning article I asked for and received permission to print it in The Seahawk. If you have a strong opinion for or against this story please call 395-3229 or drop a letter by 205 of the Student Union. Editor.

Abortion. There are those who call the process merely contraceptive; others refer to it as murder. Whatever one's feelings on the issue, abortion is a hot topic.

While the battles rage, with the pro-abortionists on one side pitted against the right-to-lifers on the other, I reflect upon the issue from a far more personal perspective.

"Don't worry about a thing," the nurse advised in a nice 'we would like to have your money' sort of way, "the baby isn't even formed yet, and the uterus contains only some bloody material."

My wife, Ann, and I were in one of Florida's newest abortion clinics. A very unplanned pregnancy had suddenly thrust us into the role of prospective parents—a role that neither of us felt particularly ready or qualified to assume. Furthermore, we were both working at jobs we loved and making good money in the process...social positions that would be greatly altered were we to become "family oriented."

We, like many, looked at children somewhere in the future, along with that house with the white picket fence surrounding it.

As to the abortion issue, we were somewhat divided. While I personally did not like the implications, I tried to retain an open mind concerning the procedure. My wife knew nothing of the "right to life" movement and, therefore, viewed the process as little more than contraceptive.

According to the nurse, we had three weeks in which to make up our minds. "Either have an abortion or have a baby, she offered matter-of-factly. [Although abortions are fully legal up to and including the ninth month of pregnancy, many states have laws regulating clinical abortions—those performed outside of hospital environments—to the first trimester of pregnancy.]

As the date drew nearer, we were haunted by the dilemma confronting us. Some well meaning friends said that "...you will be committing murder if you go through with this..." while others informed us that abortion was "...merely a very minor operation that involved the sucking out of the uterus."

Realizing that we were not willing to make the sacrifices that a child would bring, and admitting to ourselves that we were really not emotionally capable or fully able to take on the responsibilities of parenthood, we opted for abortion.

"Thursday at 5:00 p.m." The nurse routinely gave us our appointment. "Plan to take a day or so off from work, Mrs. Morris," she advised.

The days were long prior to our scheduled time. Few words were spoken on any subject; the issue of abortion was almost totally cast from our conversation. Talk of abortion only prolonged the agony, and the less said about it, we reasoned, the better. We had come to a joint decision after much soul-searching and deliberation. We had made up our minds.

Thursday dawned clear and began as usual. Both of us headed to work, although we had both arranged to leave early to attend to some "special business." Almost angrily we drove ourselves, hoping that unlimited activity would shorten the day and make it end more quickly. It was strangely like the night before Christmas when you're young, and can't wait for the morning to come—except that it was the evening we desired.

Mercifully, our appointed hour came.

Several years later we were to view some rather sobering photographs. The "bloody mass" we had heard so much about was before our eyes...except that something was definitely wrong. From the red, chewed-up pile of unborn humanity protruded arms with tiny hands. Each hand was complete with the most perfectly formed fingers. Legs and feet were also evident in dismembered obscenity.

We looked at the photographs, actually taken of recently aborted children during perfectly legal first-trimester abortions. Tears filled our eyes. No one had ever told us the full truth...least of all those so willing to "help out" at our local abortion clinic.

We just never knew...

How thankful we were when we looked up from the pictures that were laid before our eyes and behind our beautiful blonde-haired, blue eyed daughter. How thankful we were that at 4:30 p.m. on a Thursday less than three years ago, we had changed our minds.

Writing

Tinker Linebaugh

Even though there is presently no sign on the door, approximately 200 students have found their way to The Writing Place, formerly The Writing Center, for assistance since the beginning of this semester.

"Students, as well as faculty members, may receive assistance from The Writing Place," said Tom MacLennan, Director of The Writing Place and Associate Professor of English, "It is not just a place for remediation." Neither does MacLennan consider The Writing Place a proofreading service.

Dr. MacLennan stated that it is usually helpful for any writer to sit down and talk with someone about his writing, and The Writing Place can offer someone to talk with. The tutors work on a one-to-one basis with the writers and try to help them discover new things to say about a particular topic.

The Writing Place is sponsoring "The Writing Place Study Skills Forum" this semester where students are actively participating in "hands on learning," said Dr. MacLennan. The first session, on note taking, was held in September; the second was held after fall break and dealt with comprehending before underlining. The third session, held before Thanksgiving break, focused on how to develop questions as a learning tool, how to ask yourself questions in order to learn. And the final session, on learning to "write in a hurry," is scheduled before semester finals.

Realty Companies and Police Welcome Students

Rebecca Fish

Journalism Class Contributor

In the last issue of the Seahawk, we examined beach life from the student's point of view. This week we talked with some of the beach realties as well as the Wrightsville Beach Police and found that the overall reaction to the student population has been good.

Many houses at the beach are handled by Bryant Realty at 1001 North Lumina Avenue, and by Wrightsville Beach Realty at 1 North Lumina Avenue. Bryant Realty says that student rentals account for about 25 per cent of their rentals. A spokesperson for the realty says that the students are handling rent bills and living out of a dorm situation better every year. Bryant feels that their relationship with the students is good, and they foresee no problem in renting to them.

Wrightsville Beach Realty, which rents about 16 units with three students per unit is while not pessimistic, not optimistic either. The spokesperson for Wrightsville Beach Realty said that they do not view student renters as a problem; that most of the time things are fine. But occasionally problems do arise. Wrightsville Beach Realty's average rent is about 400.00 a month.

One of the more enjoyable aspects of Beach Life.

In talking with students who rent from each realty, it became evident that this slight difference in attitude may stem from several different things. Of those interviewed, students renting from Bryant Realty were far more satisfied with their realty than students renting from Wrightsville Beach Realty. Students renting from Bryant spoke highly of the realty. They said that repairs were handled quickly and efficiently, and that deposits were returned promptly. Students renting from Wrightsville Beach Realty had some gripes. They complained that the realty was slow to get to repairs, and often student requests for items such as screens for windows were ignored. One student said that after vacating a house rented to her by Wrightsville Beach Realty, she was unable to obtain her deposit for no given reason. Only after writing directly to the owner of the house did she receive her money.

UNC-W students, no matter where they reside, generally have a less than favorable impression of Wrightsville Beach Police. After talking with Police Chief Antley, it seems that the police bear no animosity toward the students. The police, it seems, are just doing their job. Although many students would disagree with this, Antley feels that the police do not experience much trouble with UNC-W students. The most common conflict which does arise is that of private parties. Parties at the beach seem to get too large, resulting in drinking in the streets, which cannot be allowed. Chief Antley added that these parties do not consist of college students only but high school students and other young adults. Antley also feels that the relationship between family beach residents and older residents towards the students is fine, the only problem being the parties which often get too loud. He feels that since the closing of some of the beach bars several years ago, the number of tickets received by students has decreased. Antley says that this is to be expected since for those under 21, only two bars, Sgoddars and The Palm Room, remain open.

Generally, it seems that students and beach life are finding one another compatible. With the exception of a few problems, students seem to enjoy beach life, despite the distance from the campus, and are returning to it year after year.

Long Journey From Home

Joe Olson
Staff Writer

Like many other universities in the US, UNCW has a significant foreign student population. Students from many different countries such as Sweden, India, Greece, Austria, and Columbia to mention a few, attend UNCW. One student who attends UNCW, Koling Lo, is from Hong Kong, a British crown colony—one of only two remaining European colonies in China. Portuguese Macao is the other.

Hong Kong will receive its independence in 1999.

Koling Lo is 18 years old and a Freshman. Koling is studying to be a medical technician and wants to study for a masters degree in psychology after she graduates from UNCW.

Koling says that UNCW is "basically what I expected," but feels that some of her classes are easier than she had anticipated. Koling says that "the schools in Hong Kong are more competitive," mainly because they are so crowded. Hong Kong has a large population. Ninety-eight percent of Hong Kong's nearly 4 million people are Chinese. The other 2 percent are British, American, Portuguese, or Japanese.

One of the major differences between Hong Kong and North Carolina, according to Koling, is transportation. Hong Kong has an extensive mass transportation system. "You can get just about anywhere you want to go by bus or train. In Hong Kong, not everyone has cars like they do here," says Koling.

Although English is the official language of Hong Kong, most of the residents speak Cantonese, a dialect of Chinese. Koling, who speaks English, Chinese, and Japanese, says that,

"Cantonese is a more aggressive language; it's more frank than English.

Koling decided to go to UNCW primarily because of the climate and location. Koling says that "Hong Kong is warmer and more humid." Koling considered going to school in California where one of her sisters attends school, but she thought she would like UNCW better because it is near the ocean.

Koling says, "I like American food," but, needless to say, "the Chinese food is better in Hong Kong." One thing Koling doesn't like, however, is the cafeteria food. Then again, who likes cafeteria food?

You may be wondering what students from far off lands do for holiday breaks. Christmas is right around the corner and, of course, the dorms will be closed during this time. Well, Koling plans to fly back to Hong Kong for Christmas vacation. Koling spent her Thanksgiving here, at a friend's house.

In Hong Kong, one of the fastest growing industrial centers in Asia and a consistently popular tourist attraction, Koling worked as a sales girl. One of her hobbies was basketball, but with all her studies, Koling says that she doesn't have much time to play anymore.

Although Hong Kong has its share of universities, the University of Hong Kong, the Chinese University, and the Technical College, Koling is glad she decided to study psychology and medical technology here in North Carolina. Koling, who belongs to the International Student Organization and the Adventure club, says "I like the people here," and looks forward to her next four years at UNCW.

an opportunity. We're the only kids who get to play "Democracy."

But I am certainly joking. We are not children and politics is not a game, whatever the sarcastic may say. By asking, I now know my class senators' names. I also have an idea of what they're supposed to be doing; and, if need be, I know how to get them removed from office when they don't do it. If you want to know, too, call or put a note in their box.

The "authorities" are confident; it says so on the first page. Still, for anything to work well, it has to be exercised. If we do not become confident ourselves, we will end up like all the other kids on the block.

Dr. Robert Toplin, Professor of History at UNCW, has helped produce a variety of historical films. Watch Solomon Northup's Odyssey on December 10th.

Slave Odyssey To Be Aired

News Bureau

On December 10, 1984 PBS Television will broadcast Solomon Northup's Odyssey, the second film in a series of dramatic programs about slavery in the United States developed by Robert Brent Toplin. Professor Toplin, a member of the History Department at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington, began working on the series back in 1976 after receiving grants from the National Endowment for the Humanities. The first program, Denmark Vesey's Rebellion, aired nationally on PBS in 1982 and received the George Washington Prize from the Freedoms Foundation for outstanding historical film of 1982. Toplin has planned eight programs for the series under the general title of "A House Divided."

Solomon Northup's Odyssey is a two-hour drama relating the true story of a free black man who was kidnapped and enslaved in the 1840's. The American Playhouse production is based on Northup's chronicle of his experiences, Twelve Years a Slave, which was published in 1853. Northup lived near Saratoga, New York in 1841 when two strangers tricked him into visiting Washington, D.C. and then drugged him. Slave traders shipped Northup to the New Orleans slave market, and a Louisiana proprietor bought him to work on his plantation. For twelve years Northup served a number of masters in the cotton and sugar producing regions of Louisiana. Finally, he found someone he could trust and managed to send a message back to Saratoga. Henry Northup, a member of the family that had once owned the Northups, mounted a rescue mission and was able to free Solomon in 1853.

The filming of Solomon Northup's Odyssey took place in Savannah, Georgia at historic locations in the city and in the surrounding countryside. Toplin was the Project Director, and Gordon Parks, well-known for several Hollywood productions, directed the film. Yanna Kroyt Brant served as producer, and Shep Morgan was Executive Producer. Samm-Art Williams and Lou Potter wrote the script. A number of stars from stage and screen appear in the film, including Mason Adams (Lou Grant's boss in the television series), Joe Seneca (remembered for his outstanding performance in The Verdict), and John Saxon. Avery Brooks plays Solomon Northup.

Movie Review

Broadstreet: A narrow plot, but good music.

Jean Travis
Staff Writer

A lot of musicians are making movies these days. Prince was very successful with "Purple Rain," and The Talking Heads are about to be seen in a film advertised as one of the smartest rock'n'roll movies, "Stop Making Sense." Even Mick Jagger had a hand in a film this year; one that was poorly received by audiences and critics alike. He helped write "Blame It on the Night."

Now we come to Paul McCartney. The former Beatle is one of the richest men in the music business today, and he has certainly proven that he deserves a title independent of his Beatles past. But, in his movie, "Give My Regards to Broadstreet," McCartney shows himself to be far better at songwriting than movie making.

The almost non-existent plot in "Broadstreet" can only be blamed on Paul; he wrote the story. It involves a famous rock'n'roll personality (named Paul McCartney!) who is getting ready to release a new album. The master tape to the album is stolen, and he has until 12AM to find it or his musical empire will collapse. That's it;

that's all he wrote.

How does this go on for the length of a feature film? Well...it drags, and when it's not dragging, it's busy seem like a bunch of MTV videos all strung together.

These "video" portions are the best part of the movie. McCartney takes us on a trip through his music career. He does such Beatles' classics as "Yesterday," "Eleanor Rigby," and "The Long and Winding Road."

Then he runs through some Wings' songs such as "Band on the Run" and finally goes through a few of his more recent solo efforts.

We see a lot of Linda McCartney, Barbara Bach, and Ringo Starr (who virtually steals the show) in these scenes. Unfortunately, for the best part of the movie, there's nothing very special about these "videos." As Eleanor Rigby drifted off into a pointless period piece, I found myself drifting off to sleep.

Why did McCartney do this? Maybe it was fun—I don't know.

"Give My Regards to Broadstreet" is definitely for avid fans only. The rest of us should just put on an album—it's a lot more interesting.

Now showing at Cinema 6.

Obligated. That's what a Dorm '79 resident (who we won't identify) felt when he walked outside into the raw air of a November night.

Obligated because, before him, a female Dorm '79 resident was violently ill and needed his help.

He helped her to her fourth-floor room and tried to calm her. An ambulance was called.

They waited—and finally medical help arrived and soon, the facts began to unravel. The woman was another case, another statistic. By taking multiple hits of speed, she had attempted to kill herself.

Suicide is the third largest killer of adolescents (15-24) in the United States. Only the over-55 age group is close.

According to Diane McKinstry, Director of the Student Development Center at UNCW, most suicide attempts are committed for a singular purpose.

"They're making a desperate attempt to get help," she says. "They have a magical wish to be done with their problems and don't really look for alternatives."

McKinstry says that suicidal tendencies manifest from people who are in a stage of deep depression. Depression, she adds, can result from many sources, including confusion over personal identity, failures, physical or emotional abuse, divorce between parents and, especially, a loss of a relative or friend.

Everyone has stresses and pressures, but these people have a harder time coping. If faced with what seems to them, endless problems and battles, they lose hope. When overwhelmed with deep depression, suicide may seem like an attractive solution.

Five people have gone to the Counseling center this semester saying they wanted to kill themselves.

According to Dr. Lee Jackson of the Psychology Department, men and women often are motivated differently to attempt suicide.

"Men are expressing anger at themselves and at the World," he says. "Women are communicating a need for help, something society doesn't always allow."

One in three suicide attempts by men are successful, while one in eight by women are.

Jackson says "men use more deadly means than women. You can save someone who has taken pills but not someone who has used a gun."

Jackson and McKinstry stress that 80% of all suicide victims will give a clue that they plan to harm themselves.

These signs include: giving away prized possessions, drastic mood swings, frequent accidents, increased use of drugs, decline in academic performance, and social withdrawal, among others.

If you feel a need for help, or have a friend that does, call 395-3280 or go by the Counseling center in Alderman Hall.

Statistics

- ★12 percent of all suicides are attempted by adolescents.
- ★10 percent committed by the under 20 age group.
- ★Suicide is the second or third largest cause of death among adolescents. Officially accidents are second, but many experts believe a high number of suicides are disguised as accidents.
- ★One of every eight adolescent females who attempt suicide succeed, compared to one in three for men. Males use more fatal methods such as guns or hanging. Females most often use an overdose of pills, most often sleeping pills.
- ★Other methods on the rise include carbon monoxide poisoning, jumping from buildings, car crashes and standing in front of moving vehicles.
- ★Suicide attempts usually occur in the fall or winter, between 6 p.m. and midnight, near the home. The bedroom is used often.
- ★Whites are 50 percent more likely to attempt suicide than are non-whites. Other characteristics of the high risk group include males, urban dwellers, college students and those with high incomes such as doctors.

Adolescent Suicide

The suicide rate among those age 15-24 has grown almost 300% in 30 years

Bit Bucket

There is an adage in France: "Half of France is waiting for a telephone while the other half waits for the dial tone." The telecommunications revolution now underway in France should do more than make the adage inapplicable. By 1987, every French home with a phone will be provided with a free Minitel, a small computer the size of a portable TV, on which one can call up all the information in the phone books. The Minitel will perform other services as well. Newspapers can be read onscreen, for instance and movie and plane-and train-departure information will be available.

According to a New York magazine report, Minitel will even teach languages. And Minitel's mail order catalogs can be consulted, enabling users to order just about anything from the keyboard. (An excerpt from the Washington State University Computing Center News.)

'Hawks FAST START

Dean Becken
Contributor

If playing in close games early in the season prove to be beneficial as the season progresses, then UNC-Wilmington became a better basketball team last weekend.

The Seahawks lost 69-68 in the opening round of the UNC Charlotte Classic to Western Carolina Friday when a shot at the buzzer by UNCW's Hank Harris would not fall.

The following night in the consolation game of the tournament, it was a jumper by UNC Charlotte's Keith Williams at the buzzer that rimmed out, giving the 'Hawks their third win of the season. Appalachian State won the tournament, beating Western in the championship game.

"It was definitely the kind of close-game experience our team needed," UNCW head coach Mel Gibson said. "But I hope we don't have to sit through too many more nights like those two."

UNCW is now 3-1 after earlier wins over Radford and Coastal Carolina, and will visit North Carolina A&T Monday in its next game.

"We really wanted to reach the championship game of the tournament, because our players felt they could win it all, Gibson said. "But after such a heartbreaking loss to Western, I was really proud of our desire to hold off a charging UNC Charlotte team."

Sophomore center Brian Rowsom was named to All-Tournament team after scoring 37 points and grabbing 15 rebounds in the two games. Rowsom, of Columbia, NC, is averaging just under 20 points (19.3) per game and 9.5 rebounds. Both are team bests. Rowsom also leads the 'Hawks in the free throw percentage (.584), blocked shots (5), and dunks (3).

The 6-foot-8 Rowsom scored 14 points in UNCW's victory over Charlotte, but it was Terry Shiver's driving layup along the baseline with eight seconds remaining that put the 'Hawks up for good. UNCC, winless in four games, led for most of the game.

In Friday's loss to the Cata-mounts of Western Carolina, UNCW missed two shots in the final seconds, either of which would have given the 'Hawks the lead over a team that has been given a legitimate shot at winning the Southern Conference. Bobby Jo Springer, who played extremely well from his point guard position both nights, missed a close-range-shot with eleven seconds left. After a missed free throw by Western, Hank Harris drove the length of the floor before missing what would have been the game winner from fourteen feet.

After the A&T game Monday, the Seahawks will host Atlantic Christian on Saturday, Dec. 15. One week later they will travel to Baton Rouge, La., to take on nationally ranked LSU.

14th Consecutive Home Win for Seahawks

UNC-Wilmington went on scoring sprees early and late in the first half, then cruised to a 76-60 victory over North Carolina A&T here Thursday night.

UNCW, now 1-1, outscored the Aggies 12-2 in the opening five minutes of the contest, then scored the final eight points of the half, taking a 39-17 lead at intermission. The Lady 'Hawks, who joined the NCAA division one ranks this season for the first time, substituted freely in the second half. A&T drops to 0-1.

"We played in spurts tonight," said UNCW coach Marilyn Christoph, "we played sloppy at times, we rebounded much better than we did against Campbell (a 71-60 loss Tuesday.)"

The Lady 'Hawks got 21 points from senior point guard Sonya Pickard, who pumped in nine of 12 shots from the floor along with three free throws for 21 points. Freshman Sissy Morse, starting in her first collegiate game, hit 10 of 14 shots from the field for 20 points. Freshman Elizabeth Bell was the other Lady 'Hawk in double figures with 13.

A&T got 16 points apiece from Cathy Grant and Cynthia Greene, but the Aggies shot just 36 percent from the floor, and made just 6 of 18 free throws.

Senior Gwen Austin, who fouled out midway through the second half, snatched ten rebounds, helping UNCW out-rebound its foes 50-29.

The win was UNCW's 14th straight victory in Trask Coliseum, not having been beaten there since the final game of the 1983 season.

Censorship Allegations Draw Controversy

CPS

Charging violation of first amendment rights, the Louisiana State University student newspaper, "The Daily Reveille," is suing LSU for banning all abortion and pregnancy-related advertising from school publications.

The charge is the most serious of a number of recent incidents as pro- and anti-abortion forces square off on campuses nation wide.

At Villanova University in Pennsylvania, the Catholic university's administrators ordered the campus newspaper editor to pull an ad offering birth control information.

At California's Oxnard Community College, the "Campus Observer" staff and faculty advisor were bombarded with protests from students and faculty for accepting a pro-life political advertisement in the weeks before the Nov. 6 election.

And Eastern Washington University students were unpleasantly surprised recently when unappetizing anti-abortion flyers appeared of cafeteria tables.

The LSU ban stems from a business officer's question about the suitability of "pregnancy-related" advertisements contracted by an independent ad agency to appear in a student directory.

"The complaint raised the question, 'Do we want to advertise for abortion?'" explains LSU Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs L. L. Pesson.

"We talked to the student health director and determined the ads were not in the best interests of the students," he says. "The director felt it best to sent students to the clinic first for advice and help, then if necessary, point them in the right direction for an abortion clinic."

But Reveille editor Dane Strother argues including the newspaper in the campus-wide ban violates the paper's first amendment rights to determine its own advertising policy.

"The editor and ad manager should be responsible for all advertising," he says. "It's not a pro-life or pro-choice issue. The administration is limiting the students' right to information."

"The administration should allow such freedom of expression," agrees Villanovan editor Joseph Marusak.

The week following Villanova's ban, Marusak wrote an editorial accusing the administration of censorship and of suppressing "opposing views because it feels its own may in some fantastical way be damaged."

Villanovan faculty advisor June Lytel countered the accusations. In the same edition saying, "I knew the ad was against the teachings of Villanova and the Catholic Church, and I knew the trouble it would cause if it ran."

Villanova students seem unconcerned about the ban, Marusak notes.

The paper received two letters supporting the editor's position, and two supporting the ban.

At Oxnard College, however, too much reaction to a graphic pro-life ad in the "Campus Observer" prompted faculty advisor Gary Morgan's editorial defending the paper's responsibility to uphold the pro-lifers' free speech right.

Students and faculty members labeled the ad "in poor taste" and "factually inaccurate", and questioned the staff's judgement in accepting it.

Morgan admitted the ad was "definitely graphic" and the paper did not endorse it, but the Campus Observer does believe in the precepts of the First Amendment and cannot deny access so long as advertisers adhere to its advertising code.

Birnbach Promoting Addition to Preppy Handbook

CPS

Snugly ensconced in an elegant downtown Denver hotel room, Lisa Birnbach, road-weary and fidgety, devours equal doses of ice-blue throat lozenges and Vantage cigarettes.

Her new perm has failed, and the cold she's fighting is winning.

But while this promotional tour for her new book, "The College Book," is taking a toll, Birnbach is resolutely cheerful and outspoken.

Birnbach has been on the road for much of the past four years, first promoting her 1981 best-seller, "The Preppie Handbook," then researching and promoting "The College Book," released this September.

In the last three years, she has run an exhausting gauntlet, exploring nearly 300 campuses in 50 states for the book.

The results are reviews of 186 schools' programs, environments and student populations, interspersed with charts, graphs, quizzes and essays designed to help students weather the storms of higher education.

While college officials from California to Florida are attacking "The College Book" as a "sloppy, inaccurate piece of work," and calling it "frivolous and silly," the author this month started a national tour of schools to promote it.

Even the schools dismissing her work as sloppy and abysmal are inviting her back, anticipating an updated edition in 1985.

Birnbach, for example, last week handily charmed an audience at Indiana University of Pennsylvania, which she'd condemned in her book as home of the ugliest male students in America.

"A lot of schools that aren't happy with what I wrote are assailing my research techniques and condemning the book," Birnbach admits. "But I have not been disinvited, uninvited, or condemned to the point where they don't want me back."

"I think the book tiptoes a fine line between being informative and amusing," she contends. "It's a fun book and should be read as a fun book. But there are some serious points."

"Everything in terms of values is so different," she sighs. "Money is the biggest factor in the lives of American college students right now. In the seventies, when I attended college, a great job was to work at PBS in Boston. Now, a great job is simply something that pays $24,000 upon graduation."

But a certain amount of direction is good. Birnbach concedes. "It's better than no direction, which is what a lot of us had in the sixties and seventies."

The idea for the book came to her while on a campus lecture tour for "The Preppie Handbook."

"I wrote an article for 'Rolling Stone' about the mood on campuses in the 1980s," she explains. "It seemed like a natural move for me to write the book since I was going to campuses anyway."

Birnbach applied formally to every school on her list approaching each through official channels and requesting time to conduct her research.

Only one school, Washington and Jefferson College in Pennsylvania, refused her request.

Yearbooks on Downswing

Faced with student apathy, money woes and mismanagement, college yearbook staffs this year are finding it takes more than snappy copy and pretty pictures to sell yearbooks.

A number of colleges, weary of late yearbook deliveries and having to bail yearbooks out of financial trouble, now are demanding the books pay their own way.

Last week, for example, the University of Alabama simply slashed the press run of its yearbook to cut losses because it came out late.

The Corolla staff bitterly called the move "a lack of faith in our abilities."

But many of the yearbook ventures seem to be responding by installing more efficient, professional operations.

The University of Massachusetts yearbook staff, for instance, last month confronted an ultimatum to do better or junk its book by bringing out the 1983-84 Index three weeks ahead of deadline.

"Students were getting tired of the yearbook," says John Mooradian, UMass Student Government Association (SGA) treasurer. "It was always late and the quality was bad. And the student fund can't support a late, expensive yearbook."

The SGA, after initially trying to withhold all funds for the yearbook, told the staff it had to prove it could produce a high-quality book on time, and then sell it.

"This year the book is of exceptional quality," Mooradian boasts. "Student reaction has been very good."

Yearbook staffs note they aren't always to blame for bad reaction or missed deadlines.

Yearbooks also have suffered from student apathy, observes David Honnold of Taylor Publishing Company's College and University Division, which prints many campus yearbooks nationwide.

"If a school with 10,000 students includes the yearbook price in its student activity fees, only about 40 percent will actually pick up a yearbook," he says.

"Students think 'Why buy a yearbook when, for the same price, you can buy a couple of six packs?'" agrees Brian Moorar, 1984-85 editor of Kent State's yearbook.

Usually, the combination of high costs and the student apathy caused by poor quality can kill a yearbook without student government or administrative threats.

Diving Researched at Wrightsville Beach

Tinker Linebaugh
Staff Writer

William H. Overman, Associate Professor of Psychology, is presently studying the effects of diving on the memory and learning of monkeys at the Institute for Marine Bio-Medical Research at Wrightsville Beach.

This research was prompted by difficulties which divers experienced a few years ago after diving to record depths. Divers were reported to have experienced tremors, twitches, or seizures, and some complained of memory loss, personality changes, or permanent brain damage. In order to learn more about the effects of diving, Dr. Overman and Ralph W. Brauer, Professor of Marine Physiology, combined their projects. "We have no solution yet," says Dr. Overman, "We're still trying to make sure there's a problem for humans when diving to deep depths." Continued Page 3

Rusty Morgan, pictured above, won the talent show last weekend with tunes from Dire Straits and Paul Simon. Sinclair Williams and Kim Knox finished second, followed by Marcella Miranda.

Christmas--A Time For...

Tina Howell
Contributor

Christmas. Remember not being able to fall asleep and getting up at 4 a.m. only to be told to get back in bed because Santa Claus had not yet arrived? Then at 6 a.m. get up again, run in the living room and see the Christmas tree in all its glory, hundreds of lights glowing and piles of gifts below.

For some UNCW students, this scene has changed little over the years. It may be easier to fall asleep on Christmas Eve, but the anticipation still hangs thick in the air. For Jane DeWitt Christmas remains about the same. She still gets up earlier than her little brother, though not as early as years past, to see what Santa has left under her tree.

"I wanna be a little kid again," says Bret Howell. This is a view expressed by many who's chimney Santa no longer visits. Christmas has not been the same for Keith Rickard since "I caught my parents putting presents under the tree" when he was eight years old. Gifts are still exchanged, but it just isn't the same without the big guy.

Christmas may or may not be the same as it was, but there are still sweet memories of past Christmases. Keena Gower remembers the Christmas morning she received a pony named Porky. She and Porky went to her grandparents and rode all day.

Martha Jane Parker remembers the Christmas she received her first ten-speed bicycle. It was Carolina blue and had a radio on the handle bars. Parker rode her new blue bike Christmas day only--the next day it was stolen.

Well, the time has come to think about gifts for Mom and Dad, to get out the wreaths and tinsel, to put up the tree and turn on the lights. But first, EXAMSI

MINORITY RULE

Joy Fattelle
Contributor

Most students at UNCW enjoy picking up the campus newspaper to find out about campus news, upcoming events or just to clip the coupons in it. But most students rarely think about all of the work and effort put into publishing just one issue of the Seahawk, and that this work has to be done every week in order to bring us closer to campus events.

However, there is just one problem. The Seahawk is experiencing a difficult time in getting students to help publish the newspaper. George Walker, Editor of the Seahawk, explains that, "out of approximately 6,000 students at UNCW, there are only six to eight people producing the Seahawk. This means that these six to eight people are gathering the information, writing the articles, in charge of layout and responsible for getting the paper delivered campus-wide.

To make matters worse, out of the six to eight students producing the Seahawk, six are seniors and will be leaving either next semester or next fall. What will happen to the Seahawk then? Well, that is up to us as readers and students. The Seahawk is after all, produced by the student body as a whole, not by the English department, journalism class or student government, as most students think.

Anyone is urged to go by and assist in making the Seahawk a top-flight newspaper. "There are no rules as to how much time you must donate; ten minutes a week would be great if we could get more student involvement," stresses Walker. "We are trying to put out the best newspaper possible, but it's hard with so few people having to do it all."

There is a need for students in a wide variety of areas, including: artists, photographers, typists, business, layout, writers, and circulation. If you don't think that you have anything to offer, they will be happy to train you to do something.

James Lee, Managing Editor, comments, "People are quick to criticize the quality of work we do here at the Seahawk, but what they fail to realize is that by making such rash statements they are really cutting themselves, because after all--it is the student's newspaper." Any student is urged to add his or her input into the Seahawk; if more people helped out, the paper could be expanded and of better quality.

If you are interested in becoming involved with the Seahawk whether for a couple hours a week or ten minutes a week, please go by the Seahawk office in the Union anyday between 11:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m. or give them a call at 395-2229. Everyone is invited to be a part of the Seahawk.

Editors,

There are several unofficial names for this fine institution of higher learning; "UNC-Wonderful, UNC-by the sea, UNC-Wagoner, (OOPS, did I say that?), UNC-by the K-mart, etc. but I've got a few others.

UNC-Walton Mt. This campus shuts down at sunset, especially the union. The ping-pong and billiards room closes at ten p.m. even on weekends! Last time I checked, I was in college, not a rest home for the elderly. I also love Special Programs for Trask; Barbara Mandrell, Willie Nelson, Kris Kristoferson--my parents are thinking of transferring and giving me the house. Nothing like catering to the community before the students.

Leggo University (or UNC-Dollhouse). This administration is obsessed with gadgets. "The only computerized meal card", "the only computerized registration system". How come we get all this great stuff but we still have "the only two story library"? Lack of effort perhaps? And instead of trying to improve the cover of the future school catalogues by investing thousands in questionable "landmarks" for this administrative sandbox, how about something to fight this suit case epidemic every weekend like a stadium with track and football (Club Conference Champs this year).

UNC-Building Block. Once again the farsightedness of administrative allocations and decision making is illustrated: a one story Student Services Building. Brilliant. Did none of the PhD.s learn from the Union? This new building will be outgrown the second the paint dries. It also has no coffee house or pub (Which would have been nice since Wagoner has omnipotently dismissed two proposals to buy the bookstore for a pub, a maintenance shack was deemed more crucial). What are you going to do when this building needs expansions? Put everything in room 100 with financial aid?

To end this, I'd like to write an open letter to Santa; Dear Santa, Please send Chancellor et al some paper and erasable pens so they can write some student and faculty surveys with tough self-analysis questions on them (you remember feedback, right next to cooperation in the handbook). This would help them come in touch with students and faculty. Did you know the Faculty Senate proposed allocation of funds for a track instead of the landmarks...If they would use these pens and papers, and read the responses I wouldn't be left wondering if the expansion was geared towards the alumni newsletter or the students and present faculty.

Rick Olsen

P.S. Mr. Wagoner, I'd love to chat sometime over lunch but it will have to be between 1:30 and 1:31 because that seems to be the only time I can use my "computerized" meal card at Student, oops, University Union. Merry Christmas.

Stillpoint

By Bob Haywood,

So the issue of the week is stress.

An antidote to stress is peace. This happens to be the season when some of us celebrate and worship the coming of the Prince of Peace. One of his offers to us is "peace I leave with you; my peace I give to you; not as the world gives do I give to you." Let not your hearts be troubled, neither let them be afraid." In giving us His peace, Jesus assures us that peace is possible--even in the midst of turmoil, suffering and, yes, exams!

How are we to attain this peace--an interior peace that frees us from the debilitating effects of stress and enables us to focus our attention on the challenge of our exams? One way we achieve peace is by bringing peace to others--by becoming instruments of peace. As paradoxical as it might sound, if, during the week before you, you would take some of the attention off yourself and open yourself to caring for the worries and stress and concerns of your fellow students, some poor folks in our community or those who are suffering death by starvation, I promise you that you will find in that experience of caring a freedom from your own stress that will multiply the effectiveness of the time you put into your studies.

There is a famous prayer by

St. Francis of Assisi that you might use during stressful times to keep this focus of bringing peace to others before you.

Lord, make me an instrument of Thy peace.
Where there is hatred, let me sow love.
Where there is injury, pardon;
Where there is doubt, faith;
Where there is despair, hope;
Where there is darkness, light; and
Where there is sadness, joy.
O Divine Master,
Grant that I may not so much seek to Be consoled as to console;
To be understood as to understand;
To be loved as to love;
For it is in giving that we receive,
It is in pardoning that we are pardoned,
And it is in dying that we are born to Eternal Life.
Amen.

Extreme Exam Exhaustion

Exams on SATURDAY??!!

Wait a minute now, I thought just the freshmen had English proficiency exams on Saturdays! Next thing you know, the P&R dept. will have exams on Sunday!!

What's even worse is that I work on weekends in Jacksonville and I had to get the weekend off to take a silly exam.

I figure it'll cost me $40. Wouldn't it be neat if I got reimbursed?!! (Sorry, don't know what came over me...must be exam exhaustion!) No, I'm SURE the university would never relinquish money voluntarily.

But have you noticed that classes end Wednesday afternoon and exams start Wednesday night? Whatever happened to the "dead days" between the end of classes and beginning of exams?

I could understand cutting that out if school started late or if there were really long semester breaks, but classes began about 3 days earlier and fall break was 2 days shorter than last year! Five days equal one administrative work week...but no extra time for the students!!

At the risk of sounding redundant...why is there a university? Is it for the administration? NO!! It's for the students!

The exam period seems a lot longer this year than last year, too. I heard THAT was because there were more classes offered.

I haven't noticed many extra classes, have you? Our little schedule books don't seem any bigger! If they're offering more classes, it's sure not the ones I need to take!! Where are all these extras? In anthropology?!

Plus, all the professors are cramming in final papers, final projects, final tests BEFORE finals! By the time Saturday rolls around and my exams start, I'll be dead!!

I just can't take it. Well...OK, I CAN, but I'd rather not!!

So, enjoy your exams...and happy shopping...and don't stay up TOO late waiting for Santa (especially if you don't even have a chimney!). Have a lovely break and Happy New Year!!

Did I forget anything?
Oh yeah...

MERRY CHRISTMAS!!!!!!
(Or Season's Greetings, whichever applies!!)

Terminal Crunch

No, it is not the name of a new, highly-nutritious breakfast food! Neither is it a little-known, fatal disease brought on by frequenting crowded elevators and/or rock concerts. It is the phrase often used to indicate what happens in the computer terminal areas about this time during every semester. It is the condition of not being able to get on a terminal upon arrival at the terminal room.

No one knows the exact cause. It has been attributed to procrastination in doing lab assignments on the part of some students. Another widely held belief is that some faculty members are just too demanding. (Or not demanding enough, by not establishing and adhering to strict due dates for lab assignments.) Some folks have even been so bold as to suggest that the computer facilities are inadequate—i.e. "the computer should automatically debug my program and do what I meant rather than what my program code indicated."

Whatever the cause—you can help yourself and others by shifting the time during the day when you use the computer. There is, for the most part, very little student usage from 8:00 a.m. to early afternoon weekdays, Friday night and any time Saturday. For those of you who have never seen them, Sunday really has morning hours! You could have your pick of the 27 terminals available! Or read the Sunday paper with the consultant!

Dr. Overman's research involves 10 South American monkeys. Each monkey costs $250 and each stainless steel cage, $1500. The monkeys are taught different tasks, which takes about six months; then they undergo simulated dives (with food, water, and other necessities); and then they are retested to see if, how, and what types of memory have been affected by the dives, which takes another two months. This process is repeated three times with each monkey.

In his research, Dr. Overman is assisted by students majoring in biology, psychology, and marine science. The students receive academic credit, are paid, or volunteer their services. "I try to teach the research aspects, but also the responsibility the researcher has to take care of his animals," Dr. Overman says. "The animals depend on the researcher for food, water, cleanliness, vitamins, and other necessities, and I have fired students when they did not take proper care of the animals."

Students clean the cages and labs, keep records of the supplies, are present during simulated dives (at least two people are present the entire time of a dive, which may take days), and give memory tests to the monkey.

"For the most part, research animals are usually taken better care of than pets," says Dr. Overman. The animals have to be healthy in order to give reliable data; and if one animal is sick, he may infect the others. In addition, there are federal regulations which must be adhered to, such as the size of the stainless steel cages, and the temperatures in, and the construction of, the labs. A local veterinarian inspects the labs, and a veterinarian from the U.S. Department of Agriculture also inspects them twice a year at unannounced times. If the labs do not meet specifications, they can be closed.

Bowie Blows The Goods

Twigg ★★

The lights went out on a long, black night. There was a hush through the crowd at the US festival. Then he spoke in understated eloquence, "It's good to be back." Thinking back to Lets Dance it was just that kind of joyful non-obstruction that made that LP so refreshingly personal. Bowie has made it back...and more than just as a survivor.

Up pops 'Tonight' which David qualifies as "keeping my hand in things." Don't bother to ask which one. It aint' that tricky. It's quite simple--its part of the great rock'n'roll swindle. With little innovation outside of the arrangement of 'Blue Jean', Tonight becomes an unimaginative hedge against deficit spending. Bowie should be ashamed!

I've always admired Carlos Alomar, Bowie's support guitarist. His work on the Station to Station album was exceptional. Yet Alomar is not a lead guitarist. Why is there not a lead guitarist on Tonight and whatever happened to Earl Slick? This is the LP's biggest problem. The result becomes an overblown production of percussion and horns that adds little creativity. A voice of Bowie's talents might rise above this mush--if the songs were good. They're not!

'God Only Knows', one of the most beautiful Beach Boy songs from the tender, fragile soul of Brian Wilson, is totally misinterpreted by Bowie's mutilated bathtub voice rising to crescendo. This affect may have worked in 'Wild is the Wind' but the treatment here totally destroys the sensitivity of this song. 'Neighborhood Threat,' one of Iggy Pop's best collaborations is only fair when compared to the darker, more sinister version on Iggy's album. 'Tonight' the duct with Tina Turner reminds me too much of incidental Island Music (Come to Jamaica...the weather is fine, come to Jamaica...you'll be glad that you did).

Granted, with a man of Bowie's talents there are some good things to say. 'Loving the Alien' gets right to the point of humanism vs. the God in the sky pie craze. 'Don't Look Down' is a wonderful Bob Marley treatment of a shuffling reggae beat. A great guitar player could have really brought this song home.

With Tonight Bowie has put himself in a precarious position. Anyone familiar with his other LPs would readily acknowledge that this falls far short. Yet should an artist be judged on that basis? Maybe Bowie ought to take his hand out of things a bit and hire some musicians who will push him to some farther limits. Tonight's sound is much too derivative, the songs too old, and the horns too rich. Most of all there is no guitar sound. How much do lead guitarist get paid for session work these days?

Country

A clash of wills

Joan Travis
Critic

Country is one of the latest Touchstone productions--the adult-contemporary spin-off of the Disney Corporation. It's the second of the three "big" films of the year dealing with rural America, coming out behind Places in the Heart and before The River.

Jessica Lange and Sam Shepard play Jewel and Gil Ivy. They live in South Dakota where they farm the land that has been in Jewel's family for as long as anyone can remember. Trouble comes in the form of the FHA, a government program originally designed to provide farmers with loans so that they might meet their monetary needs. It seems that the Ivys have run into hard times, along with several other people, and are unable to come up with the money to pay off their debts which the government has decided to collect. As time goes by, the FHA claims to have no recourse other than liquidation of the Ivys' property.

Had Country become merely another story of a family fighting against all odds to keep its land, it wouldn't be as good as it is. Writer William Witliff goes beyond the obvious struggle of the government however, and examines the more personal tensions that develop because of that struggle. We're presented with the deterioration of two strong men who find themselves facing a possible loss of their life's work. Interestingly enough, just as in Places in the Heart, it's the woman who must become the strong, dominating character, holding together the pieces of the crumbling family. Lange does a good job in the central role, and Shepard plays his part with fine understatement.

Wilford Briley turns in another good performance as Jewel's father.

Director Richard Pearce has provided Country with a very realistic look. It generally avoids slipping into melodrama which is amazing considering all the terrible things that happen to this family. The film seem to approach the plight of the farmer quite genuinely, and manages to throw a few somewhat successful stones at a government which runs banks that "used to loan money based on the man, not the numbers."

Now showing at College Road Cinemas.

will locate from 5 to 25 financial aid sources for your higher education or your service fee will be refunded.

With the use of advanced computer technology, we offer to the student over 3 billion dollars available in financial aid. A new computerized service has researched thousands of sources of financial aid and placed the results of that research into its vast data banks. When the student completes a Student Data Form the programmed computer goes to work, selecting the right sources for that student.

In the event we cannot find at least five possible sources of financial aid, we will return your fee along with any source of aid we may have found.

You will receive a computerized report stating those possibilities of financial aid open to you. The information you receive will be the most complete and up to date available.

Seven moves in seven years. Because of UNCW's rapid growth and just plain bad luck, that's what the Financial Aid Department has had to put up with.

And now they are moving again. Because of the water damage that Hurricane Diana imposed on the Hinton James building, Financial Aid has operated in room 100 of the Union the last two months.

"We're really looking forward to getting back to Hinton James," says Director Joe Capell. "We want a little stability."

The move will take place over the Holidays. All students are asked to enter the building on the north entrance (S. College rd.) and to pick up any refunds they may have coming.

The brothers of Kappa Sigma would like to congratulate their newly elected officers. President-Chuck Hayward, VP-Stuart Siousat, Secretary-Chris Cornwall, Treasurer-Jeff Dixon.

A movie that was cancelled due to electrical fire in Library has been rescheduled. "Un Chien Andalou," a French surrealist film, will be shown Jan 8 in the Library Auditorium at 7:30 pm.

Mark your calendar for the second annual Dr. Bernard Boyd Memorial Lecture featuring Dr. Paul Hansen Bussey professor of divinity and professor of the Old Testament at Harvard Divinity School. Hansen will discuss "Prophets and Politics in Ancient Israel," Tuesday, Jan. 15, in Bryan Auditorium, Morton Hall.

Swimmers Fall

George Walker
Editor

In the end, the philosophical differences of UNCW Swim Coach Dave Allen and his Virginia Commonwealth counterpart, Ron Tsuchiya, enabled VCU to win a close dual meet Saturday in Trask Coliseum.

Every season, Allen relies on a plan that has panned out again and again: Push the swimmers hard in December and January and use the early meets as tuneups for the championship meets in March.

Allen doesn't rest his team before the early meets—and doesn't allow them to shave down (which cuts down water resistance and times). The Rams, in contrast, were shaved down and ready to go. An easy win in the deciding event, the 400 freestyle relay, clinched the 63-50 win.

Don Hosler, a freshman, captured three events to lead the Seahawks. Scott Stokes, Bill Herring, and Eric Pundock won the 1000 freestyle, 100 backstroke and dives. The men are now 4-2.

The women were at an equal disadvantage against VCU, and also lost, 66-45. Kathy McWeeny won the 50 and 100 yard freestyles, Phyllis Wesesku won both dives and Jo-ann Brown won the backstroke. Kathleen Flaherty placed second in the 500 and 1000 yard distance events. The women are now 3-3.

Both teams will be at home Jan. 9 against William & Mary.

'Hawks Getting Recognized

Dean Buchan
Staff Writer

The ECAC South, the league which UNCW joined this fall, proved last March that it was no slouch basketball-wise when Richmond beat Southeastern Conference champion Auburn in the NCAA Tournament, and took Bobby Knight's Indiana club to the wire before losing.

Now UNCW will try to prove that it is a force to be reckoned with within the eight league. Other teams in the conference include Richmond, James Madison, William & Mary, George Mason, Navy, East Carolina and American.

The Seahawks were 3-1 before visiting North Carolina A&T Monday night, and barring an upset at LSU on Dec. 22, could be 6-2 heading into conference play in January.

The 'Hawks have already raised some eyebrows with their play thus far and have some sports analysts second-guessing their picking of UNCW seventh in the league. UNCW beat host UNCC of the Sun Belt Conference, and recorded its only loss to a talented Western Carolina team in a one-point decision. In its 30-point thrashing of Coastal Carolina, UNCW looked very impressive. UNCW's third win was in its season opener against Radford, a team that took James Madison into overtime last week.

Meanwhile, the rest of the conference has also done well. William & Mary recorded the biggest win so far when it upset Virginia. The league is 16-15 against non-league foes, most of the losses coming from the ACC, Southern and Sun Belt Conferences.

UNCW opens its conference campaign Jan. 5 when it hosts George Mason, which is 2-3 after losses to Iowa and Virginia Commonwealth. Before that date the 'Hawks host Atlantic Christian Saturday in Trask Coliseum, and visit highly-touted LSU on Dec. 22. Davis & Elkins College will come to town Jan. 3 in the last non-conference game until Feb. 2, when UNCW renews its rivalry with Campbell.

Austin Earns Award

Dean Buchan
Staff Writer

UNCW senior center Gwen Austin, who scored 61 points and grabbed 30 rebounds in three games last week, was named the ECAC-South Player of the Week.

The announcement was made Monday from the ECAC-South headquarters in Richmond, Va., making Austin the first to be honored this season in the conference.

The 6'2" Austin scored 27 points Saturday in the Lady Seahawks 95-82 loss to Appalachian State, and scored 17 against both Belmont Abbey (a 76-60 victory) and UNCC (an 81-69 loss). She also had 14 rebounds against UNCC and five of her seven blocked shots last week in the Belmont Abbey game.

Austin, who needs only 129 more points to become UNCW's all-time leading scorer, is enjoying a banner year thus far by averaging 17.3 points per game, 11.2 rebounds and two blocked shots.

The Wallace, NC, native entered the 1984-85 season as a prime candidate for all-conference and all-America honors, being named one of the top players in the ECAC by several preseason publications.

DeLorean Joins Lecture Circuit

Courtesy/College Press Service

Former auto industry magnate John DeLorean is planning to join the campus lecture circuit soon.

Once General Motors' "golden boy", DeLorean recently was acquitted of charges he smuggled cocaine to raise money to bail out his foundering DeLorean Motor Company.

Supporters insist he was set up and framed by the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

Now DeLorean is booked tentatively to give seven lectures to tell his side of the story, says Bill Stankey of New York's Greater Talent Network agency.

"John has agreed in principle to the tour," Stankey says. "We're waiting for him to okay the dates."

The initial tour dates include "primary colleges," but Stankey thinks there are only a few schools that can afford DeLorean's $12,000 to $15,000 speaker's fee.

If he finalizes the schedule, DeLorean's first post-acquittal lecture at Michigan's Schoolcraft College.

"He has a natural involvement with the Detroit area," says Pat Newman, Schoolcraft's coordinator of student activities. "He started his career here."

DeLorean gained auto industry prominence in the mid-sixties as the creator of GM's Firebird, and later established his ill-fated auto company in Ireland.

Newman expects good student and community response to DeLorean.

"There are lots of people who want to come see the famous," he contends.

"People are very interested in how he got into his situation with the FBI."

DeLorean has told his agent the lecture will detail the FBI's surveillance of 90,000 business people, Newman says.

Greater Talent's Stankey confirms that DeLorean's "corporate espionage" topic covers government investigation of private business.

"Government scrutiny of foreign and U.S. companies is a brand new thing," he adds. "It elicits a lot of interest."

Stankey admits DeLorean's drawing power depends on "a certain mystique," and the public's fascination with people in the public eye.

If DeLorean confirms the tour, he will join politician John Anderson, Watergate figure G. Gordon Liddy, "gonzo" journalist Hunter S. Thompson, and Chicago Seven co-defendants Abbie Hoffman and Jerry Rubin, billed as "Yuppies vs. Yuppies: Sixties Idealism vs. Eighties Realism," as a major draw on the campus lecture circuit this season.

London,
Anyone??

by
Joe Olson

Dr. John Evans, one of UNCW's newest staff members in the English Department, is organizing a trip to England. Dr. Evans, who studied at Oxford University in England, is planning to take a group to England next semester, during the spring break: February 28 to March 11.

Dr. Evans said, "there are seven people who have showed interest in going so far, but we need at least fifteen to get the good rates," Dr. Evans continued, "The trip is planned basically for English majors and some English Department faculty members but anybody can go."

For those of you who are interested in going, the tour package, which only costs $1048, will include all transportation, lodging, and breakfast.

If you happen to be one of the lucky people who takes advantage of this trip, you will spend five days in England on planned tours and excursions, and the remaining five days will be your own free time. You can use your free time to travel, to shop, to meet people, or anything you want.

When asked what he hoped his students would learn from going to England, Dr. Evans said, "The main (learning) purpose is to broaden people's perspective of the world and to help the appreciation of different cultures," Dr. Evans continued, "Even though we speak the same language, we have a very different outlook than they do." Dr. Evans is also very interested to see what the students do learn from this experience.

Dr. Evans says the trip will be "a good cultural experience."

On the planned tour of London, Dr. Evans expects to see many literary sites, such as Dicken's Curiosity Shop and Polet's corner in Westminster Abbey, along with, the Fate Gallery and St. Paul's Cathedral, to mention a few.

Dr. Evans expects to have a very good time with the group in England. Dr. Evans says he "loves England."

If you are interested in going contact Dr. John Evans in the English Department, Room 152 Morton Hall or call extension 3326 so that your reservation can be secured.

Dear Editor,
I am a freshman here at UNCW and am trying to start a Judo club on campus. I guess I'm not so much writing to you, the editor, but really to the entire UNCW student body and staff.

My rank in the sport is not that of an instructor or coach, so I am looking for someone with that qualification and anyone else who would be interested in learning this martial art.

I have been out of the sport for some time but am very much interested in starting up again. The problem is I haven't been able to locate any clubs here in Wilmington. I was hoping UNCW would be willing to sponsor or support such a club.

If anyone is interested, please call me: Andrea Arenovski, 392-7585, or stop by my room, Belk 114.

A. Arenovski.

The Seahawk is late. Very late! and we're sorry... but it's not our fault! Honest.

The dumb processing machine broke. Again! So we fixed it. Hooray! Then the other one broke! Phooey! So we're fed up, and bound and determined to get the paper out!

*Bear with us!
Happy Reading!!*

Well, hi! Here we are again...back in school...during the bleakest part of a North Carolina winter.

So wipe that glum look off your face! Here to liven up your semester is Stephanie's Spring Samplings of Things to Come! Meaning, of course, that I've dusted off and shined up my ol' psychic prediction cap to let you know what's in store for us this semester.

Gazing deep into my crystal ball...hmmm...it's getting clearer...ah, yes!

I predict that...

1. Cafeteria food quality will not improve. It will probably get worse.

2. Professors will continue to abruptly cancel classes with no prior notice. Especially true for those with an early class, and a substantial break before the next one. You COULD have slept in!

3. Spring Break will be warm and sunny...except wherever YOU end up!

5. Bookstore prices will rise. What?!!! That already happened?!!!! Chalk one up for me!!!!

6. No new sidewalks will be paved. The gravel walkways will continue to ruin your shoes. In addition, motorists have declared open season on pedestrians who dare to walk along the road in front of the Union. Don't take risks. Or buy new shoes.

7. UNCW Parking lots will be placed on the endangered species list. Spaces are nearly extinct now. Plans for a shuttle bus system will fail...much to the dismay of top administrators. Buy a VW Bug...they don't take up much room!!!

8. Residents of Dorm '79 will petition the administration. This in protest to the renaming of their residence during Christmas vacation. Riots will break out...and national media coverage will be directed towards Wilmington.

9. A rash of pedestrian-bicycle accidents will occur in the dorm area in April. Freshman male cyclists, distracted by co-ed tanning season, will be issued dark sunglasses to cut down on casualties.

10. The housing office will eventually get a new dorm to screw around with. New residents will be made miserable in the semesters to come with a plethora of regulations and red tape.

11. The snack bar will remain crowded. ARA services will continue to cram 200 students into the small midsection and reserve the spacious alcoves to 10-15 administrators.

12. Finally, some students will actually graduate! Commencement proceedings will be interrupted by the film crew of Dino's latest movie, searching for surfers. They won't find any.

There you have it! You know exactly what's going on at UNC-Wonderful this semester!!

Amateur psychics are invited to submit any visions they've seen for UNCW's near future. Just drop by the Seahawk office. Or better yet, use mental telepathy. I'll know who you are!

Women Face Uphill Doctorate Battle

Despite a three-decade upturn in the number of women earning PhDs, a new study shows men with doctoral degrees still far outnumber women in most fields.

Women PhDs, moreover, have a tougher time finding jobs and earning promotions.

The researchers studied academic hiring patterns, and even submitted two versions of a resume -- one with a man's name, the other with a woman's -- for a college teaching position.

"The male was evaluated as deserving an associate professorship," reports Florence Geis, a University of Delaware psychologist who co-authored the study. "The female was evaluated for only an assistant professorship."

"It's a subtle discrimination," she says. "Women are not seen as intelligent."

There are more women with doctorates around to suffer discrimination, too.

In 1971, women earned only 14.3 percent of all doctoral degrees, the National Center for Education Statistics (NCES) says. The numbers jumped to 24.3 percent in 1977.

This year, the NCES expects women will earn 37 percent, or 12,400 of the 33,600 PhDs granted nationwide.

One reason for the male dominance is "self selection," Geis explains. "Until a few years ago, many more men than women chose to go to grad school."

Even now, women grad students tend to opt for certain disciplines.

While women now get a slight majority of the doctorates awarded in English, French and German, they also are "getting a higher and higher proportion of the degrees in other social sciences," says Judy Touchton of the American Council on Education's Office of Women in Higher Education.

"We can certainly say the percentage of women PhDs in the biological and physical sciences is going up, too" she adds.

The increasing percentages are encouraging, researcher Geis admits, but women PhDs still are rare in most traditionally male disciplines.

Despite a 100 percent enrollment increase in law, only two percent of all law PhDs are earned by women, she points out.

"Unintentional discrimination" by university admissions officers often diminishes the ranks of women doctoral candidates, Geis notes.

A Stanford University study suggests college combat discrimination by informing female students when they score higher on Graduate Record Exams than male graduate students.

Such information could increase women's self-confidence and assertiveness, the study claims.

After graduation, however, Geis's study reveals women PhDs are five times more likely than men to be unemployed.

Stillpoint

By Bob Haywood,

What do problem pregnancies and DUI have in common? The answer? Not much except an attitude that we hold towards each of these which is reflected in the words "awww, it won't happen to me!"

Friends all around us are getting pregnant. The media is full of information and statistics relating to the increase in arrests, prosecutions and convictions of DUI's. Yet, more students get pregnant, and more DUI arrests are made. Why? Why do we hang on to the belief that "it won't happen to me"?

We see and know with our intellects about issues like these but we don't let them move down into the center of our lives; for to do so would be to put ourselves in a place where we would have to act. And to act means that we would have to make changes in the way that we operate in the world. It means that we would have to face up to our deepest needs and fears that lie at the root of our doing things that are potentially self-destructive. Sometimes the need for intimacy and the feeling of having someone is so strong that we succumb not only to pressures for intercourse but also unprotected intercourse. Sometimes our needs for approval by our peers is so great that we do not have the self-confidence to say no to the pressure to consume as much as everyone else.

And so when we are confronted by friends who are experiencing unwanted pregnancies or who waltz into the room holding the latest DUI ticket, we employ that very classic and widely used avoidance technique: "It won't happen to me".

Think not that this operates simply on a personal level. We use the same mechanism to deal with the escalating arms race and the possibility of nuclear holocaust. The issues on a national and international level seem so great and so overwhelming and leaves us feeling so powerless that we avoid the issue--"nobody wants nuclear war; it just can't happen, it won't happen".

What will it take to cause us to take greater responsibility for our lives. Does there have to be an abortion? Does there have to be the loss of a license or a jail sentence? Does there have to be a nuclear war? The only other alternative I know is for each one of us to choose to let the facts that we know in our head work down into the center of our lives, face up to our needs and our fears, take responsibility for who we are, except how we operate and to begin to seek changes in our behavior that, though difficult, might lead to greater self acceptance, to greater self-affirmation and ultimately to the fulfillment of our most sacred hopes and dreams.

My friends, it can happen to you. It is your choice.

All clubs and organizations are urged to nominate members for Homecoming King and Queen. Bring nominations to UPB office, Rm. 202 of the Union. Deadline: 5:30pm Feb. 7th!

Business Majors Crowding Job Market

Courtesy
College Press Service

The worth of a masters in business administration degree may be evaporating.

Students now working toward a MBA may not get the kinds of jobs they want when they graduate, and some of the colleges that are granting them the MBAs may be heading for a big fall, the dean of a major business school warns.

A changing business climate and a glut of MBA candidates are the reasons, says Thomas Keller, dean of Duke University's Fuqua Business School.

"The business community is changing its attitudes about the kinds of jobs for MBAs," Keller says. The masters degrees, of course, generally are viewed as good tickets to high-paying, responsible jobs. "There's a reduced demand for MBAs and companies are recruiting at fewer schools."

In past years, he adds, many top corporations recruited at up to 50 schools each year. Now, the same companies may visit only eight or ten strong MBA campuses.

"Certain programs don't get recruited at all," Keller notes. "Only strong schools do. As this continues, opportunities for students will begin to decline."

"Employers are becoming more selective about the schools they recruit from," agrees Charles Hickman of the American Assembly of Collegiate Schools of Business. "They depend on successful past recruitments and schools that can prove they have a good MBA program."

Frequently, he adds, these are the same schools.

"Those who can't prove their grads are superior to or at least as good as the leading schools don't get recruited," Hickman stresses.

And, as unrecruited students scramble for less-desirable positions, their schools become "a bad word that's passed on," Keller says.

The "shakeout of business schools" will weed out programs created when MBA demand began to skyrocket nationwide from 6000 grads in the sixties to a current 55,000 to 60,000 yearly.

Some of the "marginal" departments already are trying to head off enrollment slumps.

"If there's a fallout of MBA programs, it's the schools with no strong programs that will be affected first," Hickman contends. "And they're often the ones without state support or a substantial endowment."

"Substantial enrollment declines will affect total revenues for some schools and make it hard to maintain economic viability," Keller points out. "Some universities use large business school enrollment to generate their budgets."

Business schools provide as much as 25 percent of a college's revenue, one reason 600 schools now offer MBA programs.

But the biggest effect is on students themselves.

Keller stresses "historical hirers are still hiring MBAs," but fewer companies offer the lucrative mid-management positions business students anticipate.

Instead, talented grads often get operating, human resource and line management positions.

"The standard criticism is that MBAs are arrogant, wanting staff instead of line jobs," Hickman comments.

Nevertheless, a MBA still offers the best chance for corporate success, Keller maintains.

"A MBA from a respected school is still very valuable," he says. "Most companies say 'Don't use us as a training ground.' They're not so inclined anymore to hire BAs and train them for two years."

"Despite the ebb and flow of demand, a MBA will always be a ticket to mid-and-upper-management positions," Hickman agrees. "I expect that to continue but not necessarily for everyone who has a MBA."

Run For Your Life!

At the start of each semester, students entering PED 101 have mixed attitudes. Some approach the course wanting to gain the knowledge and experience that will enhance their understanding of the relationship between exercise and the improved quality of life associated with a physically active lifestyle. But, there are others who turn deaf ears to the new knowledge, and complete minimum requirements to pass the course.

PED 101 in principle, is not intended to be a one time experience. It is developed primarily as a knowledge based course to inform students of the importance of exercise in relation to premature development of heart disease, the aging process, and the improved quality of life. The experience should influence everyone to continue their participation in an active lifestyle. Fitness is a building process and once it is omitted for a length of time, the positive effects diminish and the benefits, so arduously gained, are lost.

Students with high self-motivation can develop their individual exercise program and fit it in during their busy schedule. That would be ideal and the ultimate objective of the course. Others however, need a structured program and external motivation. The Health, Physical Education, and Recreation Department on campus offers a variety of activity courses each semester that reduce the consequences of physical inactivity and promote skill development. Students can approach the activity courses as a possible avenue of extension for the knowledges and benefits gained from the PED 101 experience. Some activity courses are an excellent means of attaining fitness, some promote skill development, some recreation, and others a combination of the above.

Last fall approximately 550 students participated in activity courses and last spring the numbers rose to approximately 600. In relation to a 5000 student population, this is only 11 percent to 12 percent of the student body. Where are the others?

It would seem beneficial that a commitment to the benefits discussed and gained in PED 101 be continued in the activity courses. These courses are instructional, competitive at times, a source of lifetime skills, and fun.

So, yes there is life after PED 101, but the quality of life is your choice.

Bermuda Vacation Offered To UNCW

UNCW students will have their first opportunity to participate in the annual Bermuda College Weeks during Spring Break, March 2-10.

The Student Activities Office has arranged a low-cost package to permit maximum participation. "We wanted to offer something more original than the run-of-the-mill Florida trip," said Student Activities Advisor Jeff Steinmiller. "Universities like Harvard, Yale, Princeton and Boston College have been participating in the Bermuda program for years and we thought it might be something that would appeal to our students as well."

Accommodations have been arranged in studio and one bedroom apartments in residential sections of Bermuda. All units come complete with kitchenette.

"Food in Bermuda is fairly expensive," said Steinmiller. "With kitchenettes, it is possible to fix breakfast in the apartment. Daily lunch is included in the College Weeks activities, so the only restaurant meal will be dinner."

College Weeks started in 1936 when rugby teams from Yale and other Ivy Leaguers came to challenge Bermuda players on their turf. In 1948, the Bermuda government decided to take an active role in sponsoring College Weeks and for the past 36 years has set up a medley of activities for the annual influx of young people.

Cost per person from Baltimore is $435 including roundtrip air, seven nights accommodation, transfers, taxes and gratuities. A $50 deposit is required with the balance due 30 days before the March 2 departure.

Air fare to Baltimore is $120. Charter bus transportation is $40-$80 depending on the number of travellers.

To students jaded by a cold winter, stuffy classrooms and an academic routine, Bermuda has become synonymous with escape to pink beaches and sunshine and provides a chance to make new friends. Tradition is also part of the appeal.

"Many students are members of a second generation. If their parents had a good time here, they feel comfortable about their children coming," says Francis Purvey of the Department of Tourism and regular master of ceremonies throughout College Weeks.

Bermuda is on roughly the same latitude as Wilmington and the March weather can be unpredictable. "Last year, March was mostly sunny," said Steinmiller, "and the water temperature is always between 68 and 75 degrees. The activities are designed to give everyone a great time whatever the weather."

"The theme for the College Weeks is Spring break socializing in a community that gets in the spirit of your good time," Steinmiller said. "It appears to be a heck of a vacation."

Those interested in participating should contact Jeff Steinmiller, Student Activities Office, Room 202 of the Union at 395-3827.

'Hawk Women Awaken ECAC South

Dean Buchan
Staff Writer

UNCW's ECAC South women's basketball opponents must feel that the Lady Seahawks are wearing out their welcome in their new league.

After all, this is UNCW's first year in NCAA Division One, coming off a history in the NAIA. It (UNCW) is not supposed to do well in its first year here, opponents must be saying.

But the Lady 'Hawks are doing well. After a 76-63 win last Saturday against Richmond they are riding a 4-game winning streak, their longest of the season. The win over Richmond, which was UNCW's only game last week, improved its record to 4-1 in the ECAC South, in second place.

UNCW has now beaten conference foes William & Mary, George Mason, American, and Richmond, but has to play highly touted George Mason and East Carolina twice each. Those will be key games for the Lady 'Hawks, who will play in the ECAC South Tournament the first weekend in March in Richmond, Virginia.

Along with the wins for UNCW have come the honors. Senior center Gwen Austin has been named conference player of the week three times this season, her latest coming two weeks ago. Austin, from Wallace, NC, has an excellent shot right now of being named Player of the Year in the ECAC South. Austin leads the league in scoring (19.8 ppg) and rebounding (12.8 rpg). In a head-to-head confrontation with the league's second leading scorer, Richmond center Karen Elsner, Austin scored 18 points and grabbed 18 rebounds. Elsner fouled out with 15 points and 11 rebounds.

The future of the UNCW women's program looks bright after two freshmen--Phyllis Edwards and Elizabeth Bell--were named ECAC South Rookie of the week in consecutive weeks. Edwards, a 5'10" forward from Whiteville, played a big role in three UNCW wins two weeks ago to earn her honor, while Bell poured in 20 points and grabbed eight rebounds against Richmond to be named the latest Rookie of the Week.

Baseball Schedule Set

Brooks Field, home of the UNCW baseball team, will be a busy place from February 23-March 23, as the Seahawks begin their season with 25 straight home games.

The 55-game schedule is the biggest in school's history, and will include 18 games with opponents from the ECAC South, which UNCW joins this year. Also on the agenda is 12 games with Atlantic Coast Conference teams North Carolina, N.C. State, Clemson, Maryland and Wake Forest. Both North Carolina and N.C. State won over 30 games last spring.

UNCW, which went 22-26 last season with a youthful roster, opens the season February 23 against Old Dominion of the Sun Belt Conference in the first of 25 straight at home. The Seahawks will also host Purdue of the Big 10, Florida Atlantic, Eastern Kentucky, Vermont, and Salisbury State of Maryland. Games with regional foes Campbell and Atlantic Christian are also on the schedule.

A preview of the Seahawks can be found in the near future in the Seahawk. Listed below is the February and March 1985 schedule:

Seahawks End Slump

by
Dean Buchan
Staff Writer

UNCW's record dipped below the .500 level for the first time this season as the Seahawks dropped a 68-64 ECAC-South decision to James Madison in Trask Coliseum last Saturday.

UNCW (7-8, 2-5) saw the Dukes move ahead in the ECAC-South standings after a 14-2 scoring spurt midway through the second half turned a 46-46 score into a 60-48 margin.

The Seahawks fought back, led largely by reserve guard Sandy Anderson's 18 points on nine-for-10 shooting from the field, but they could get no closer than the final margin of four points.

The win pushed JMU into fifth place just ahead of the Seahawks. Navy leads the league, followed by Richmond, William & Mary, George Mason, JMU, UNCW, East Carolina, and American.

The Seahawks must now hit the road to face Richmond before playing their first non-conference game since Dec. 22 when they face Campbell on Saturday.

"We simply played a brutal schedule in January," UNCW head coach Mel Gibson said.

"We played eight straight ECAC-South games, including four against the top two teams--Navy and Richmond--as well as playing the rest of the upper division members of the league.

"But we did not respond to the challenge, especially after winning our opening league game against George Mason and going 6-3 at that time. We have not played aggressive basketball, and we've been very inconsistent. I only hope we can survive this month and keep improving this season because we still have a lot of untapped talent on this team.

'Hawks Face ECU

UNCW, losers of two home ECAC South games last week, renew an old rivalry with ECU this week.

The Seahawks, 7-8 overall and 2-5 in the ECAC South, lost home duels with Navy and James Madison last week. The 'Hawks were scheduled to visit Richmond on Wednesday and Campbell on Saturday.

This would be a good time for UNCW to take advantage of long-time rival ECU, as the Pirates are in a rebuilding situation.

ECU, which is 5-7, is led by All-conference candidate Curt Vanderhorst of Fayetteville. The Pirates lead the series 14-5, and the series is bigger than ever because both teams are in the ECAC South. ECU has lost to Duke, Wake Forest, and Tulsa, among others. The game is set for Thursday night, at 8 p.m., in Trask Coliseum. Home Team Sports will provide the telecast on cable.

Movie Review

Joan Travis
Critic

Suppose the United States Government sent out an invitation to all life forms in the universe to visit the planet Earth, and something actually showed up. According to "Starman", the new visitor would find a few strings attached to this friendly greeting. Not only do government officials decide that the alien must be captured for scientific study, but they also come to the conclusion that it's best to shoot first and ask questions later.

In this somewhat familiar tale, Jeff Bridges plays the "ET" character. He's always been a pretty likeable guy, faring well in such movies as "Against All Odds," and he's equally likeable here. Bridges manages to create a kind of Jerry Lewis meets Charles Ingalls character, and he does it fairly well. Landing on widowed Karen Allen's doorstep, he assumes the appearance of her dead husband. Allen, who still looks about sixteen hasn't had a really good role since "A Small Circle of Friends" and "Raiders of the Lost Ark". Here she does a good job with a rather limited role. Rounding out the list of lead characters is Charles Martin Smith as the simple humane government official. I enjoyed watching him in "More American Graffiti", but he's pretty forgettable in this.

"Starman" was directed by John Carpenter, best known for his classic horror film "Halloween". While he doesn't cover any new ground in this movie, he does manage to keep it likeable. This may be due to the fact that rather than turning to a lot of special effects to get the job done, Carpenter keeps things on a more humane level. The few special effects that are used won't amaze anyone, and the storyline has a few loopholes, but as a simple tale of love and fantasy "Starman" does O.K. Now showing at Cinema 6.

Skateboarding Gets Technical

Is skateboarding a fad? Most of us have seen the sport come and go at least three times in our lives. If it is a fad I'll say it's a long lived one, that will probably never die.

The only equipment a skateboarder once needed, was the skateboard, of course, and a flat, preferably smooth surface. Then came the skateboard parks with large cement mounds and deep round bowls, which look like large craters. Along with these more daring surfaces came helmets and pads to insure safety.

With the closing down of Wacky Skateboard Park, a few months ago, and also the last of the Wilmington area, skaters had to find a new place to ride.

If you are a true blue rider you may be aware of the many homebuilt ramps in private backyards. The structure usually consists of two by four boards for support, with sheets of plywood stretched across and curving upwards into a ninety degree angle.

Some people may still ride skateboards for transportation, though usually they are only ridden for recreation. A friend of mine who operates six projectors at a local theatre, uses his skateboard for transportation to and from each projector to save time. "I can get around upstairs so much faster if I have my skateboard," says Mickey Ramsey.

With the latest popularity of wide boards being purchased we may once again see an abundance of skateboarders around. If we do not however, take note that they are still lurking in backyards around the city, waiting for the time to show face once again on our public sidewalks and streets. Happy skateboarding!!!!

Explaining Tipping Techniques To Cheapskates

Tipping is not a foreign word to most of us. If, by chance, it is to someone out there, then tipping is the courtesy paid to a server by money for a particular service. Usually, this term is used by waiters or waitresses. As many of the students here at UNCW go to school, they also occupy positions as a waiter or waitress at a local restaurant. The tips they get from the customers are usually the main source of their money to live day to day on. Here are some of the ways these servers go about handling the tips they get.

Servers at Quincy's Family Steak House are paid $2.01 per hour, but must claim $1.50 for every hour they work that night on a tip card and on a computerized time clock. The average tip for a server that works five hours a night is $4.00 per hour.

On a weekend night that may jump to $6.00 per hour. The server may keep the money herself or split it with another server's tips on an adjacent section.

Like Quincy's, Annabelle's where the servers are also paid $2.01 per hour. But the server must claim 8 percent of what he or she sells, according to Joy Futrelle, a waitress at Annabelle's. The average tip there is about the same as Quincy's, with the exception of a few more dollars on the weeknights.

The third restaurant surveyed was the Bridgetender. According to Woody Duke, one of the managers, the servers have a system called the "Kiddie system." This is when the servers collect their tips and divide them up according to how many hours each waitress has worked that night or week.

Looking at these three restaurants and how the waiters/waitresses manage their tips should give a better understanding of the importance of that amount of money left on the table by the patron. Stop to think of how the server is making their living. Who knows, you may be that waiter/waitress counting your tips to live on. Don't be a spendthrift, but don't be cheap!

Fire Trucks have paid many visits—mostly false alarms and minor incidents—to UNCW this year and last semester.

Slim Body--Slim Wallet

Nancy Rickard
Special to The Seahawk

Gina Lubons wanted to shed a few pounds and find that "natural high" that the smiling, tanned, enormously built weight trainer promised she could do. "After only eight weeks we'll have you slim, trim, and feeling fine", he said.

After eight weeks at the fitness center, Gina was contractually libel for $375 and lost only three pounds. "I don't look slim and trim, and I don't feel great because I never go work out. It's too crowded in there. You wait ten minutes for a machine and then everyone's watching you and tapping their feet waiting for you to finish. Now, I pay this monthly bill for something I never use."

Gina like many others, was enticed by the promises and visions of having that sleek, well defined body that adorns the glamore and fashion magazines. She longed to be that girl on the beach on whom all eyes couldn't resist. Gina, however, became another victim of the "slim industry".

How do the fitness centers in our area compare? Are their services worth the price you pay? Obviously, the best way to find out is to visit the facility, but to give you a head start, here are some basic services and prices offered on our area.

Atlantic Nautilus Fitness Center, located, at 3520 South College Rd. offers free weights, nautilus equipment, aerobics, saunas, a hot tub, locker rooms with showers, and will soon provide indoor tanning services (for an extra fee). Their fee is $250 per year, $175 for the student year (September through May), and $175 for use before 2:00 p.m. only. Payments must be made within sixty days.

The Body Exchange in the Northwood Shopping Center offers some fitness machines, aerobics classes, and a sauna. The fee is $20 per month.

Elaine Powers figure Salon of 2232 South 17th St. has some machines and offers aerobic classes. Their charge is $54 per six months.

The Spa Health Club at 4620 Oleander Dr. offers free weights, nautilus equipment, aerobics classes, dance classes, saunas, a whirlpool, swimming pool, and locker and shower facilities. Their fees are based on monthly payments of varying amounts depending on the amount of the down payment. A contract must be signed at this facility.

Studio 10-Fitness Center at Hanover Center offers aerobics classes for $3 per visit, or $30 per month.

At Wrightsville Beach, The Crest Fitness Center has free weights, nautilus equipment, aerobic and dance classes, saunas, and locker and shower facilities. Their fee is $27.50 per month after a $50 down payment. A contract must be signed and bank draft is available.

When considering a fitness center, it is recommended that you determine your needs as far as facilities and programs are concerned as well as location, convenience, and cost. Then, go to the facility and participate in a trial run (at the time of day that the facility would be used most). This will enable you to judge the traffic flow at the time that you will be there.

Finally, remember that if your schedule or workload fluctuates significantly from month to month, you may want to choose a facility that can accommodate those changes in your workout schedule.

La Machine!!!

The Seahawk is expanding--in more ways than one--with the recently approved allocation of $16000 for a new Apple laser computer.

The computer will replace the current Compugraphic typesetter and processor that have plagued the newspaper with production stoppages throughout the school year.

"The machines we have now are about kaput," says editor George Walker. "Every time we get a little momentum up, something konks out on them."

Walker points out that the Compugraphic machines have cost the paper over $2000 in lost revenue and three editions, two last semester and one this year. Besides being undependable, the machines are very costly to rent and maintain.

But once the 1985-86 school year begins, the new laser computer should change this. The SGA voted last week to allot $7000 to the computer, leaving the Seahawk to cover the remaining $9000.

The new computer will provide many services--such as storage, access to wire services, and neater layout techniques--that the Compugraphic machine could not handle.

Though unhappy with staff shortages and mechanical problems of the last year, Walker says there have been bright spots.

"We have a solid business base down," he says. "Advertising is looking good: When I started last May, we were $200 in the red; now are able to buy this computer. The people who have contributed to the paper this year will be leaving it in a lot better shape than when they started."

...Learning Your Library

Mona Franklin
Associate Editor

The Seahawk is going to start a bimonthly article entitled Learning Your Library to help increase student awareness of certain services the William Madison Randall Library provides. There's more to the library than books and a card catalog--and that is just what this article will be focusing upon.

Ran Library has a section of books reserved for recreational reading. Now this doesn't mean only PE and Recreation majors can check these out. This section is for everyone, and chances are, the very book you've been looking for is in this section.

Books in the recreational reading section are marked with a red strip of tape on the back binding. In the card catalog, these books are marked with a red strip also. This strip usually is placed on the top of the card. When you look up a book in the card catalog and see this red strip, you will then know it is not in the general collection, but in the recreational reading section.

The recreational reading section is located on the right rear wall of the first floor. Just look between the periodical desk and the magazine racks, and you should see the shelves of red stripped books. If you have

Homecoming's Happenin'!

Hey! We just found out that Homecoming will be held on Feb. 9th! They told us Feb. 4th!!

That's what I like most about UNCW...the tremendous amount of long-range planning and plethora of publicity for university-sanctioned events!

They SHOULD have told us weeks ago! No one knew that this weekend would be semi-important, so everyone's going home...on Homecoming no less!!!

If officials are going to keep up this surprise announcement tradition annually, then WE should change the contest just a bit...to keep them guessing! OK, ready?

The Seahawk proudly presents...the 1986 Homecoming Queen! You vote for the gal who's gone home EVERY weekend and made the fewest friends! Wow!! Revolutionary!!! Instead of the same old popularity contest, (the most votes win) UNCW will break new pageant ground...the fewest votes means the fewest friends--and a winner!

Of course, the queen WILL have to be crowned in absentia, since she'll be home that weekend! Do you want to know a little more about her since you'll never meet?

Well...her name is something like Ann Smith, or perhaps Janet Jones, and she REALLY like high school! So much, in fact, that she visits her old teachers every Friday as soon as she zips into town.

Her lifelong goal is to marry the boy next door, so he can go to work for her father. She'll get pregnant during her first year of marriage, and have four kids. She won't need her degree! (If she stays long enough to build up the credits, that is!)

The only problem this concept presents is the nominations phase. If you can think of a homebody's name for the ballot, then they've hung around campus too much and are hereby disqualified!

Maybe we could set up a VAX computer scan to determine the most apron-string-tied student. This would eliminate the fuss and muss of having to traipse down for voting...especially the way it's been raining lately.

Hey! Let's change it EVERY year while we're at it! That'll really keep the administration bewildered!!

Ready?

The Seahawk proudly presents...the 1987 Homecoming Queen! You see, the girl that fixes the most pipes wins, and we'll hold a pipe rally and eat apple pipe! And then the next year....

Stillpoint

By Bob Haywood,

I watched the story of Robert Kennedy this week and wept yet one more time over how we went about killing our hero. Most of you who are students now have no memory of John and Robert and Martin Luther King. I do. I'm not interested in naive or cynical political analysis. I am not political savvy enough nor informed about how image meshed with reality.

But I was part of it all. The 60's stirred me then, called me forth and led me to put my body where my mind said it should be. Many look back at the activism with a kind of half-embarrassed shake of the head. Not me. A large part of my integrity was shaped there and I rely on those memories to this day.

Whatever the mythological character of those Camelot years, those "I have a dream" years, there is no denying that the tide of racism was stemmed if not fully overcome and the beasts of war were brought to a bloody halt if only for a while by people who became our heroes because they called forth the best in us so that we who saw the bloated of Birmingham, Watts and the Tet Offensive ultimately said "No More". The issues then of racism and war loomed just as great and awesome as now but we were not deterred. As sad and angry as I became, I never loved my country or trusted the democratic process more.

Besides the hope that is nourished most deeply by the springs of my faith in God, the only hope I have that relates to my country lies rooted deeply in the stories of King and Kennedy's. It lies no at all in your current nationalism which only masks as patriotism, insisting the enemy is Them and avoiding any kind of serious commitment to change at all costs.

So when I see these movies and the images resurfaced during Black History Month, they don't do a lot for me in themselves, but they do trigger the home movies of my mind and my heart is stirred once again by a time that once was and leaves me hoping that such a time shall one day exist again.

Are there no causes that call you forth? No images of hunger, no US supported terrorism that can get through to you to stir you to the point of saying "I must do something"? We made a difference. You could make a difference again.

Protests on the Rise

Courtesy/College Press Service
"Nothing happens in the winter," lamented Dumisani Kumalo of the American Committee on Africa (ACA), referring to the scarcity of student protest against South African racial segregation during the beginning months of 1983.

But now, in the dead of winter, the student anti-apartheid movement has suddenly heated up, surprising even movement leaders.

Fueled by Jesse Jackson's ongoing anti-apartheid crusade, South African Bishop Desmond Tutu's recent winning of the Nobel Peace Prize, numerous marches on U.S.-based South African diplomatic offices, and the arrests of some 200 protestors since late November, 1984, the campus South African movement is going strong, leaders report.

"A lot more students, because of the media attention South Africa has been getting among the general public, are suddenly becoming aware and interested in stopping apartheid," notes Joshua Nessen, ACA student coordinator.

Nessen, who in the past has tried to spread the word by associating it with more highly-publicized causes like the anti-nuclear movement, thinks he may have turned a corner.

"You know the campus movement is gaining momentum when, in the midst of Christmas vacation at Berkeley, you have 1,000 students marching on the administration building, locking arms, and demanding divestiture," he says.

Indeed, in just the last several weeks students on dozens of campuses across the country have protested the plight of the black majority in South Africa, demanding that their colleges stop investing in U.S. companies which do business with the white supremacist government there.

During the December 7th march at Berkeley, for instance, 38 students were arrested as over 1,000 protestors encircled the administration building for three hours.

The day before, several hundred University of Maryland-College Park students, locked out of a planned sit-in at the administration building, boarded buses and marched on system President John Toll's office to protest the system's $6.3 million in South African-tied investments.

Likewise, a group of University of Texas students chanting "Board of Regents, you can't hide, we charge you with genocide," protested outside a recent board of regents meeting demanding the UT system sell its estimated $600 million in South African-linked stock holdings.

And in a somewhat more radical tactic, 12 members of Oberlin College's Student Coalition Against Apartheid tried unsuccessfully to shut down the campus computer system and hold it hostage until the school sold off its $30 million in South African-tied companies.

Accustomed to a regular, organized series of student protests during the warmer, spring months, this winter's spontaneous uprisings have caught even anti-apartheid activists by surprise.

"I don't think and of us expected (the campus protests) to be this big at this time," Nessen reveals. "I don't know what would have happened at Berkeley, for instance, without the national focus given the issue by people like Tutu and Jackson."

The President's Corner

Eric Squires

There is a dream. It began over two years ago when Paul Bell, the current Vice President, and myself sought to take office. The dream centers on a responsible government with growing clubs, new organizations, and more service for the general student.

So far, this dream has been blocked by greed and self-serving interest groups located in our student senate. These senators seem to seek office for the glory of their resumes, while at the same time protecting the private interest of the club or organization to which they belong. This has proven to stifle almost any effort the Executive Office has had to improve the general student life on this campus.

Now in all honesty there are quite a few senators who have tried to look out for the general student. And one may even look past the accomplishments of the Executive Office over the past two years, and say that we didn't try hard enough. To them I say, "Fine." I'm not going to dwell in the past, but I will be ----ed if I'm not going to voice my opinions about the present, and fight for what the students need.

It's true that the SGA has over 25 clubs that it funds on a continual basis, but the clubs have already received their budgets for this year. That means there is money that is sitting in the general fund and it is not being utilized. I'm speaking of thousands of dollars. Why should we hold on to this money for clubs that have already been funded?

Why, if these senators spent half the time on raising revenue as they do on blocking other's proposals, they'd have enough money for their clubs. Clubs, mind you, that are generally not raising the revenue they said they would in the first place! Maybe these delinquent clubs just need to have their funds frozen to understand that this is a serious matter, because anything that shortchanges the students is!

So what is stopping us? A select group of special-interest senators who through parliamentary procedure and idle gossip undermine the efforts of those working for your interest. But the tide is changing and people are waking up.

The Executive Office, along with some really good-hearted and hard working senators, is presently making a list of university needs. Needs that directly have an impact on student life. Examples would be: lights for the resident life area; electric typewriters for the library; a piano for the Union; more concerts for the University community; video equipment for our barren studios; and a campus radio station for student and community awareness. And I'm sure there is more. GIVE US A CALL! 395-3553.

With these new efforts, more input from the general student body, new revenue requirements, and the changing of old attitudes and prejudices, the dream can become a reality for everyone. For the good guys, it will be a time of prosperity and good will toward the general student. For the bad guys, with all their old attitudes, it will be a nightmare.

Computer Market Flooded

When 19-year old William Green enrolled at the University of Texas last year, he majored in computer programming "because I enjoy working with computers, the job market looked good, and there were opportunities for making a very good salary."

Since then the number of students entering the computer science curriculum has been like an "explosion," Green says. "Classrooms are overcrowded, you can hardly get time on the computer system, and just this semester I had to take a higher level course than I wanted because everything else was full or not offered."

And now his job hopes may be fading, too. The very "explosion" of computer programming majors which is hampering Green's education also threatens to glut the job market when he graduates, turning his one-time ticket to job security into a one-way pass to the unemployment office.

It's happening on campuses nationwide.

Coupled with a new interest in computer courses even among non-technical majors, understaffed, underfunded, and under-equipped computer science departments are being pushed to the limits to accommodate the mushrooming demand for courses.

Indiana University students, for instance, can't even get basic computer literacy courses because the already-strained computer science department can't afford to fund them.

The Massachusetts Institute of Technology—which already bans computer science transfers from other schools—also just voted to limit computer science enrollment next year, as has the Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute in New York. Comp sci majors, along with electrical engineers, make up one-third of all majors at both schools.

Green's UT-Austin is adding 15 new computer science professors in the next three years so it can tap deeper into the comp sci market. The additional faculty should allow the school to admit 500 more computer science students by 1987.

"The number of computer science students has simply increased much faster than our ability to serve them," explains Nell Dale, associate chair of UT's computer science department.

Between 1977 and 1982 alone, the number of computer science graduates tripled from just under 7,000 to a whopping 20,267 a year, according to the National Center for Education Statistics.

This spring, an estimated 30,000 more comp sci majors will invade the job market, commanding an average $25,000 yearly salary from hungry employers waiting to hire them.

"Computer science is one of the two hottest degrees (along with electrical engineering) in the country in terms of demand," notes Victor Lindquist, placement director at Northeastern University and director of the school's annual Endicott Report on the job market for college graduates.

"The demand right now," he adds, "seems almost insatiable."

But the comp sci bubble may be on the verge of bursting.

"In the short run, there is still a very strong demand for people in the computer science area. But in the longer term, there will be very little demand for them," warns Henry Levin, an expert on education and technology at Stanford.

Of the 28 million new job openings in the next decade, the U.S. Bureau of Labor statistics projects that only about 1.5 million will be in high technology industries.

Bust of Legendary Coach gets Heavy Travel Time

For someone who died in 1931, former Notre Dame football coach Knute Rockne still gets around pretty well.

Or at least his bronze bust does.

Over the last year the 100 pound, two-foot tall Knute Rockne bust has attended at least one student graduation party, visited the shores of Lake Michigan, and journeyed to Indianapolis recently for the Notre Dame-Purdue football game.

The bust, affectionately known around campus as "Rockne," first vanished from Notre Dame's Rockne Memorial last May 3rd.

Among other things, the note warned that Rockne would not return "until the students get their beer," apparently referring to a new student drinking policy that restricts on-campus beer consumption, explains Observer editor Bob Vonderheide.

The color picture showed the sunglass-clad Rockne reposing in the sand, surrounded by a boom-box radio, a keg of beer, and a frisbee.

In the meantime, the empty pedestal in Rockne Memorial became too much to bear for many students and administrators. Hoping to re-capture at least some of the aura of the missing Rockne, officials replaced it with a smaller replica dubbed "Rockne Junior."

Over the summer, campus police, befuddled by the mystery of the missing bust, began working on leads that Rockne was hiding out somewhere in Los Angeles, recalls Notre Dame Security Chief Glenn Terry.

On September 11, a few days after a Notre Dame-Purdue football game, Observer editors received a second anonymous note and several photographs showing Rockne in a Purdue sweatshirt, standing in front of a welcome sign to Purdue University in Lafayette, Ind.

"I went on a long road trip to see this game," the note began, "and I'm really disappointed. The football team has never scored this poorly."

The one-page, typewritten message was signed "Knute Rockne."

"We still have no idea why the notes and photos were sent to us," says Vonderheide.

Rockne, it seems, isn't the first Notre Dame sculpture to take flight in the night.

"There was a similar disappearance in the 1950's involving the statue of Father Theodore Sorin—founder of the university—which was kept on display in one of the residence halls," recalls Dick Conklin, public information director and long-time Notre Dame staffer.

Eventually, Father Sorin was found buried in a golf course sand trap, "none the worse for wear."

Both the Observer and The Notre Dame Monthly, the campus magazine, did stories last spring recounting the Sorin statue caper, Vonderheide says.

Rockne's bust vanished only days after the articles appeared. It finally was returned at a Sept. 23rd pep rally.

"It just showed up during the rally," Vonderheide recalls, and elated authorities quickly whisked Rockne off to secure quarters.

But while everyone was celebrating Rockne's return, the worst happened.

Rockne Junior vanished.

In its place, the culprits left a jack-o-lantern and two handwritten notes, one of which read "Here's a buck for your troubles."

Chief Terry still won't disclose the contents of the second note.

He suspects the theft was "an inside job," because the bust was anchored and locked to the pedestal in the lobby.

"They must have had a key," he surmises, "because the lock was not broken."

Noone has heard from Rockne Junior since.

Killing Fields

Joan Travis
Critic

The strongest image left in my mind after seeing "The Killing Fields" is that of a small child sitting on the back of a truck with his hands over his ears, crying as bombs go off all around him.

That image rises above the drama of an intensely personal friendship, of a single man's struggle to survive, and of another man's struggle to come to terms with a pathetically selfish action. It's an image confirmed throughout the film by war-torn cities and bodies (although to the filmmaker's credit, there isn't an overabundance of blood). Finally, it's an image that stresses what most important films about war have stressed—the horror of which man is capable.

The story takes place for the most part in Cambodia during the early seventies, when that area of the world was going through massive political unrest. A journalist for the New York Times and his Cambodian assistant have diligently worked to bring the real news back to the United States, and they both decide to remain in Cambodia when evacuation is recommended for all. As the situation continues to worsen, the journalist realizes that if he is to survive he must leave; unfortunately, his Cambodian friend isn't allowed to go. The rest of the film focuses mainly on the Cambodian's struggle to survive.

What makes this movie particularly effective is the intensity of emotion within various scenes. As the Cambodian friend, Haing S. Ngor does a beautiful job expressing the sadness of a man seeing his beloved country beginning to crumble. His is a face that through its apparent lack of emotion expresses more than need be said. He is the vital force, and as he escapes into the beautiful Cambodian countryside, it's as if the human spirit of Cambodia escapes with him. The contrast between this man and the journalist, played by Sam Waterston, is amazing. Everything Ngor's character does finds its motivation among others; everything the journalist does finds its motivation in himself. The character of the journalist is very obnoxious, and increasingly difficult to sympathize with, and that might have been a problem had he dominated more of the film. As it turns out, he becomes more of a symbol of the kind of selfish need for domination by any larger or more politically important country over a smaller one.

Director Rolland Jaffe can be credited with creating a very realistic film about the futility of war. No one steps out as a big hero, no one as an evil villain; these are merely people being and reacting to what people have so often proven themselves capable of. The rather bizarre musical score ends with John Lennon's Imagine, suggesting the futility of hoping for a world without war.

STEIN '85
ROCKY MOUNTAIN
NEWS-NEA

College Press Service

"It's okay if it's treated like a merger instead of like an absorption," says Greg Maxwell, a Barrington College student who is being transferred with mixed emotions to Gordon College, some 60 miles away in Wenham, Mass.

Barrington last month announced it was merging with Gordon to help survive tough times ahead.

It could have been worse. Maxwell himself hopes to scrape up enough credits to graduate in time to avoid the September, 1985 mass transfer. Maxwell's college itself might have died.

For example, some 280 students had to transfer, faculty members had to dig for new jobs and creditors had to be stalled when tiny Nasson College went out of business in May, 1983. The 240-acre campus in southern Maine was offered for sale.

The scene is being repeated almost weekly these days.

Colleges are closing or merging with each other at an accelerating rate as signs accumulate that the long-awaited nationwide enrollment decline has begun this fall, and campuses literally begin to run out of students.

In the last year, Michigan, Minnesota, Washington, Missouri and Colorado, among many other states, have adopted plans to merge previously-separate colleges, hoping to save them from extinction.

In just the last two weeks, Barrington and Gordon voted to merge, Washington State proposed merging with Eastern Washington and the trustees of Judson Baptist College in Oregon decided to try to stay open a little while longer.

As many as 200 campuses may disappear before the enrollment drought now beginning ends, some observers predict.

"In the next decade the number of closures and mergers will increase," predicts James Miller of the University of Michigan's Center for the Study of Higher Education. "It's the cumulative effect of enrollment and finance."

In the sixties and seventies, schools rapidly expanded facilities, academic departments, and faculties to serve a postwar "baby boom" enrollment surge.

But the boom has ended and experts warn enrollments will keep falling well into the 1990s.

High School Drugs Decline

Drug use among high school seniors--this year's college freshmen--declined for the fifth consecutive year in 1984 for all commonly-used drugs except cocaine, the results of a nationwide survey released last week indicate.

According to the survey, 5.8 percent of the high school seniors questioned last spring had used cocaine in the most recent month, up from 4.9 percent the previous year. Among students in the northeast section of the country, the figure jumped from 6.9 to 11 percent.

But the use of all other drugs on the survey--including LSD, PCP, cigarettes, alcohol, marijuana, sedatives and tranquilizers--was down.

The percentage of regular marijuana smokers, for example, dropped one-half a percentage point to five percent, down from the 1978 peak of 11 percent.

The continuing decline stems from an increasingly widespread view that drug use is risky and unacceptable behavior, says survey director Lloyd Johnston of the University of Michigan.

"In the long run, this may be the only battle in the war against drugs that society can really win," Johnston says of the bid to change students' attitudes toward drug use. The attempts to control the supply and price of drugs are likely to fail, he says.

"The use of achiever drugs, such as cocaine, is going up, while the use of relaxing drugs is going down," notes Kevin Zeese, director of the National Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws, which discourages the use of controlled substances but favors making marijuana legal.

"We're not so much solving the drug problem as changing it," Zeese says.

Joanne Gampel, director of the Center on Marijuana and Health, suggests that students' increased emphasis on learning marketable skills is changing drug use habits.

"People want to be energized," she says. "Marijuana doesn't do that. Students can't work while on marijuana, but they can while on cocaine."

There are even signs of an increasing cocaine habit among politically conservative college students, not normally drug experimenters, Gampel says.

"One student at the University of Maryland told me the word on campus is that students don't feel cocaine is a drug," Gampel says. "It's just something that gives you strength and energy. They want to get ahead in the world, so using something that gives you energy is okay."

Johnston dismisses these explanations, arguing the increase in cocaine use nationwide since 1983 is statistically insignificant.

What's more, Johnston's survey indicates students are increasingly wary of cocaine. In 1983, 74 percent of them said they thought there is great risk in regular cocaine use. Last year, that figure jumped to 79 percent.

The figures on cocaine use, though up from 1983, do not reflect all-time highs.

The percentage of students reporting using cocaine during the previous month was the same as in 1981, and the percentage who said they had used it during the previous year was nearly a percentage point lower than the 1981 figure.

The survey also found:

--Seniors' use of sedatives and tranquilizers dropped again.

--While there was no discernable change in student's use of heroin and other opiates, their use of LSD continued a steady decline that began in 1980, and the use of PCP remained low after a precipitous drop between 1979 and 1982.

--There are no indications students are replacing illegal drugs with alcohol. The number reporting having five or more drinks in one sitting during the two weeks before completing the questionnaire declined two percent to 39 percent.

--The number of smokers, which dropped by a third, between 1977 and 1980, fell another two percent from 1983 to 1984. Fewer than one-fifth of the seniors said they smoke daily.

Twigg

Note: The following excerpts were taken from a recent interview with Ms. Abigail Abernathy; an elder spokesperson known for her frank assessments of the record industry.

Twigg: What about '84? How did it rate in your book?

Ms. Abigail: Saleswise, the record industry did very well, thank you. It looks as though cassettes have finally overtaken LPs. Some huge tour schedules by the Pretenders, Jacksons, Prince, Cars, Springsteen and Duran Duran kindled fan interest to a fever pitch. From a creative view, the music of '84 was terribly disappointing.

Twigg: What artists flunked your demanding criteria?

Ms. Abigail: Don't patronize me young man! This is your dime... The Jacksons' LP showed an abhorrent lack of musical cohesion. Michael's parents should be flogged for hog tying him to such a project. The tour was better, even though it was a greatest hits

Husker Du, Zen Archer: A hard core band that drops the pretensions, shows some variety, and comes up with 84's hardest rockin' set.

Laurie Anderson, Mister Heartbreak: Artsy Fartsy puts nose to the street and comes up with an emotional tour de force. Kudos to Wm. Burroughs.

U2, The Unforgettable Fire: Not as good as War, but talent like this can never be denied.

Twigg: Let's get back to the rock of '84.

Ms. Abigail: Well, Billy Idol's Rebel Yell proved he not only can rock but sing as well. Ratt's Out of the Cellar introduced a great new heavy metal guitarist.

Twigg: Any profound disappointments?

Ms. Abigail: Of course, McCartney as usual. David Bowie's outtakes from Let's Dance turned up on Tonight. I like U2, a very exciting band live. The Unforgettable Fire just wasn't as exciting as this band can be.

Twigg: What about some of the emerging hardcore bands? The Minutemen, Husker Du, or like the Replacements?

Ms. Abigail: Don't pull that stuff on me, young man!! I hate name droppers like you-- always plugging bands no one has ever heard of. These bands are on the fringe. Why ask?

Twigg: Well, if '84 was not a good year for major artists, why not seek out the more esoteric bands and experiment?

Ms. Abigail: Because I like to watch TV or entertain with my music on. I hate noise with my socials. The conversation is bad enough. Besides, the Minutemen can't sing. That's why their songs are so short. Hah!

package.

Twigg: Do you think the intense buildup got to them?

Ms. Abigail: Obviously, though I seriously doubt it will surpass the pressure Michael has placed on himself. He has to face the fact that he is 26 years old.

Twigg: That's his image. Who knows what he is really like.

Ms. Abigail: True. '84 was full of image and less on substance. Michael needs to grow up or he'll wear that bedroom around with him. Any artist not in touch with himself will die an agonizing death. Prince has become a sex symbol by straddling a fine line of not this, not that. Boy George has stated publicly 'America loves a good drag queen.' Duran Duran looks good, but still can't cut the mustard on their instruments.

Twigg: Are you saying 'the Boy' can't sing, Prince can't write, or Michael can't dance? I do agree Boy George has seen better days. Americans are only curious about drag queens, not infatuated.

Ms. Abigail: I do like Springsteen's music. The struggle for hope and faith in a land of trickle down economies is an honest and forthright approach to music. Album of '84! Huey Lewis also seems nice. Any one who sings the Star Spangled Banner deserves public support.

Twigg: What other music did you get off on?

Ms. Abigail: I've always like country music. Lee Greenwood sang that wonderful 'God Bless the USA' with Pres. Reagan in attendance at the 'Opry. A tremendous image of patriotism for '84.

Twigg: Wasn't that with all the confetti blowing down, the audience singing along with their hats off; red, white and blue everywhere...unforgettable!

Ms. Abigail: Reba McIntyre finally proved what a painfully emotional singer she was in '84. Frequently, breaking down into tears at her concerts

Student Fees What are they?

Kathy Chimlack
Staff Writer

Every semester students pay a student's fee. Some students pay and forget about it, some wonder what its for, while others simply don't notice. For those students who are curious the information has been provided by Mr. Tim Jordan, Assistant Director of Financial Services and Directors of other Universities in N.C.

The breakdown of students fees for UNCW, UNC-Chapel Hill, NCSU and ECU is:

| School:                    | UNCW            | UNC-Chapel Hill           |
|----------------------------|-----------------|---------------------------|
| Athletic Department:       | $45.50         | $25.00                   |
| Health Services:           | $20.50         | $73.00                   |
| SGA:                       | $19.00         | $10.00 (Student service) |
| Student Union:             | $19.00         | $15.50                   |
| Intramural Sports:         | $04.00         | $----                    |
| Physical Activities:       | $15.00         | $----                    |
| Debts on Buildings:        | $55.00         | $----                    |
| Miscellaneous:             | $----          | $23.00                   |
| TOTAL FEES/semester | $183.00 | $146.50           |

| School:                    | NCSU            | ECU             |
|----------------------------|-----------------|-----------------|
| Athletic Department:       | $21.00         | $42.50         |
| Health Service:            | $32.00         | $49.50         |
| SGA:                       | $10.15         | $18.75         |
| Student Union:             | *below          | $----          |
| Intramural Sports:         | $02.00         | $12.00         |
| Physical Activity:         | $05.50         | $----          |
| Debts on Building:         | $87.35         | $44.50         |
| Miscellaneous:             | $----          | $00.75         |
| TOTAL FEE/semester: | $158.00 | $168.00 |

*fee included in SGA line

According to Mr. Jordan the existing debt fees are not likely to go up. In fact they could be reduced after the debts on the Student Union and Trask Coliseum are paid up, but that wouldn't happen until around 2010. One must also consider as the university grows, new building debts could arise.

The UNCW ROTC Program held drills last week. See Page 11.

by Academic Computing Services

Would you like to learn something about our computer systems? It's as easy as spending money and you don't need a vax account to investigate our computer assisted instruction packages! Now that the computer cluster rooms are staffed full time with 21 student consultants, someone will always be present to help you. Three-quarters of the consultants are upper-classmen, but all of them are versed in the use of our vax system. Primarily, they help people with programming problems. They also assist new users in understanding the pre-programmed facilities available such as mail and the editor. (Yes, students now have the mail facility!!! Progress!!!). The consultants are easily recognized by their yellow nametags and no question is too small. Stop by anytime 8 a.m. to 12 p.m. Monday thru Sunday, in Hoggard 117, Bear 215 or Soch 221 and ask about the vax.

If you saved a directory from a programming course last semester the forms to retrieve it are ready. Just come by S222, Academic Computing Services. Pick one up, complete the information and return it to us. Please do this before Feb. 12 because saved ones get shredded on Feb. 14.

On the Firing Line

Jack Fryar
Staff Writer

Despite a clear night sky, it was dark as the members and recruits of UNCW's Army ROTC Raider Detachment made their way along the big crater in the woods behind the school. The 21 cadets were on a night patrol, and the word was that enemy contact was likely.

Suddenly the tell-tale whistle of incoming "artillery" sounded through the night quiet, followed by the deafening boom and brilliant light of exploding rounds. Quickly the patrol leader shouted orders, and the group dashed out of the impact area, as more rounds struck home all around them. Moments later it was all over, and the patrol resumed.

But the incident at the crater wouldn't be the last time the Seahawk cadets encountered "enemy" forces that weekend.

The incoming "artillery" was really simulated, as was all of the action during the 30 hours the cadets spent in the woods this weekend. Termed "Operation Elite", the exercise was held the last weekend in January to provide basic training for the new members of the Army ROTC Raider Detachment of the UNCW campus.

According to the detachment commander, Cadet Captain Scott Toussaint, membership in the Raiders is opened up twice a year. The weekendlong basic training is designed to provide the new Raiders with the skills they need to function within the unit, which places a high emphasis on hands-on training.

"There's a high 'esprit d'corps' in the Raiders," he says. "Not everyone is into living the life of an infantryman, which is what we center our training around. We spend a lot of time in the woods, working hard at perfecting those skills an infantry leader must know to help himself and keep his men alive in a combat situation."

Among the new Raiders, reasons for joining were varied. MS IV Chris Bivens, in his final year of the Army ROTC program, joined the detachment specifically for the tactical training provided by the group.

"I've got to attend ROTC Advanced Camp this summer," he says, "and knowing how to handle yourself in the field is important there. To help get myself ready for that, I joined the Raiders."

Included in the ranks of the newcomers now wearing the Raider's trademark black beret, is freshman Karen Davis, the first female to join the detachment.

According to Toussaint, Raider membership is open to anyone who can go with the program.

"Getting in the Raiders is easy," Toussaint says. "We're open to any cadet. The trick is staying in."

Forensics Wins Tournament

Travels to Wingate this weekend for next match

Todd Harris
Contributor

Last weekend, the UNCW forensics team competed against four other schools at Southern Illinois University and came away the winner.

As well as the overall victory, the three members of the team captured some impressive individual honors. UNCW swept the pentathlon category, which is for the best all-around. Mitch Butts was the winner, with Rick Olsen finishing second, and Travis Parker taking third.

In the individual categories, Butts took first place for impromptu speaking, second in after-dinner speaking, and third in rhetorical criticism.

Olsen took a total of three second place finishes in informative speaking, extemporaneous, and impromptu. Olsen also placed third in poetry interpretation. Parker finished well in poetry interpretation.

Next weekend, the team will compete in a debate tournament at Wingate College. Following that tournament, there will be three others, leading up to the North-South championship at UNC-Charlotte, and finally, the National championship at Marshall University.

Police Uncover Drug Use at Clemson University

Courtesy/College Press Service

An under-wraps investigation of Clemson University's athletic department by South Carolina police and university officials blew open January 7th, when several athletes told local reporters their coaches had given them illegal prescription drugs.

The drug trail could lead to Tennessee, where officials suspect Vanderbilt athletes smuggled the drugs to Clemson.

Combined with similar incidents nationwide, the Clemson case may help some reformers pass strict new regulations of college athletes' behavior.

"There's a growing concern across the country that college athletics will end up in the same drug-use situation as professional athletics," says Eric Zemper, research coordinator for the National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA).

While the NCAA currently limits its concern to eligibility, recruitment and financial aid matters, enforcement director David Berst agrees incidents such as the Clemson inquiry are responsible for proposed drug-use legislation which NCAA members will consider at their January convention.

The rule would let NCAA officials administer drug tests to athletes participating in championship and bowl games, and would send drug-related hearings and penalties through the association's infractions committee, Zemper explains.

But it's unclear if the legislation would apply in Clemson's case, in which students allege track coach Stanley S. Narewski and strength and conditioning coach Sam L. Colson gave track members phenylbutazone, a drug prescribed for joint inflammation.

"As of right now, we've only found definite problems in

Scientist wins Schweitzer Award

Dr. Donald Ainslie Henderson, the man who led the global campaign that successfully eradicated smallpox, will receive the 1985 Albert Schweitzer International Prize for Medicine.

Henderson is dean of John Hopkins University School of Hygiene and Public Health and former director of the World Health Organization's smallpox eradication program.

The announcement of Henderson's selection was made Tuesday afternoon in Wilmington, N.C., by Mrs. Dolores T. Kirk, director of the prizes. Henderson will receive the award in ceremonies at UNCW on March 21.

The Albert Schweitzer International Prizes, which carry a $5,000 cash award, are presented every four years at UNCW by the N.C. Educational, Historical and Scientific Foundation. In addition to medicine, the prizes recognize achievement in music and the humanities, the three areas in which Schweitzer excelled.

Prior winners include Mother Teresa for humanities in 1975 and Andres Segovia for music in 1981. The prizes not only keep alive the memory of Schweitzer; they bring great men and women to UNCW so that students may meet and mingle with great models to live by.

The Schweitzer Prize in Medicine is funded by the Burroughs Wellcome Fund, which discovers, researches, and manufactures pharmaceuticals for humans and animals.

Henderson was chief of the global smallpox eradication campaign for a decade before coming to Hopkins in 1977. Under his leadership, more than 700 advisers from 69 countries and upwards of 200,000 national health staff and volunteers worked together on one of medical history's most ambitious undertakings.

On May 8, 1980, the World Health Assembly officially declared that smallpox had been eradicated. Never before had humanity succeeded in completely eliminating a disease.

During Henderson's first year as director of the WHO program, an estimated 10 to 15 million smallpox cases occurred, causing two million deaths in 43 countries in Latin America, Africa and Asia. Eight years later, on Oct. 16, 1975, a young girl in Bangladesh experienced the last case of the most severe form of smallpox--variola major. Cases of the less severe variola minor persisted in eastern Africa (Ethiopia and Somalia) through October 1977. On the 26th of that month, a 23-year-old man, Ali Maalin, became ill with what proved to be the last naturally occurring case of smallpox. Employing the strategy of search and containment which was one of the campaign's keys to success, WHO teams located and vaccinated all of Maalin's known contacts. For more than two years, intensive searches were conducted throughout Somalia and the neighboring countries. No other cases were found.

Born Sept. 7, 1928, in Lakewood Ohio, Henderson grew up in the Cleveland suburb. He received his A.B. degree from Oberlin College in 1950 and his M.D. from the University of Rochester School of Medicine in 1954. In 1960, he earned his Master of Public Health degree from The Johns Hopkins School of Hygiene and Public Health, which he now directs.

He now lives in Baltimore with his wife, the former Nana Irene Bragg. They have three children, a daughter and two sons. cont. on page 6

Recently a bill was placed before the state legislature that proposed to raise the legal drinking age to 21. Congress has already passed a similar bill and even added a "little" addition: No highway funds for states that do not enact the proposal by October 1, 1986.

Frankly, I'm disgusted with this monetary blackmail. I am also tired of my age group being blamed for all of this country's problems. Those aged 18-21 make up only a small proportion of the population. It is not solely those under 21 who are driving drunk. I suspect many of our honorable officials have had a few too many and hit the road. Of course, none of them will be affected by this law and anyway they are responsible adults and we are foolish children. Well, this foolish child has news for them.

If they feel raising the drinking age is the solution to drunk driving why not make it 45, that will take a great deal of the drunks off the road, or make it 70, after all it would certainly only allow a minority of the people to drink and few of them would be out past 7:30 anyway.

Obviously, the age issue is arbitrary in this case. Youth is not so much the problem as enforcement. I wonder how many of our officials would be locked up if they were caught driving drunk. I would assume the number would be small. Also, how many times have repeated offenders been "warned" or let-off-the-hook. Too many to even count. Law enforcers should throw the book at those pulled for DUI's. And, as far as I am concerned, they should lock-up even first time offenders. They are, after all, potential killers. And a 30 year old drunk is just as dangerous as a 19 year old one.

Another important fact that our legislators should realize, in case they've forgotten, is that Prohibition did not work. Nor will it work in this form. Picking on one group of society to cure a problem that exists in all age groups is not only un-fair but un-democratic.

So, State Legislators, I have a bit of advice. Re-think this issue before you succumb to pressure groups and political blackmail. Your proposal will not cure the problem, it may not even curb it. Those who want alcohol will get it and they will still drive drunk.

Instead of trying to punish the few for the sins of many, why not punish the guilty.

Bit Bucket

About the only thing that doesn't change is change! The last Bit Bucket informed you of student mail facilities and the suggestion box (send to Sug-estbx).

After a semester's anticipation, VAX reference manuals have now been distributed to the three computer cluster rooms (B215, H117, S221). These catalogs contain information supporting the languages of SAS, SPSSX, BASIC, COBOL, MACRO, PASCAL, FORTRAN, PLI, and DCL. They compose about one-third of the total catalogs that will be installed in the cluster rooms. Until the remainder arrive, additional manuals are available in the Academic Computing Services office, Social and Behavioral Sciences Building, Room 222.

To further assist computer users, 21 student consultants now staff the cluster rooms full time. That is 0800-2400, 7 days a week.

On December 21, 1984, the VAX/VMS operating system was updated to version 3.7. Most of the changes involve support for new hardware; there were few functional changes. Changes affecting users occur in the Run-Time Library for BASIC:

1. Print in E format now conforms to ANSI specifications.
2. Tab now conforms to ANSI specifications.
3. A print item that completely fills the last print zone on a line will be printed on the same line.
4. The resequence command in the new version had a flaw that has been repaired.

Closing The Gap

This week in "Closing The Gap" you've got a new face to inform you and since it was intended for SGA members to use why shouldn't we? Right fellow senators??

I came away from the January 24 SGA meeting with a good feeling. A large student/organization turn-out voiced concerns over campus problems such as poor lighting around the dorms, the possibility of a SGA owned and operated laundry room, sheltered picnic areas around the dorms and the possibility of constructing bike paths around campus.

While the subject of bikes has come up, it seems we are all due for a reminder about parking bicycles in the bike racks. This is my pet peeve for the week. Chaining bikes to trees, railings, or leaving them on the sidewalk is unacceptable. Recently I saw a student fall over a bike left chained on the sidewalk. Blocking steps is an inconvenience and a discourtesy to others not to mention a safety hazard to disabled students. And finally since bikes don't naturally grow on trees or sprout up around poles please put them in the racks provided. It can save you all the way around. To emphasize this being carried out the campus police are being asked to collect all bikes not adhering to this policy. It is in everyone's best interest to follow this policy.

Now senators there is a population of students out there that are at best indifferent but here also is proof positive there are some that are looking for help and answers. Let's give them reason to believe they came to the right place to get results. These matters are being passed to us now. Let's implement a reaction positive or negative, but let's respond! Short of tattooing the message across our foreheads Senate meetings are at 6 p.m. every Thursday night in the Chemistry-Physics Building in Room 114. So stop griping at your roommate and come with your concerns to those you elected to serve you. If you have a minute to give, we have it to spend listening to concerns, ideas and gripes. Hope to see you Thursday night.

Rugby Team Off to Successful Beginning

Play Chapel Hill in 1st match

UNCW Rugby Club

The UNCW Rugby Club is gearing up for another successful season. Last semester we finished 8-0; defeating Campbell twice, Camp LeJeune twice, Mrytle Beach, NC State, ECU and the local Cape Fear club.

We only lost four individuals from last season, but with the new recruits of Billy Brooks, David Cox, Russ Bullock, Alfred Thompson, Ron Kohake, Daryl Sawyers, Rusty Schenk, and Webb Crute we are expecting another winning season.

Last semester's .1000 winning percentage produced some above-and-beyond rugby stars.

Eight individuals were selected for the North Carolina all-State team. Tommy Carter, John Burnette, Middy Middleton, Eduardo Acala, Scott Walton, Mark Seitz, Mike Seitz, and Josh Taylor had the honor of being selected by Eastern Rugby Union officials. Taylor earned all-South honors also.

Since we have existed as a smooth and competent organization for one year we have become an official chartered member of the school complying with the SGA guidelines. Now that we are an official part of UNC by the Sea we plan to have another perfect season. We urge you to come out and join the fun on and off the field.

Discrimination Extends Beyond Classroom Report Claims

College women find "even worse" campus sexism outside the classroom than they do in classes, a major college group claims.

Discrimination against female college students by male faculty and administrators extends beyond the classroom and may be more career-damaging than in-class sex bias, the group's new report charges.

In fact, sex discrimination in financial aid offices, and in career counseling and employment centers can cause women to "lose confidence, lower their academic goals and limit their career choices," study authors Roberta M. Hall and Bernice R. Sandler claim.

The study, sponsored by the Association of American Colleges' Project on the Status and Education of Women, follows the same authors' earlier examination of college classroom sex bias.

It revealed "things are even worse outside the classroom," when class rules no longer apply, Hall says.

The earlier study charged male faculty favored male students in classroom situations, Hall notes.

The new report found career and academic counselors also often unconsciously discourage women from taking certain male-dominated majors, knowledgeable and career-minded.

Counselors and professors also spend less time with women students than with men outside the classroom, and give less encouragement to women who seek leadership positions on campus, the study shows.

"Younger women may enter college expecting equal treatment," Hall explains, "and young women who have never been employed in the workforce are very apt not to be aware of the differential treatment. But they're more likely to be demoralized by it."

"Most 18-year-old girls don't know what happened with the women's movement in the sixties and seventies," agrees Florence Hall, educator and founder of New York's Feminist Press. "It's also true most 18-year-old males don't know what's going on. The results of the survey didn't come as a surprise to me."

"But it's fascinating that in 1985 we're seeing a recurrence of some of the all-too-familiar attitudes that the women's movement faced in the sixties," she continues. "It's easy to slip back."

While older women students often are more sensitive to sexist behavior, and are consequently better able to survive it, study author

Hall warns subtle discrimination can discourage them, too.

"Returning women students very often have given a great deal of thought to their situation, like career plans and ways in which their sex has held them back," she explains. "But it cuts both ways."

If a severe problem persists, such as financial or counseling discrimination, students should use campus grievance procedures of administrative channels, Hall advises.

"The earlier study sparked a number of campus-based workshops, programs and conferences focusing on these issues," she says.

"The schools that were more concerned about women did their own studies, and found students commenting on the chilly climate for women outside the classroom," Hall notes.

The comments led to the new study, she says.

But more than research is necessary, Florence Hall argues.

Only one-third of all colleges provide specialized child, health care and crisis center services, and even fewer offer a full range of these services, she says.

"It's important we remind ourselves that the effort to build coed education is not completed," she adds.

More Than Just a Job

George Walker
Editor

There are approximately 20 people at UNCW who are majoring in a field that, if the simple odds stand, have little or no chance at a post-collegiate career in that degree. The competition for jobs is so fierce that even the majority of the ones who "make it" can be located easier in an unemployment line than an exquisite restaurant.

Yet, there are 20 people who are willing to work and hope, maybe a little blindly, that their day will come. And even if they don't get that break, the intangible rewards gained will have made the effort worth while.

Drama majors are a little special.

"I got into drama so I would be more comfortable in front of crowds," says freshman drama major Jacqui Dunn. "It used to be that I was always nervous with people, now I can relax and be more myself."

More yourself? "By getting to know how other people think and feel, I can come to terms with myself."

Dunn (stage manager) is assisting Professor (director) Terry Theodore in the upcoming play, "See How They Run," which will run Feb. 20-24 in Kenan Hall. Two UNCW drama majors, Chris Lancaster and Brad Thomas, will play important roles in the comedy set in England.

Thomas, a freshman, initially found his way into acting at age 13, in the community theater. He feels Harrison Ford is the top actor today. As for employment opportunities after college, he mentions the numerous movies being shot in Wilmington.

And if he gets rejected? "I'll just wait tables and keep trying."

Lancaster is a UNCW sophomore who transferred to Appalachian St. to play football, but was drawn back here from a renewed interest in acting.

"Acting is an incredible challenge," he says. "You have to keep up the intensity and enthusiasm night after night. Concentration is very important."

Watching a rehearsal can be more compelling than the final product. Not only do you see parts come together for the whole, but also a lot of camaraderie and witty gregariousness between the different actors and stage crew.

"There's a joy in sharing a common goal," says professor Theodore, "and a collective spirit that animates the group."

It is this spirit that enables an actor to weather the bad times in hope of seeing the few good ones.

UNC-Wilmington defeated ECAC-South foes East Carolina and American at home last week to run its win streak to three games. The Seahawks now face three non-conference opponents in the next six days.

UNCW upped its seasonal record to 10-9 and 4-6 in the ECAC-South after soundly defeating American, 68-53, before a spirited homecoming crowd last Saturday.

The surprise hero of both conference wins last week was sophomore guard George Durham (6-2, 175, Durham, NC). Durham, who led UNCW in scoring last season as a freshman, had seen limited playing time in recent weeks. But the cat-quick Durham ignited a furious rally against ECU before a regionally-televised audience.

The pirates led by three (56-53) and had the ball with less than a minute to play when Durham stole the ball and converted a three-point play layup to tie the score. With ECU holding for the last shot, Durham picked up a loose ball and hit two game-winning free throws with 10 seconds left for the 58-56 win.

The coaching staff responded by starting

Durham against American, and he responded with a game-high 22 points on nine-of-15 shooting from the field to lead the Seahawks.

"With George playing this way right now, he could make a difference for us down the stretch," UNCW coach Mel Gibson said. "He played with the confidence that we saw all last season, and it has a snowball effect on his performance."

The Seahawks now travel to Augusta, GA, to play Augusta on Wednesday, before visiting Wake Forest on Saturday night. The third non-conference game will be at home in Trask Coliseum vs. Campbell next Monday.

"We've got some momentum going now with three straight wins and I hope that will have a snowball effect, also," Gibson said. "While these games don't carry the importance a conference game does in terms of positions for the tournament, they mean a lot to us in terms of just how good a basketball team we are."

"Augusta concerns us with their size along the frontline, because we're going with a smaller lineup with George (Durham) playing the three position. We need to play with the intensity we've shown recently to keep this streak alive."

Golf Set to Begin

The success of the 1985 UNC-Wilmington men's golf team may rest on the young shoulders of four freshmen and sophomores, as the Seahawks begin their first year in the Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference's South Division.

Gone from last year's team are John McDougald and John Freeman, neither of which were lost to graduation, but to the professional ranks instead. Head Coach John Derrico, now in his third year, will rely on two veteran seniors, two sophomores, and two highly touted freshmen.

"It's hard to tell just how good we will be this year," said Derrico, "we'll be very young. Four of our top six players are either freshmen or sophomores, and lack the all-important experience of collegiate-level tournaments."

"I am looking forward to this year, however, I can see a lot of potential on the roster. But what you see on paper and what you do out there on the course is a whole different story."

The leading returner is senior co-captain Robert Long, who was UNCW's low scorer in three of six tournaments last spring. Long, a Wilmington, N.C. product, was co-MVP of last year's team. The other co-captain is senior Joe Mitchell. Long and Mitchell will be looked to for leadership on and off the course, according to Derrico.

Three freshmen--Lin Melvin, Jay Wyrick, and David Turner--come to UNCW with high credentials. Melvin is one of the few Seahawk golfers to earn a scholarship before entering his freshmen season. Turner and Wyrick both played well during the fall.

Sophomores David Teem and Steve Demmer could be key figures to the 'Hawks. Teem had the lowest stroke average on the team last spring as a freshmen, and earned team co-MCP honors. Demmer showed improvement during the fall.

the track department," says Jane Kidd, Clemson's news service director. "But we're checking the rest of the athletes. We want a complete investigation."

The coaches resigned December 11th, two days after Clemson suspended them, student reporter Foster Senn confirms.

Their resignations followed the October drug-related death of track team member Steffen Jaspers, a Dutch Olympic runner.

An autopsy revealed Jaspers died of a congenital heart defect, but traces of the drug were found in his bloodstream, and a bottle of the pills was found in his dorm room, Kidd says.

A coroner's jury verified Jaspers had no allergic reaction to the drug, which he took up to 42 hours before his death, she adds.

"Most news stories have been inaccurate on this point," Kidd notes. "Jaspers' death was unrelated to the drug."

But the drug's presence in Jaspers' body led the State Law Enforcement Division and the 13th Circuit Solicitor's office to ask the university to help find the Officials questioned the track team members in December. The athletes implicated Narewski and Colson, who resigned without comment, Senn says.

Clemson officials hope the inquiry results, which will go to a grand jury, keep the university out of the spotlight and out of court.

Dear Egbert?

Dear Readers:

Often students have problems or concerns that they are bothered with, but seem to have no one to talk to or ask for advice. For this reason, I am writing this column to help out anyone in need. College life, as exciting as it sometimes is, can be filled with times of indecision or loneliness. And no, I am not a professional ("merely" a psychology major) but as a student, I understand these concerns. Most importantly though-I want help. So if you have any kind of problem that you need help with please write in. Letters should be marked "Dear Egbert" and put in the envelope outside the Seahawk Office door (Room 205E) upstairs in the Student Union.

Recently this problem was brought to me, and began the idea of this column, it may be helpful to other students:

Dear Egbert:

I am a sophomore this year and am living with a guy who has been at this school for five years. We are having problems getting along because he doesn't care to meet new people (they are all younger than him) and its ruining my good time. Whenever we go out he wants to come home early because he is "too old for that." I am eager to meet new people and do new things.

His attitude wouldn't bother me so much if it didn't deal with me. It isn't my fault that it is taking him five year to graduate!

Signed:

Stop Invading My Space

Dear Invading:

If you feel that this guy is really your friend then perhaps you should help him find new interests and meet new people. But if you feel otherwise, as is often the case with roommates, stick with your own plans and politely go about your own business. It is only up to him to change his lifestyle so that it is more interesting.

Note: All letters will remain confidential (unless published) and real names should not be used.

2001 Space Odyssey

In 1968, filmmaker Stanley Kubrick released a science fiction film which would change forever our view of the future and set new industry standards for special effects cinematography.

"2001: A Space Odyssey" has intrigued, fascinated and puzzled audiences for seventeen years. It is an epoch which takes man from a Neanderthal scavenger in an arid prehistoric environment to his first manned interplanetary voyage.

Interest in this film has been rekindled since the release of the long-awaited sequel; 2010: The Year We Make Contact. Most UNCW students are too young to remember the original film and many will have their first opportunity to view it next Friday, February 17, at 7 p.m. in Room 100 of the University Union. Admission will be $1.00.

The Committee for alternatives to violence in Central America is accepting donations such as school supplies, clothes and money in a drive to help the needy. If you can help go by the Philosophy & Religion Department.

Many thanks to the UNCW faculty who volunteered their efforts at the Forensics tournament. Also thanks to Steve Ryan for the party he DJ'd at.

Passage To India

Joan Travis
Critic

David Lean was the man behind such big screen spectacles as "Doctor Zhivago" and "Lawrence of Arabia." He makes his return after a number of years with another big film--"A Passage to India." The movie is complex and sometimes foggy, but it has received a lot of attention that's well deserved.

The story follows two Englishwomen, Mrs. Moore and Miss Quested, as they journey into India to visit Moore's son, who also turns out to be the love interest of Miss Quested. When the two arrive in India, the external conflict upon which much of the movie is based clearly surfaces. By juxtaposing all of the pomp and snobbery of the English government over scenes of the ruddiedly beautiful, harsh world of the people of India, Lean indicates that these are two very different worlds that perhaps at this time aren't ready to unite.

With the exception of one schoolmaster, none of the English will associate with the Indians. It's a world of such contrasts that the two women appear naive in their desire to seek out the real India. But seek they do, and what they discover is an interesting combination of mysticism, nature, and the erotic. An Indian doctor takes them to see some caves famous for their eerie echo, and when Miss the doctor for rape and the uprisings which occur because of it, it's never clear what Miss Quested went through other than some kind of erotic dream, and that in turn never really ties in with the more solid foundations of the rest of the film.

All of the actors do exceptional jobs in "A Passage to India," especially Peggy Ashcroft as the elderly Mrs. Moore. Here is a very important role because she is the one character who seems capable of bringing together the elements of mysticism and differing cultures. This becomes apparent in her relationship with an Indian philosopher/teacher. One of Ashcroft's final scenes makes the strong statement that the single person who might have bridged the cultural gap realized it wasn't possible. As the train leaves India, Mrs. Moore leans out the window to see the philosopher standing by himself in prayer and she understands perfectly. Lean often places shots of the sun, the moon, and storms throughout the film reflecting a certain timelessness, something independent of the human world. That timelessness which governs all the splendor and beauty of India makes this a movie well worth seeing. Now showing at Cinema 6.

Quested enters one alone, she experiences something that leads her to accuse the doctor of rape. Here, Lean runs into some trouble, because while the rest of the movie focuses on the trial of

Cruising Around Campus...

Erin Laughter
Contributor

You can see them everywhere: large tread tires attached to a big frame, a seat, and long foamed handle bars ranging from colors of dull black to hot pink. That describes the Earthcruiser that has become such a craze on campus due to the flat land and easy riding. Being that they are very comfortable and easy to ride, they are becoming a necessity to most students, adding to the popularity of them. Gina Johnson, a freshman has never seen a cruiser until she attended here. "I liked them a lot so I had to go buy one. I sold my speed bike so I could get a purple cruiser." Earthcruisers can also be dangerous as well as a pleasure. They can become in conflict with pedestrians on the sidewalks also riding an extra person on the handle bars or on the seat also poses a dangerous situation. Riders and pedestrians should be very cautious and aware to help alleviate the problem.

They also have become such a demand that they are a hot item for theft. Pam Korohy, a junior, believes that people are actually out looking for those that may be unlocked. "Mine got stolen in the suite of Dorm '79, but was luckily found four days later successfully by the campus police. "The UNCW registration sticker had been scraped off, touch paint applied, as well as pads and stickers. Actually it was a pretty good disguise. I did not recognize it as mine at first." People are out trying to get the cruisers in any way without having to pay the price of it.

On the other hand there are those students who do not craze over cruisers. Terry Schappert from the North had never seen a cruiser until he arrived here too, and he feels that his ten speed is "cooler".

After a recent plea for security, The SGA voted to have four street lights installed around the basketball court area behind Galloway Hall at a cost of $650.00. "Just walking behind the dorms terrifies me" said a UNCW student.

The walkways and areas including the tennis and basketball courts are dimly lit by distant street lights.

Student safety is endangered because poorly lit areas can increase the probability of robberies, rapes and accidents. Installing lights around this area will help to discourage these problems and give some element of security to students who must use this area.

Students that use the tennis and basketball courts were faced with the choice of using them during daylight hours or when these areas are dimly lit at night. With the installation of these lights, these areas will become more accessible to use.

These lights have been funded as SGA will pay the initial cost but the details of who will be responsible for maintenance and electricity are still being worked out. The lights should be installed and in use by April of this year.

The Student Government Association at UNCW voted to allocate funds for four new electric typewriters for the library typing room at their meeting on January 18, 1985.

This motion was presented by Freshman Senator Tim Robinson and passed by consent of the Senators.

The Olympia portable typewriters will cost approximately $290 a piece and will be equivalent to those already used in the library.

The SGA expects to receive the typewriters by February 14 and will then present them to the library.

The library currently has five typewriters and the new typewriters will give them a total of nine for student use.

OVERSEAS EMPLOYMENT

WORLD-SIDE OPPORTUNITIES FOR MEN AND WOMEN!
JAPAN - EUROPE - AFRICA - AUSTRALIA - THE SOUTH PACIFIC - SOUTH AMERICA - THE FAR EAST.
EXCELLENT BENEFITS, HIGHER SALARIES AND WAGES!
FREE TRANSPORTATION! GENEROUS VACATIONS!

More than 300,000 Americans — not including members of the armed services — are now living overseas. These people are engaged in nearly every possible activity: construction, engineering, sales, transportation, secretarial work, accounting, manufacturing, oil refining, teaching, nursing, government, etc. etc. And many are earning $2,000 to $5,000 per month...or more!

To allow you the opportunity to apply for overseas employment, we have researched and compiled a new and exciting directory on overseas employment. Here is just a sample of what our International Employment Directory covers.

(1). Our International Employment Directory lists dozens of cruise ship companies, both on the east and west coast. You will be told what type of positions the cruise ship companies hire, such as deck hands, restaurant help, cooks, bartenders, just to name a few. You will also receive several Employment Application Forms that you may send directly to the companies you would like to work for.

(2). Firms and organizations employing all types of personnel in Australia,

Japan, Africa, The South Pacific, The Far East, South America...nearly every part of the free world!

(3). Companies and Government agencies employing personnel in nearly every occupation, from the unskilled laborer to the college trained professional man or woman.

(4). Firms and organizations engaged in foreign construction projects, manufacturing, mining, oil refining, engineering, sales, services, teaching, etc., etc.

(5). How and where to apply for overseas Government jobs.

(6). Information about summer jobs.

(7). You will receive our Employment Opportunity Digest...jam-packed with information about current job opportunities. Special sections features news of overseas construction projects, executive positions and teaching opportunities.

90 Day Money Back Guarantee

Our International Employment Directory is sent to you with this guarantee. If for any reason you do not obtain overseas employment or you are not satisfied with the job offers...simply return our Directory within 90 days and we'll refund your money promptly...no questions asked.

Bad Weather Slows Construction

Steve Hill
Staff Writer

Construction on the new Student Support Center continues, with the opening projected for the '85 fall semester. According to Carl Dempsey, Assistant to the Vice-Chancellor for Business Affairs, construction at this point is only a couple of weeks behind schedule despite the occurrence of some uncooperative weather.

"Of course, the hurricane put us back a week, and then some of the extreme cold weather we had hurt us, but we're still planning, and the contractors agree, that we should be ready for the fall semester," Dempsey said.

The bulk of the funding for the $1.3 million facility will come from bookstore revenue and health service fees. But the Campus Bookstore and Student Health Services are only two of the many programs to be housed in the new center. Also included in the Support Center will be the Parking offices and the Student Development Center.

"I think the name 'Student Support Center' says it all," said Dempsey. "It's meant for the students and it will include some of those things now scattered all over campus."

Diane McKinstry, Director of the Student Development,

Stealing Stars and Stripes

George Walker
Editor

The Stars and Stripes have become a hot commodity for area thieves and pranksters, according to gas station manager R.W. Helm, who operates Gas World on 310 South College road.

Helm claims the Worsley company, which owns Gas World and the Scotchman stores, have had their flags stolen for seven consecutive years, always in late January.

The 20 X 30 foot flags, he adds, cost about $500 each, with another $200 tacked on to pay for the long ropes that secure them.

So Helm is now offering $200 for information leading to the arrest and conviction (and return of flag) of the culprit(s). Because the thefts have occurred every January, Helm has formulated a theory as to who is behind the capers.

"It has to be some kind of organized group," he says. "Most likely a fraternity."

"This is about the time fraternities take pledges. I was in a fraternity in college, I know the pressures that new members are under to pull these things off."

Ellen Servetnick, who coordinates Greek life at UNCW, denies that the fraternities are involved.

"I have spoken to some pretty reliable sources," she says, "and they have assured me they are clean."

"For one thing, he (Helm) claims the flag was stolen the week of January 30, our pledges didn't begin until well into February."

"New pledges pull off new, unique tricks. Why would they do the same stunt year after year?"

A 20 X 30 foot flag was found at UNCW this year--someone had put it on the flag pole at the front of campus. It was not Gas World's.

Unlike Gas World, UNCW officials remove campus flags at dusk every day because federal customs laws flag areas to be illuminated for night use.

Gas World does fly its flag at night and is vulnerable to theft.

UNCW Police Chief Joseph Johnson says he has no clues or suspects on the case.

"It would be hard to match the flag with anyone. Not many people are going to hang that large a flag in their dorm. It's just too noticeable."

Drinking and Driving is for Stimulation

Courtesy/College Press

Students who drink and drive are stimulation-seekers who are not likely to be deterred by laws raising the minimum legal drinking age, recent research by a University of Wisconsin team suggests.

Instead of trying to curb students' adventuresome habits, counselors should help students find new ways to satisfy their needs for thrills, the researchers say.

Their conclusions are based on a study comparing student drinking and driving habits with personality types, says UW psychologist Frank Farley, who along with grad student Sharon McNeely conducted the study.

They found that students most likely to drink excessively and drive tend to be extroverted risk-takers who prefer change and novelty and who are attracted to experimental lifestyles.

"These people tend to reject rules and regulations of any kind, Farley says. "Minimum-age drinking and driving laws are just creating more rules for them to reject."

Although these students are more prone to delinquency, the researchers say they are just as likely to exhibit positive characteristics, such as creativity.

"These two forces arise from the same group of people," Farley says. "We need to get these people to transfer their interests from one to the other."

"If counselors are aware of the characteristics of extreme stimulation-seekers, they can help channel their energy into the creative potential."

To date, Farley and McNeely have surveyed only a small sample of students. They acknowledge their results may not reflect all students.

But their thesis that the need for stimulation is the key to understanding and controlling drunk driving--the largest killer of those 16 to 24--is supported by accident statistics.

Farley says those in their late teens and early 20s have the greatest need for stimulation. The plot of traffic accidents follows the same pattern.

Further, since alcohol is a depressant, young drinkers are likely to seek even riskier means of getting the stimulation they crave.

The theory, Farley says, explains why many accidents caused by drunk drivers involve night driving, the presence of passengers and speeding.

Student body presidents of the 16 University of North Carolina campuses are calling on the state legislature to hold open hearings, including some on college campuses, before voting to raise the state's drinking age for beer and wine from 19 to 21.

Eric Squires, president of the Student Government Association at UNCW, said the action came at a meeting of the UNC Association of Student Governments at UNC-Ashville on February 9-10.

"The way it is now, students will not have the opportunity to have their opinions heard," Squires said. "The resolution calling for hearings passed unanimously at the meeting in Asheville."

He also commented that if the drinking age is raised, it is likely that there will be "prohibition on campus", because most students will be underage.

"The age group that will be affected now and the age group that is going to be affected later are not going to have anything to say about this. Hearings will at least give us a chance to voice our opinions and concerns," Squires said.

The student government presidents are planning to meet with Governor James Martin in March.

Could You Run That By Me Again?

Courtesy/College Press Service

Sandra Begay anticipated a tough curriculum when she enrolled in the University of New Mexico's civil engineering program. But she didn't expect the Central American teaching assistant would be harder to understand than the calculus she was trying to learn.

"There's a lot of foreign TAs here," she said. "And they're hard to understand. I had a hard time in calculus at first, but I survived."

But many students, locked into required classes run by foreign-born teaching assistants, aren't as lucky as Begay.

Student complaints about not being able to understand their foreign-born grad instructors--and consequently not doing well in classes--have cropped up in formal proceedings at scattered campuses over the last few months.

And thanks to the influx of foreign students into this country, the problem may get worse soon, predicts Dr. Joost Yff of the International Council on Education for Teaching.

"Chances are the problems will continue and even increase," he notes.

"It will be an aggravated problem, especially for those with more learning difficulties," agrees Dr. Dale Comstock of the Council of Graduate Schools in the U.S.

"No one, it doesn't matter who, belongs in a classroom if they have poor language skills," he adds.

But poorly trained foreign-born TAs continue to conduct classes in places like the State University of New York-Albany (SUNYA).

When engineering and economics students complained they couldn't understand their foreign TAs, student Association representative Larry Hartman monitored their classes.

"Students were just studying from the book," he remembers. "The classes were not helping at all."

University of Minnesota students claim the school's screening program releases foreign TAs to teach before they're fully proficient in English.

But the increase in foreign graduate students means more teaching assistant positions go to students who speak English poorly or, at best, as a second language, says Mack Gilkeson, of the American Society for Engineering Education.

"While no studies have been done, it wouldn't surprise me if the number of foreign TAs is not much different from the number of American TAs," he admits.

"A few years ago, American students went into industry after getting their baccalaureate degrees," Gilkeson explains. "The vacancies in grad schools were filled with foreign students."

The language problem is greater in high tech fields such as engineering and computer science, he adds, "because foreign students are career-oriented, and looking for jobs to make them employable at home."

Recent studies do show foreign students are now the majority in some grad school disciplines, CGS's Comstock notes.

Job Outlook Improves For Liberal Arts Majors

CPS

When Iowa State University senior Jeannette Fielder recently walked into a job interview with some conservative bankers, she figured she didn't have a chance. She was, after all, an English major.

"I said 'Do you realize that I haven't had my finance classes?' And they said 'No problem. We'll train you,'" Fielder recalls. "They all said they wished they had been a liberal arts student."

"They felt their perspective was so narrow. I was tickled."

Fielder, who will go to work for the bank after graduation this spring, was, in fact, interviewed by about 10 corporations.

Though her case may not be typical, college placement officials across the country report that the number of firms looking to hire liberal arts grads is up substantially over last year.

"Even major corporations are now giving an increasingly sincere look at liberal arts graduates," reports Victor Lindquist, who directs Northwestern University's career placement center and is the author of an annual report tracking job offers nationwide.

Lindquist says the increasing interest in liberal arts graduates is part of a trend that began in about 1980.

Liberal arts grads "tend to have marketable communication skills, both written and oral, analytical tools, and tend to be more trainable," he explains.

Small businesses are also hiring more this year, and more receptive to liberal arts grads than to grads with technical or specialized degrees, who may demand higher salaries.

"It's hard for a liberal arts graduate to convince a major corporation that he or she has valuable skills," Judith Kayser of the College Placement Council says.

"But with a mom and pop operation, it's easier to get the time to sell yourself."

If the trend in favor of liberal arts grads is reaching new highs, it could mean the end of what some administrators have dubbed the "taxi-driver syndrome": the spectre of bright, overqualified humanities graduates who drive taxis while waiting for "meaningful" jobs that never materialize.

Poor pay and shrinking enrollment are driving PhDs away from college teaching careers and into more lucrative fields, a current study shows, and the trend could mean there'll be fewer talented professors in classes in the next decade.

Voluntary Segregation

George Walker
Editor

The scene is all too familiar--and very much accepted. The members of each side are born into a world that stresses the physical and cultural differences of each other. Stressed to the point that these prejudices create an impenetrable wall that few care to detect. Each side neglects the fact that mere chance dictates the environment we will live in.

This process occurs early in life and solidifies through age.

The scene is the cafeteria, and the subjects are the black and white students of UNCW.

Legislation can make us come together but not like each other. Skin color is still the dominant characteristic for choosing friends, spouses, and associates in the U.S.

"Integration just hasn't served its purpose," says Douglas Johnson of the admissions office at UNCW. Johnson, who is black, has gained a clear perspective on the situation by working mostly with whites.

"The separation is still there. You can put people in the same room but you can't make them interact."

Conversely, Johnson points out the closeness that black and white athletes exude, mainly because they are together enough to break the barrier. Others could do the same, he adds, but differing social interests and prejudices prevent this interaction.

UNCW's black enrollment stands at 6.7 per cent, well below the 8.7 per cent that the UNC system has mandated for the fall of 1986. Many obstacles manifest themselves when trying to recruit a black student.

Johnson says "You have to realize that most black students in the state's big cities (Charlotte, Raleigh, and Greensboro) have to pass through a lot of other schools to get to UNCW."

Many indeed. Some--such as N.C. State and Chapel Hill--are also trying to beef up their black enrollment. These predominantly white schools have more money and a higher base of black students than UNCW. Others, such as Fayetteville State and Johnson C. Smith, are predominantly black

Diverse interests impede racial mixtures

schools that offer a more normal social atmosphere to the prospective black student.

Contrast this with UNCW and the enrollment figures become understandable.

"A lot of the factors that draw a white student to UNCW do not necessarily draw black ones," explains Ralph Parker, Director of Minority Affairs at UNCW.

"The first thing a white does when he gets to UNCW is go to the beach, which the typical black is not impressed with.

"Black students aren't very impressed with the concerts on campus either, like bluegrass or rock. There's not a whole lot offered to them."

The recreation that can provide a valuable release is thus withheld from the black student who doesn't join in alternative activities.

Johnson believes the campus needs social outlets that will allow the races to come together, such as bringing in two diverse bands at once.

He also believes the university must hire more blacks (there are presently 14 faculty members and administrative workers) to recruit more successfully.

But it still boils down to voluntary separation. "Every school in the state offers the basic degrees," he says. "A happy social life is the biggest concern of most students."

Senators Take Communication Junket

Steve Traut
Staff Writer

SGA is trying to solve its problems. After many complaints that senators aren't communicating with each other, let alone with the students, Student government has been trying to show it cares to what Vice President, Paul Bell called "a population of students... that are at best indifferent." On February 1, twenty people from SGA and UPB left for a three day retreat to Fort Caswell. The retreat, which was postponed from last fall was intended to give members of SGA and UPB a "basic understanding" of leadership ideals and to make members "more in touch as a group."

"I know I'm idealistic, but we have to start somewhere," said Ellen Servetnick, Assistant Director for Student Activities. Ideals were a large part of the retreat, with goals such as to "increase awareness of interpersonal styles, strengths, and potential," and to "develop skills in proactive and productive resolution of conflict." Said Senator Lynn Franklin, "you have to wonder how far these ideals go in realistically benefiting the students."

In "The President's Corner," Eric Squires told of "a dream" which included a "responsible government" and "more service for the general student." This dream, he said, "has been blocked by greed and self-serving interest groups located in our student senate." Some less idealistic goals set at the retreat were making senate meetings more accessible, and setting up a "town meeting" night in the dorms so that students can meet with senators to complain and make suggestions. "These ideas," said Paul Bell, "probably wouldn't have gotten very far in a senate meeting."

There are some in SGA who doubt if the retreat really helped. Ed Troublefield, junior class president said, "It doesn't matter what I do there; it's what I do here that counts."

Paul Bell and Ellen Servetnick hope that the enthusiasm created in the six senators who went will be picked up by the twenty-four who did not. The cost of the retreat was $1005.00 from the president's fund (this does not include travel to Fort Caswell, which is forty-five minutes away). UPB paid its share of this from its own funding. Another retreat is scheduled for next fall, and for every year thereafter.

UNCW Host to 17 Teams in Blockade Tourney

Rick Olsen
Contributor

January 25, 26, 27 marked the dates of UNCW's own "Blockade Runner" forensic tournament. Seventeen teams from as far away as Florida, Massachusetts and West Virginia participated. Stetson University captured the I.E. trophy, and William & Mary won the debate competition. Many of the UNCW faculty participated as judges for the events and added credibility and quality to the tournament. One of the highlights was a "lip-synch" contest during Saturday night's party at the Carolinian. Steve Ryan's efforts as DJ made it a smash.

On the road, the speaking Seahawks continue to be winners. The debate team of Max Perkins, Tricia McHenry, and coach Ray Blackburn traveled to Wingate College--host of one of the toughest debate tournaments in the country.

Forty teams from as far away as Utah and Illinois flocked to Wingate. UNCW's two-person team argued their way into the finals, proving themselves as one of the top 16 teams in the tourney.

Last weekend, eight members of the Individual Events team captured first place sweepstakes honors at the Metropolitan Washington tournament at George Mason University. Mitch Butts, Wendy Crowson, Rebecca Dodd, Melinda Greene, Tina Hester, Rick Olsen, Travis Parker, and Max Perkins contributed to the overall victory and several were recognized for outstanding individual performances. The victory was hard-earned as the team had to overcome the University of Miss., Chapel Hill, and 15 other schools for the prize.

Next weekend the team ventures to Berry College in Georgia.

Seahawks On the Road

Dean Buchan
Staff Writer

UNCW took a break from its first ECAC South schedule last week, and came away with a 20-point loss at Wake Forest, and an eight-point victory at home against Campbell.

The Seahawks, 11-11 overall and 4-6 in the ECAC-South, were scheduled to visit James Madison Wednesday night and will play at rival ECU Saturday. Both are league games.

In Winston Salem last Saturday, UNCW's Brian Rowsom scored the first five points of the game, and the 'Hawks led 8-2 over the Demon Deacons. But UNCW's chance at its first victory over an Atlantic Coast Conference team soon vanished as Wake Forest scored the following 18 points. The Deacs, who had lost three straight prior to Saturday's game, went on to lead 48-29 at the half. UNCW never got closer than 17 points in the second half.

The 'Hawks loss did have its bright spots, however. Point guard Bobby Jo Springer outscored Deac point guard Tyrone Bogues 21-2. Springer, a junior, also had five assists and five steals against the five-foot-three Bogues, who has been nothing but trouble for N.C. State's Spud Webb and Duke's Tommy Amaker.

Another bright spot was George Durham, who has played well since he earned a starting role Feb. 7 against ECU. Durham scored 17 points from his small forward position, including a slam dunk over Wake's Lee Garber.

Monday, UNCW got 28 points from sophomore center Rowsom and held off Campbell 74-66.

UNCW, which led by 10 at the half, had to go to its delay game in the final four minutes to hold off the Camels. Springer iced the game for the 'Hawks, making 11 of 13 foul shots, most of them coming in the final two minutes.

For Rowsom, his 28 points ties his career high, which he scored earlier against the same Campbell team. Rowsom also had nine rebounds in the win.

Madison's Jumper Edges Lady Hawks

Dean Buchan
Staff Writer

Michele James' jumper with 18 seconds left gave James Madison a 59-58 win over UNCW here Saturday in nip and tuck ECAC South women's basketball contest.

James' shot came 19 seconds after UNCW's Sonya Pickard hit a bank shot that gave the Lady Seahawks a one-point edge in a thrilling second half that saw the lead change 21 times.

The Dukes, 19-5 and 9-1 in the conference, were led by James' 15 points. Julie Franken and Sue Manelski chipped in 12 and 10 respectively. UNCW, 12-10 and 5-5, got 23 points and 9 rebounds from senior center Gwen Austin, who leads the conference in both categories. Jenny Owen and Wanda Carroll added 11 each for UNCW.

The Lady Seahawks, who were 8-2 at home before tonight, led for most of the first half, and were up 29-25 at intermission. The Dukes knotted the score at 32-32 early in the second half, then took their biggest lead of 35-32. The Lady 'Hawks came back to lead 36-35, then the teams traded baskets 16 straight times down the court.

Terri Haynes put JMU up by five, its biggest lead, at 57-52 with 2:50 remaining. UNCW followed with six straight points including Pickard's basket with 38 seconds left, setting the stage for James.

UNCW, now jockeying for position in the upcoming ECAC South Tournament in Richmond, hosts William & Mary Monday at 5:30 in the first half of a double-header with the men's team. JMU visits league leading East Carolina Monday.

"The Breakfast Club"

Joan Travis
Critic

"The Breakfast Club" is a movie that deals with the plight of the teenager in that dreaded social institution—the high school. What makes this especially interesting though, is that an ancient subject is approached in a fresh way. That approach leads to the important conclusion that kids are under tremendous pressure to succeed and be popular at all cost—sounds a lot like the adult world.

The plot is a very simple one. Five kids are required to spend a Saturday in their high school library for detention. As the hours go by, these kids really get to know each other, and they begin to see that they're not so very different. The majority of screen time involves conversations in which each character reveals a bit of himself to the others. Normally, a movie with so little action could easily become boring, but the dialogue here is very real and often funny, and it keeps things going without the external movement. Writer/director John Hughes is very careful with that personal, inner aspect of the film, giving us a lot of close-ups to indicate the high emotion within each character. He carefully chooses those rare moments when action comes into play, and thus we get scenes of the group running together down the school halls, and their dancing together in the library. These outer expressions of unity became very important, because they indicate the group's ability to overcome ridiculous social barriers.

Each of the five students is grossly stereotyped. Unfortunately, these stereotypes are exactly what inhabited my high school halls, so there is no loss of realism here. It's really nice to see a movie about teenagers with brains who are capable of speaking for themselves rather than trudging through a series of "typical" teenager activities which dish out someone's uniformed definition of teen life. The cast does an excellent job, and while the ending is definitely hokey, most of what comes before makes for an interesting and fun time. Now showing at Independence Mall.

NCSL Reps Add New Members

UNCW's delegation to the North Carolina Student Legislative is very busy this semester representing UNCW. We currently have 17 members and two high school interns. New members include Todd Yeates and John Colucci. February 15-17 we were at UNC-Charlotte for our monthly Interim Council. Topics debated were school prayer, tobacco support prices, mandatory sentences of life in prison, the Franking privilege, and a resolution concerning the formation of a committee to regulate animal research submitted by Seahawk, Mark Signorelli.

March 13-17 we will be in Raleigh for our annual session where we will debate bills (resolutions containing stated solutions), and elect new state officers. We are hoping to host the April I C the 19-21. Our meetings are on Wednesdays at 3:30 in room 214 of the Behavioral Science Building. For more information contact Rob Lane at 395-6333.

Mardi Gras Celebration

Marc Dreyfus
Contributor

This Saturday the Museum Associates of the Museum of the World Cultures at UNCW will host a costume ball. The Mardi Gras Ball will be held on Feb. 23, in downtown Wilmington at the Cape Fear Foundation Center, 9 South Front St., beginning at 8:00. Mardi Gras, or "Fat Tuesday" in French, is the celebration commencing 10 days before Shrove Tuesday, which is before Ash Wednesday. At the peak of Carnival, a celebration Italian in origin, is a flamboyant festival practiced throughout the Caribbean and Roman Catholic World. In the United States, New Orleans is the center of wild partying including several parades rich in color and ritual.

The Associates would like to welcome everyone to come and celebrate this bright, cultural holiday of such international diversity and help make it an annual event. All proceeds will be donated in support and benefit of our Museum of World Cultures. The Museum Associates is a community based organization created to assist the Museum in its goals for the improvement of our community in experience and understanding of the diversity of world cultures that are apart of our American Heritage.

Food will be provided including Cajun culinary delights like "red beans and rice" and "pralines," but BYOL! Prizes will be given for the best mask and costume. Tickets are $5 and $8 (couple). Everyone is invited and students can get in free if they help with the party. For information and advance ticket sales call Dr. Barbara Lott or Dr. Carolyn Dunn in the Geology department at 799-0618.

Student Info Raises Denied

By Carolyn Wilkinson
Journalism Class Contributor

A request by UNCW student employees of the Union information center for a raise in the upcoming year, has been rejected.

The information center began its operation in March of 1983. Several of the original employees are still working there.

Cari Abatiello, one of these original employees said, "We should have some type of seniority over the people who just started working there. Compensation would be a motivator, to make us want to do a good job. A seniority raise would be an incentive to perform better even if it was just 5 or 10 cents an hour."

Employees were told at their last meeting that a raise was not being figured into the 1985-86 budget.

Appointments with recruiters should be made in the Career Planning and Placement Center, 106 University Union. Sign-up sheets for recruiting visits are available beginning Monday mornings, three weeks in advance of the scheduled interview. Come by or call the Placement Center if there are questions or for additional information.

Learning Your Library

Mona Franklin
Associate Editor

The government is giving things away...free...and students are not taking advantage of them! We're not talking cheese or cafeteria leftovers, either. We're talking information.

Yes, located upstairs in the far right corner of the building, government documents are just waiting for students to discover them. You've probably gone right by them and not even realized what a wealth of resource material you were passing! (You may have even wondered "what are these things?" and "does anyone use these things?")

Government documents cover a wide range of topics. There are books on agriculture, census reports, technology, government lands, health and medical facts, and of course, Senate and House documents. These documents are shipped daily to the documents office, so any resource material you find will give you current information on whatever you are researching. This could really make your paper or project or whatever an "A" effort.

So, the next time you are in the library don't be afraid to check on the government documents. Mrs. Hanerfeld or Mrs. Simon will be glad to help you out; just look for them in the government documents office. Or ask the reference librarian for some help. In fact, you might want to go the reference librarian first, because looking up government document numbers requires that you look in the monthly catalog, not the card catalog for the reference number.

Now go out there and get 'em, resourceful student. And just think, you won't have to go through half the trouble most secret agents do to get government documents.

See How They Run

George Walker
Editor

In a peculiar way, it was nostalgic.

For two hours last Tuesday night, I found myself questioning the cast of See How They Run, a comedy that made its debut in the SRO theater on Wednesday night.

One by one, I talked with the seven actors. What were their thoughts and attitudes, what major decisions had they faced in their lives? I looked for distinguishing characteristics, for hidden internal drives that separated them from the average American professional who seems so content to pay the bills and not commit to a discipline of some sort. A limiting way of life.

Was I looking for something that wasn't there? Decide for yourself.

The scene was nostalgic because I felt the same sensations a year ago when questioning two others who had maximized their potential, basketball player Michael Jordan and Playboy Centerfold Victoria Cooke. Different capacities but comparable work ethics.

The contrasting histories and styles of the cast members is remarkable. One actor didn't enter the field until age 62, another at age three. One is using this stage experience as a way of getting bit movie parts around the big stars. Finally, one is wanting to make a name for herself, while another is trying to make it without his name.

Gweneth Evers is a native of Hatfield Middlesex, England, a small village town near London. She has an extensive list of credits, including work for the BBC and backup vocals to Bing Crosby. In 1984 she moved from England to Jacksonville with her husband, who is a marine.

"It was more or less culture shock," she says with a laugh. "If I was going to Japan I would expect the people to be different because they look different. Americans look the same as the British. Boy, was I wrong."

On stage, Evers plays Ida the housekeeper, a happy-go-lucky sort. Off stage she is a happy-go-lucky person. Don't mistake her friendly demeanor and petite size for weakness. Recently, she was Sissy Spacek's double (stuntwoman) in Marie. "I've done mostly falls and throws. What I would really like to do is get set on fire."

Many juniors and seniors at UNC-W might recognize the name Andrew Faw, a disc jockey for WHSL a few years ago. The station changed owners and personnel at that time, a move that has not endeared Faw to the present crew at WHSL. A communications graduate at UNC-G, Faw promptly formed an advertising firm, Jackson-Faw associates, which does commercials and publicity work.

Faw is originally from New York, and accepted a drama scholarship to UNC-G after failing to gain admittance to the prestigious N.C. School of the Arts. "It's tough to get in there," he explains, "UNC-G waits in line for the ones who don't get in."

Drama is a sideline for Faw. "I would like to be in some big movies, just to watch the big names. This play will help my chances."

Les Paternotte and Daniel Cerrato play significant roles in See How They Run. Paternotte, who is 62, is a Wilmingtonian who has had a lot of experience in local TV and radio, especially the channel 6 news. He now does an assortment of commercials and hopes to continue his career in drama, which only began a year ago. Cerrato, a native of Italy, is an extremely bright character. He speaks four languages fluently, and is a clarinetist. He has had small roles in American movies, and has acted occasionally in Italy and South America.

The lead role in "See How They Run" rests with the very capable Catherine Schoew, a soprano, who majored in music at Marshall University in West Virginia. She has appeared in a variety of operas, where her singing, dancing, and acting talent can be fully utilized. Schoew teaches 135 drama students at Roland Grise junior high school, an extremely large number for that level. A doctorate and a drama career are future goals.

Schoew describes her role as "very challenging. The fact that I'm on stage 95 percent of the time means I must be well prepared and concentrating very hard."

Unlike Schoew, who uses rehearsals to fine tune for the play, Karen Durda uses time away from the stage to get ready.

"I have a journal," she explains. "In it, I write clues to behaviors, positive and negative aspects of the play. You name it, I do it."

Durda describes drama as a "vocation," and as a hobby. "I take great pleasure in creating--and in entertaining people."

Durda graduated from UNC-W in 1981 and completed her masters at Louisiana State University. She would like to enter the teaching field, because, she says, "only two to three percent" make a good living in drama.

From birth, Clifton Daniels has never had to worry about making a living, not economically anyway. His lineage is one of grandeur. Daniels is the grandson of Harry Truman, the president of the United States. His father was managing editor of the world's most acclaimed newspaper, The New York Times.

In an admirable way, Daniels has resisted the easy life--maybe to the point that he still isn't quite sure where his place should be. Being born into the limelight can burden a youth with unfair expectations. Daniels attended the best schools, once sitting in the same class as Walter Kronkite's son. Later, he attended his dad's alma mater, Chapel Hill, and "partied five nights a week for two years." He never graduated.

Daniels' lifestyle is one that hinges on two distinct creative disciplines. He is a reporter for the Wilmington Morning Star News by day, and an actor by night. In a few weeks, he will appear in "The Cactus Flower", a play starring Joe Namath.

Regardless of future pursuits, Daniels is trying to build a name for himself, one free of his middle name--Truman.

"EXPERIENCED PROFESSIONALS IN COLLEGE TOURS"

Dear Egbert?

Dear Egbert,

I am having a problem with a girl in one of my classes. I don't really know her and every day she sits down and starts revealing all of her deep, dark, secret problems to me. I don't know what to do or say because I feel like it's none of my business. I can understand asking for advice but she gets into personal problems. What do I say to her?

Signed-No comment

Dear Comment,

The best thing to do would be to ask her if she has anyone she can talk to about her problems. Ask her if she talks to anyone else other than you. If not, and you think the problems are serious enough, recommend a counselor. If she persists in revealing her problems, tell her that it makes you uncomfortable. Most importantly, guide her to other resources and help her understand that it is not her personality that you are rejecting.

Dear Egbert,

I hope that you can help me. My problem is that this guy I was introduced to by a mutual friend has started calling me and asking me out. The problem is that I am not interested in him. He's really a nice guy and I don't want to hurt his feelings. But I also don't want to go out with him! What is the best way to tell him "no"? Especially after the dozen roses he sent for Valentines Day! I really don't want to hurt his feelings but there is no easy way out.

Signed - Negative Attraction
Dear Negative,

The consensus of most guys that I have talked to is that it is better to politely refuse a date than go out with someone you don't want to go out with. This way there is no misunderstanding about your feelings (or potential feelings) for him. Excuses and avoidance were also said to be worse. The best thing to do would be to politely tell him that you are not interested but that you would like to be friends.

Note: Due to the great response rate, every letter can not be printed. I will try to answer as many letters as possible.

Submit letters to 205E Union.

OVERSEAS EMPLOYMENT

WORLD-SIDE OPPORTUNITIES FOR MEN AND WOMEN!
JAPAN - EUROPE - AFRICA - AUSTRALIA - THE SOUTH PACIFIC - SOUTH AMERICA - THE FAR EAST.
EXCELLENT BENEFITS. HIGHER SALARIES AND WAGES!
FREE TRANSPORTATION! GENEROUS VACATIONS!

More than 300,000 Americans — not including members of the armed services — are now living overseas. These people are engaged in nearly every possible activity...construction, engineering, sales, transportation, secretarial work, accounting, manufacturing, oil refining, teaching, nursing, government, etc.-etc. And many are earning $2,000 to $5,000 per month...or more!

To allow you the opportunity to apply for overseas employment, we have researched and compiled a new and exciting directory on overseas employment. Here is just a sample of what our International Employment Directory covers.

(1). Our International Employment Directory lists dozens of cruise ship companies, both on the east and west coast. You will be told what type of positions the cruise ship companies hire, such as deck hands, restaurant help, cooks, bartenders, just to name a few. You will also receive several Employment Application Forms that you may send directly to the companies you would like to work for.

(2). Firms and organizations employing all types of personnel in Australia,

Japan, Africa, The South Pacific, The Far East, South America...nearly every part of the free world!

(3). Companies and Government agencies employing personnel in nearly every occupation, from the unskilled laborer to the college trained professional man or woman.

(4). Firms and organizations engaged in foreign construction projects, manufacturing, mining, oil refining, engineering, sales, services, teaching, etc., etc.

(5). How and where to apply for overseas Government jobs.

(6). Information about summer jobs.

(7). You will receive our Employment Opportunity Digest...jam-packed with information about current job opportunities. Special sections feature news of overseas construction projects, executive positions and teaching opportunities.

90 Day Money Back Guarantee

Our International Employment Directory is sent to you with this guarantee. If for any reason you do not obtain overseas employment or you are not satisfied with the job offers...simply return our Directory within 90 days and we'll refund your money promptly...no questions asked.

Parking Situation To Be Overhauled

Amy Williams
Contributor

Every new school year students are faced with the usual problems of drop/add and finding a convenient parking space. This year though, students and faculty members alike are faced with an even bigger problem--traffic jams. These long, tedious lines occur each day at the most popular morning class hours and recently, even at the later afternoon class hours.

According to Joe Johnson, director of campus police services, the influx of traffic both from students and residents living close to the campus has brought between 7000 and 10,000 cars onto the campus daily. Add this to the fact that there are no traffic lights or enough police officers on campus to direct traffic, and this spells long lines and short tempers.

For some, this has required only minor adjustments. Julie Davis, a senior history major, "refuses to bring her car on campus anymore." For Miss Davis, this is quite an easy task, as she lives in the new student condominiums--Campus Edge.

Greg Williams, a sophomore liberal arts major, can't manage as easily. A part-time student living just outside the Wilmington city limits, Williams must brave these lines twice a week at 11:00 a.m. and again at 1:45 p.m. when his classes end for the day.

Although no formal complaints have been lodged, Chief Johnson is aware that there is indeed a traffic problem, particularly at the intersection of G Street (the street running in front of the new Student Support Center) and Reigel Road. Installation of traffic lights might possibly alleviate the problem, but Johnson quickly pointed out that a traffic survey and administrative approval would be necessary in order to install traffic lights at any spot on campus. It is possible, he later stated, that a turn lane could be installed at this intersection after the Student Support Center is completed.

However, according to Carl Dempsey, assistant to the vice chancellor for business affairs, neither turn lanes nor traffic lights have been seriously discussed by the administration because of the future plans for routing traffic around this area. In fact, G Street will be eliminated completely and Reigel Road (the road running beside Trask Coliseum) will be

Center Open To Students

Gail Niemeyer
Contributor

With the help of the Career Planning and Placement Center at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington, a college education and a career go hand in hand.

The Director of Career Planning and Placement is Sandra Harkin and the Job Service Coordinator/Assistant Director is Frank Vitale. Their office is located at the Student Union in Room 100 and business hours are from 9 a.m. until 5 p.m. They provide scheduled interviews with various company representatives, career counseling, job information, workshops and various reading materials, to help guide students toward their career goals.

Students desiring career information, need to apply for these services. They work by appointment basis only. A card file is kept on each student that applies and it is requested that you fill out personal data information sheet. Along with the personal data information, is one of two reference evaluation forms. There is a confidential form and a non-confidential form, in which either one is completed upon each student's desire.

This background information is kept on file in what is referred to as a "credentials release." Students can have these credential releases forwarded to employers or graduate of the placement director or they can personally notify the school officials at the discretion of the Career Planning and Placement office to have their credentials sent. For right now, these Placement Credentials are kept on file forever; however, should the University continue to grow, their may be a five to seven year limit due to lack of space.

The Career Planning and Placement Center offers Recruiting visits. Representatives, from various companies, interview students interested in working for their company. Students are required to sign up for interviews according to the available schedule. Frank Vitale commented that recruiters that come to our school are only interested in our students since we do not have to compete with other universities in the surrounding area.

Students who need assistance in deciding on their career should speak with one of the career counselors. They help direct you to the type of career you are pursuing by discussing with you your educational background, skills, and previous experiences. To help better prepare you for your future, they offer four different workshops concerning resumes, interviewing skills, state and federal employment and job search skills.

On the shelves in their office, students have access to different reference materials and various periodicals on vocation, background information on corporate companies, job skills, writing better resumes, etc.

The Career Planning and Placement office also provides students with job information and contacts for full or part-time jobs while attending school. Frank Vitale estimated that about 55-60 students are placed in part-time jobs per month and over 800 per year.

From your freshman year until your senior year, it is never too early to start planning your career goals and the Career Planning and Placement Center is there to help.

Business Week To Begin After Break

The third annual observance of "Business Week" at The University of North Carolina at Wilmington will be held March 11-15. During this time, the Cameron School of Business Administration is holding a number of events designed to provide students with "real world learning not found in textbooks," according to Dr. Lee Sherman, chairman of the event, whose theme is "Preparing for Tomorrow Today."

Opening business week will be the Fifth Annual Commerce Cup Challenge at 3:30 p.m., Monday, March 11, in room 112 of Bear Hall.

Originally called the Business Bowl, the Commerce Cup Challenge was patterned after the College Bowl. Teams of three or four students field questions about all areas of business--economics, finance, accounting, management, and marketing.

The purpose of the event is to give underclass students the opportunity to observe other students applying what they have learned in class as they answer the various questions. Secondly, it shows that learning can be enjoyable.

Competing this year will be teams from each of the four

On Saturday, February 2, 1985, between 3:30 a.m. and 7:58 a.m. Jeffery Scott Levy, the manager of Bennigan's Restaurant, was killed at his place of business. Mr. Levy was found in his office beside an open safe. Money had been removed from the safe. Mr. Levy was shot twice in the head with a small caliber weapon.

Anyone with information or leads in this murder is requested to call CRIME STOPPERS at 763-3888. You may be eligible for a reward up to $1,000. YOU NEED NOT GIVE YOUR NAME. ALL CALLS ARE KEPT IN COMPLETE CONFIDENCE.

On Friday, September 7, 1984 at 5:00 p.m., Fashion Flair at Long Leaf Mall was robbed at gunpoint by a lone, black male. The gunman approached the cashier and announced the hold-up. Holding a silver-colored revolver in his right hand, the gunman took the money from the cashier and fled from the store. The suspect was last seen running into the parking lot toward South College Road.

The suspect is a black male, 6-ft. tall, weighing 150 lbs., wearing dark blue work pants, a light blue shirt, and a dark blue baseball-type hat.

Anyone with information or leads should contact CRIME STOPPERS of New Hanover County at 763-3888. Citizens supplying information leading to an arrest and/or indictment in this investigation or any other crime are eligible for a reward up to $1,000. YOU DO NOT HAVE TO REVEAL YOUR NAME. All calls are kept in complete confidence.

By Bob Haywood

I'm ready for Spring. After the flu, taking on major responsibilities at home during my wife's back surgery and recuperation (which means making the kid's lunch and shopping, and all those "ooky" things we men don't like to do), I'm ready for Spring. You can have January.

In the middle of January doldrums (which included a 36 hour round trip to a family wedding in Jacksonville, Florida in 20 degree weather in a car without heat!), I saw the film "The Killing Fields". It is an incredibly good movie but it wiped me out. Once more was portrayed the grim realities of man's inhumanity to man. Focusing on Cambodia in the 70's, people took the lives of other people singly or by the thousands with little or no compunction. It was war. It is still a war where children are born only to die.

Unmitigated and undeserved suffering befalls millions of people in masses and individually. Why the innocent suffer? has been one of the bottom line struggles of humanity through the ages. Some suffering simply seems inherent in the human condition and other suffering we bring upon ourselves by our choices to make power and wealth our ultimate concern rather than love.

For some of us who experience periods or incidents in our lives that cause deep anguish and sorrow for a time, we can even discover some redemptive value in suffering as it drives us deeper into ourselves or towards God. Our humanness is shaped and forged in positive ways as on the sunlit mountain peaks.

Even though we may understand something about how politics lead to the slaughter of millions and changing patterns of nature (some brought on by man's abuse of his world) does the same, none of us can accept or deal well with the reality that such suffering does not seem to be lessening and that by the simple accident of birth our future is so fraught with potential and, for so many others, there is nothing but darkness and death.

Like the Psalmist, I sometimes shake my fist at the sky in wondering Why? A strange paradox lies in the fact that even though I cannot answer the question of unmerited suffering, I still find myself driven deeper into faith rather than away from faith.

So, I am ready for Spring, the cycle of seasons that speaks of hope and new life after the winter of dark days, cold nights, and sometimes depression. Spring is no answer, but bright sunny days do seem to enliven us and make us more helpful.

extended to run behind the Student Support Center and the Behavioral Science Building, leading to six new parking areas which will replace those lots on G Street. This will, Dempsey pointed out, spell the end of traffic jams at both the Reigel and Randall Road intersections. Dempsey also indicated that roads leading away from these new parking lots would be built to accommodate traffic going to Wrightsville Beach and Castle Hayne. This would keep most of the eastward bound traffic out of the immediate campus area, and further eliminate traffic problems.

But for the immediate future,

Dempsey has suggested that students leave ten minutes earlier in order to get to their classes "jam free" and also that students should try not to drive from lot to lot between classes. Dempsey's final suggestion for students cruising through the campus at 11:50 a.m. Monday morning--"be patient, and keep looking to the future."

Teachers Rethink Career Goals

In a survey of 38 colleges, Howard R. Bowen and Jack Schuster, education professors at California's Claremont Graduate School, found the deteriorating higher education careers.

The result, they say, may be a shortage of good college teachers.

"The nagging worries and decreased job security facing professors today are persuading the brightest PhD recipients to seek employment in other fields," Bowen told participants at the recent joint convention of the American Council on Education and the National Association of State Universities and Land Grant Colleges in Denver.

While current faculties are "the best equipped for the job we've ever had," Bowen notes, "the flight of current people in higher education and of young people choosing careers will mean more education openings than can be filled."

There will be as many as 500,000 college teaching positions open in the next 25 years, Bowen says. "And the numbers could be even greater in the next 15 years if conditions in higher education continue to deteriorate."

"The academic community must begin now to compete," he adds. "Recruitment of new faculty is the most important task of higher education."

To entice top quality PhDs into higher education, colleges need to offer competitive salaries, incentives and working conditions, Bowen said in a recent telephone interview.

But slipping enrollment could wreck those offers.

"Faculty salaries are controlled by political and economic factors," he says. "Private schools depend on enrollment.

So do public schools, but they need their legislatures to offset losses."

"Most colleges are happy with the professor supply and with new recruits," Schuster adds. "But the bubble is about to burst. The application pool is thin below the top."

In addition, new surveys indicate fewer students are choosing college teaching careers.

In 1966, Schuster told the Denver convention, 1.8 percent of college grads considered teaching at the college level. By 1979, only 0.2 percent wanted to teach.

Since then the numbers have stabilized, he says, but the number of top students planning to teach continues to slip.

In the fifties, one in five college faculty members were Phi Beta Kappa. By 1969, only eight percent held the honor.

Schuster therefore concludes that while the vacant teaching positions won't go unfilled, the quality of applicants will go down.

"The losses are real," Schuster maintains, "and higher education today can't compete successfully for the best graduates who now have other options."

"If we're correct," Schuster concludes, "in 10 years we'll have a serious problem."

Closing The Gap

If you have read this section before or have just come upon it now, you may have pondered upon the title "Closing The Gap." With a clear inspection of the meaning you may discover the intent is quite obvious. SGA is trying to close the gap, which means filling it in so we can reach the students we represent.

It is a shame to think of all the potential power wasted due to a big gap in communication between SGA and the students. Which brings me to SGA, folks we aren't an entity, we are students, like everyone else. We have just sound interests in trying to help the students voice their opinions and makes the impact we can on this growing university. Yet if we don't communicate, which includes feedback from our fellow students, much of our purpose is lost.

ministrators, she adds.

In the 1979 survey, only one city reported a joint economic development program with its college. Nearly 60 percent of the surveyed cities had such projects in 1984.

"The effects of back-to-back recessions on community finances and the ef-

Oh, by the way, my name is Daniela Sullivan your sophomore class president. I tell people to talk to me whenever I can, but since I and fellow SGA members find few results forthcoming we are trying to implement new measures. This article is one of these measures. I would like to encourage you to seek out our office, our meetings, ask questions, make demands, find out what we and you as students are all about.

At this very moment you may be thinking, boy this is a boring article, or what can SGA do, or have they done for that matter. Well I'd like to share with you just a few of our recent accomplishments. Thursday, Feb. 7 we passed a resolution to allocate $32,200 to purchase a riser system so that we won't have Alabama turn us down because we don't have the needed equipment. We purchased several new typewriters for the library, so students won't have to wait in line for one typewriter at a time. We contributed to the purchase of a computerized laser printing system so the Seahawk and other organizations can print things quickly, efficiently, and with better quality, than ever before and not constantly have to worry about break-downs. We also allocated money to the purchase of residence lights behind Galloway, and residence cable. These are just a few as I mentioned, but with your help we can do even more. You'd be surprised at what a group of people are capable of if they work together.

Which brings me to a speech I gave this weekend to prospective incoming freshmen. I told them they had a great opportunity to influence the future of this university because it is young and growing. I said people are friendly and easy to meet here. I said people care, and I was proud to be here. I said all this because I believe it. That is why I keep trying. But things only happen when people work together.

Towns Tolerate Students

College students get drunk, try the patience of local police and monopolize public parking spaces, but a new survey of "town-gown" relations finds most college towns take these inconveniences in stride.

More city officials than five years ago cite alcohol and drug abuse as their worst town-gown headache.

But the survey also found many city and college officials now cooperate in solving the unique problems of small college towns.

Student alcohol and drug use was the number one campus-related problem for 74 percent of the 56 cities surveyed by Newar, Del., city planners of the National League of C.

Almost all the cities listed parking problems and off-campus housing restrictions as other major problems of hosting college students.

"These are the old standby problems in any university community because young people make up a disproportionate share of the population compared to other towns," says Nancy Minter, manager of the league's Municipal Reference Service.

In a similar 1979 survey, only 55 percent of the cities rated alcohol and drug abuse as the number one campus problem.

"The increase in cities reporting problems with alcohol may reflect the nationwide concern with drunk driving," Minter speculates. "And the raised drinking age in some states makes many students legally underage."

But the most dramatic change in the 1984 survey is the increased cooperation between city and college adfects of budget cuts on universities make for cooperation," Minter explains.

Colleges and communities are joining forces in such projects as research parks, sports arenas, street and sewer projects, buildings, mass transit, student internships, and small business research and development, she adds.

"Cities have lots of respect for universities and want to get along better," Minter stresses. "We didn't conduct the survey to draw attention to universities and students as problems, but to determine what problems municipalities face having a college in town."

Films

By Joan Travis
Movie Critic

Witness is a well-made movie about some very different people whose lives come together when a small boy sees a murder committed. Outwardly, it's the story of a police officer fighting corruption within the system to save himself and others. On that level alone, it's very exciting and intense. But there's another side to this movie as well, and it's here that the movie rises above the common "police story" flick.

The film opens with a long shot of the golden fields of Pennsylvania waving in the breezes. Slowly coming up into the picture are the black hats, the bearded faces, and the austere black suits of Amish men. The Amish community seems like a world far removed from modern civilization--they still travel in horse-drawn carriages, they don't have electricity, and they don't use telephones.

They have very strict, unwavering moral codes and they're very private and self-supporting. Into this world comes John Book (well played by Harrison Ford), a city police officer. His morals and style clash with the Amish--he sticks out like a sore thumb. When he attempts to disguise himself as one of them, he presents a very comical picture. His pants are too short, his shirt too tight--as hard as he tries to fit in, it's obvious that he can't.

That lack of compatibility is especially sad because Book has developed a loving interest in the pretty, young mother of the boy who saw the murder. It's interesting to watch the physical attraction develop. It's all very sensual--another thing that seems out of place in the Amish community; but hey, they're human too. In one scene, the woman gives the sweating Book a glass of lemonade and longingly watches as his throat and chest heave with the motions of drinking. Later, he stands peering through a partially open door as she bathes. This kind of intense sexual yearning goes on for quite awhile, culminating in the removal of her bonnet, this signifying her giving in to physical desire.

Director Peter Weir can be credited with creating a very exciting and effective film. The same country atmosphere contrasts wonderfully with the often brutal sensuous passions of human life. Now showing at New Centre Cinema.

School Kids Record Review

Bruce Springsteen's recent Born in The USA tour is an extraordinary transformation from middle-of-the-road-Joe turned rock star into mythic folk hero. Springsteen's carefully orchestrated stage show is designed to emotionally overpower an awestruck audience with a musical intensity that drains every drop of energy. Like a revivalist, Bruce works a fever pitch through an audience by summoning up the rock n' roll legends, imparting some homespun lessons from experience, and then; aw shucks! Throwing up his hands and puking up the fake promise of fame.

Baggy T-shirt, tight-ass jeans, kamikaze headband, raised guitar...Springsteen's music reveals the influences of Buddy Holly, Elvis, Little Richard, Dylan, gospel and country within a backdrop of red, white, and blue. With God and country on his side, Bruce offers just the right touch of humility to make the transformation complete. This is the big one, the one that rises above the peering billboards that surround Jersey.

The one tour that creates a legend.

America, our home! Whether

Rock Star
BRUCE SPRINGSTEEN

It's 'Darlington County,' Born in the USA, or the veterans from the Vietnam War, Springsteen's brand of rock n' roll draws from the interior structures of our heartland and then combines the visions within a personal monologue. It is these conversations which endear and cement Springsteen's image to the audience.

"I remember when I first heard Elvis," Springsteen begins. "I guess I was eight or so. I was sitting in the kitchen with my mama. We both felt it. It was like that man had so much spirit. It touched everything. He really had something special to give. Then something went wrong. I don't know what it was. Seems like when you reach your dreams something happens. It might have been the drugs or something. I don't know. Somebody like that with so much; it just don't seem fair...like he was cheated."

The power of music when it comes from the soul. It has a way of connecting. Springsteen's tour was unusual. It offered up a double-edged sword; it won hearts first, then minds. This kind of hypnotism doesn't come along every day. It's something you might read about in Ripley's Believe It Or Not---his ability to move a crowd, hold it in the palm of his hand. It can be dangerous (remember Guyana) but I believe Bruce is a decent and honorable man. Heck! It's only rock n' roll anyway.

'Remember there's some folks that haven't got trickled down to yet so give to the food bank of North Carolina.' Amen.

Business Week

campus business fraternities--Phi Beta Lambda, Sigma Alpha Beta, The American Marketing Association, and the National Association of Accountants. Moderating the event will be Dr. Arvid Anderson, associate professor of management and marketing.

On Tuesday and Wednesday, the Cameron School of Business Administration has invited 27 representatives of area and national businesses, industries, and governmental agencies to discuss aspects of their work.

The speakers will present their talks in concurrent sessions each day running from 8 a.m.-3 p.m. Tuesday, March 12 and 9 a.m.-3 p.m. Wednesday, March 13. All discussions will be in classrooms in Bear Hall.

Most day classes in the business school have been pre-empted March 12 and 13 to allow UNCW's more than 800 business majors to take part in the sessions that have been planned to cover accounting, economics, finance, management and marketing concerns.

Even though the observance is sponsored by the Cameron School of Business Administration, attendance is not limited to business majors. Other interested UNCW students are welcome to participate as are members of the public on a space available basis.

Business students must attend a minimum of one session for each business class that has been pre-empted during March 12 and 13. Members of the community who are interested in attending any of these sessions should call Mimi Cunningham at 395-3171 or Lee Sherman at 395-3514.

A cross-section of business interests is represented in the participants, including banking, retailing, shipping, manufacturing, utilities, real estate, health care, advertising, and accounting.

Among the speakers attending and their topics are: George Diab, president of Cla Broadcasting and president of the N.C. Association of Broadcasters, who will discuss "Trends in the Broadcasting Industry;" Lat Purser III, vice president and director of development for Lat Purser and Associates, "Real Estate Development;" Estelle Lee, president of Almont Shipping Company, "Shipping-The Bulk Concept;" Judy Benson, CPA, controller for the North Carolina Film Corporation, "Accounting in the Film Industry;" and Bill Farris, Wilmington city manager, "How to Manage a City."

A special luncheon for guest speakers at 11:15 a.m., Tuesday, March 12, in room 100 of the Union will feature UNCW Chancellor William Wagoner as guest speaker.

Victor Kiam, the man who liked the Remington shaver so much he bought the company, will be the keynote speaker of business week in a free lecture at 7:30 p.m., Tuesday, March 12 at Kenan Auditorium.

Thursday, March 14, has been designated Career Day at UNCW, where representatives of business, industry, and governmental agencies will be on hand to talk with students about career opportunities. This will be held from 10 a.m.-3 p.m. in room 100 of the University Union.

Brad Bruestle is coordinating the event.

Capping off the week's events will be the annual Sigma Alpha Beta honorary business-fraternity-faculty softball game at 3:30 p.m., Friday, March 15 at Emple Park. Refreshments will be served after the game.

UNC-Wilmington freshman Sissy Morse, who scored 28 points in a loss to Duke Saturday and played major roles in two Lady Seahawk wins last week, was named the ECAC South Player of the Week it was announced Sunday.

Morse, a 5-10 guard, had been averaging just over 5 points per game before last week. On Monday against William & Mary, Morse played just 16 minutes, yet scored seven points and grabbed seven rebounds, dished out an assist and blocked two shots. Thursday night Morse scored 21 points (10 of 18 from the field), got five boards, and handed out six assists as the Lady 'Hawks got their biggest win of the year, a 79-70 triumph over East Carolina, snapping a 15-game winning streak of the Lady Pirates.

Saturday, in UNCW's last regular season home game, Morse played her finest game of the season. The Rockingham native hit her first nine shots of the game en-route to a career-high 28-point performance in a 96-86 loss to Duke. Morse finished the game making 14 of 16 shots, the majority of them coming from the 15-foot range. She also had seven rebounds and an assist.

Morse hopes to keep up her hot shooting as UNCW enters its first ever ECAC South Tournament this week in Richmond, VA. The Lady 'Hawks, who finished third in the league behind East Carolina and James Madison with a 7-5 record, will play Friday at 6 p.m. against either Richmond or American.

Stroke-Stroke-Stroke at The Seahawk Invitational

Dean Buchan
Staff Writer

Two Florida schools were winners in the seventh annual Seahawk Invitational Swim Meet, a three-day meet that concluded Saturday night.

Tampa took the early lead Thursday, then cruised to victory in the 10-team men's division, winning by more than 130 points. South Florida was second, James Madison third, and the host Seahawks finished fourth.

South Florida edged James Madison in a close seven-team women's division. South Florida outscored JMU 787-771. Furman was third with 530 points, Tampa fourth at 420, and UNCW fifth with 315.

Individually for the Seahawks, freshman Don Hosier won two individual events, including the 200-yard butterfly Saturday with a winning time of 1:53.0. Teammate Mike Bitzenhofer was second at 1:53.04. Also on Saturday, Scott Stokes finished second in the 1650 freestyle.

Next on the agenda for UNCW is the Easterns. Several Seahawks will compete in this annual event March 7-9 in Cleveland, OH.

Dear Egbert?

Dear Egbert,

My problem is that I am in love with two people. I have been dating a guy at home for almost a year and we have talked very seriously about our future. Then I came to school and my thoughts have turned to another guy. We've only been out a few times but I'm starting to question my love for Joe (the guy at home.) Isn't it true that of our love was real, I wouldn't think about the other, but its getting difficult to keep it that way. Help!

Signed:

Torn between Two Lovers

at this school? I have never seen so many ignorant people in my life! If you haven't guessed I am pretty upset because I feel the people are here for a free ride and not an education! Some of the majors are so simply ridiculous! I mean, come on, recreation after four (or five or six) years of schooling?! Classes here are conducted Tuesday through Thursday (Monday is hangovers and Friday is weekend) for most of the students. Why don't these people get a grip on the real world?

Signed

Above It All

Dear Torn,

This is a decision that you must make for yourself. Just be sure that you look at each situation fully and weigh the odds. It is important to be sure if you want to break up with the guy at home--you've had a year together. Is the new guy worth it? Perhaps there's a way to compromise with both. In any case the decision must be yours so that you do not regret anything. Good luck!

Dear Egbert,

What is wrong with the people

Dear Above,

It does sound like you have put yourself on a pedestal. Perhaps you should criticize your own short comings and spend less time on other people's. Does anyone else have comments pertaining to this letter? I sure would like to hear them!

Due to the heavy volume of letters received, we can't print them all. However, keep trying!!!

Divorce Compensation For College Expenses

A new divorce law which entitles Californians to reimbursement of money spent to put their husband or wife through college promises to make education costs part of divorce settlements in other states and keep the California court system busy for some time, experts say.

The law, which went into effect January 1st, says in divorce settlements a spouse has a right to be repaid -- with interest -- for money following her divorce.

In her divorce suit, first filed in 1979, Janet Sullivan asked the court to force her husband, Mark Sullivan, to repay all money she paid for Mark's education as well as a share of his future earnings as a physician.

The court -- like the new state law -- failed to address the issue of future earnings, but did rule Janet Sullivan should be partially reimbursed for the money she invested in her husband's education.

"The California law and court ruling follow what has been happening in many court cases around the country in the last several years," notes B.J. Anderson, of the American Medical Association's (AMA) legal division.

"The majority of jurisdictions have pretty much gone the same way (as the California Supreme Court ruling)," she says, although no other states have passed laws for repaying spousal education costs.

At the same time, "California is noted for unique court rulings and legislation, and what happens there won't necessarily have any effect on the rest of the country," points out Tom Jones, executive director for the National Organization of Legal Problems in Education.

Similarly, "the California Supreme Court, because it's a state court, really has no bearing on federal law," he says. "If it were a federal district court ruling (the Sullivan case) would have much wider implications."

And while other courts are forcing divorced people to repay each others' education costs, Jones says, many courts are still ruling that such expenses are "not divisible upon divorce, and are personal to the holder."

Still, the AMA's Anderson notes, "we think (spousal reimbursement) is a good, fair system, and much more advantageous than having the physician or other professional pay 50 percent of all future earnings to a spouse."

Big Business!!!

Big business wishes higher education would get back to basics and leave specialization to the corporate classroom, a Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching study says.

While most admit they're generally happy with their employees' education's, corporations spend up to $100 billion a year to educate workers, partly because colleges spend too little time teaching communication and problem solving skills, the study notes.

"Higher education is abandoning its own mission and purpose," claims Carnegie Foundation communications director Bob Hochstein.

"It's attempting to imitate and rival corporate education when liberal learning is the core of what higher education should be about," he adds.

Corporate education has existed for decades to update employee technical skills, but company programs are "big and getting bigger" with the spread of high technology, Hochstein says.

Big business now educates millions of workers a year in courses ranging from remedial reading to nuclear physics, says study author Nell Eurich.

As a result, corporate schools must broaden their curricula to include math, reading and communication, basic skills that should be taught in college, she adds.

Students Answer the Call

The famine in Africa has inspired an unprecedented number of students to join the Peace Corps in recent weeks.

More than 12,000 prospective recruits--as many as 8,000 of them college students--have called the agency since Jan. 10th, when it launched an appeal for workers with agricultural-related skills to help combat the famine in Africa.

Nearly a month after the drive, calls are still coming in at three times the normal rate.

The interest has been so strong that the agency may meet its recruitment goal for the first time in 24 years, Peace Corps officials say.

"It's incredible what we've created," marvels press officer Ron Defore. "We're breaking all records, both for quantity and quality."

Defore acknowledges that unprecedented response is almost entirely attributable to widespread publicity in recent months of the extreme famine conditions across much of Africa.

"The most common reaction to our pitch used to be 'Gee, I didn't know the Peace Corps was still around,'" Defore recalls.

"Now it seems we've awakened the American population as a whole to the fact that the Corps is still alive. This byproduct of public awareness is going to benefit us for years to come. It may start a whole new trend."

Defore estimates that nearly 70 percent of the volunteers for the agricultural programs are college seniors.

Normally, the Corps fills only about 60 percent of the vacancies in its programs. This year, the agency is still trying to fill 600 positions for the spring and summer programs in that division in Africa.

"It's most likely we will fill them all," Defore says. Moreover, Defore says the agency may even be able to send more volunteers to its programs in South and Central America, and Asia and the Pacific.
